Former United States District Attorney J. J. Sullivan Calls Roosevelt the "Foremost Citizen of the World" and Says People Are Awaiting Taft's Return to Private Life With the Open Arms of a Hearty Welcome.

Youngstown, O., Nov. 21.—A call for the "foremost citizen of the world, Theodore Roosevelt," to bear the standard of the Republican party in the struggle for the presidency next year was voiced at the banquet of the Garfield club of the Nineteenth congressional district of Ohio.

John J. Sullivan, former United States district attorney, was the speaker who named Colonel Roosevelt for the nomination of his party. His speech was made at the club's annual celebration of the anniversary of the birth of the late President James A. Garfield, who attended congress from this district.

Concluding an arraignment of Mr. Taft as president Mr. Sullivan said:

"To the president the Republican party and the American people are now sounding in his unwilling ears the tocsin of his recall from power and are awaiting his return to private life with the open arms of a hearty welcome."

Answering his own inquiry as to who should lead the party in 1912 the speaker said:

"If I mistake not the prevailing sentiment of the masses their eyes are turning toward a faithful friend who has been tested and tried and found true, whose heart beats are in rhythm with the pulse beats of humanity everywhere—the foremost citizen of the world—Theodore Roosevelt."

An attack on the present national administration was the keynote of an address by Judge R. M. Wanamaker of Akron, read at the meeting.

"Think," said Judge Wanamaker, "of a great national administration in this, the Twentieth century, gathering to its arms and having as its chief defenders the Knoxes, Wickershams, Wilsons, Ballingers, Lorimers and McCabes, who were simply the stool pigeons of the special interests.

"Popular government never was on trial like it is today. Progressive Republicans demand that political power be placed back in the hands of the people; and if it be not returned through the Republican or Democratic party the new party of Socialism will return not only that political power but very largely private and corporate property to the hands of the people."

NOT OUT FOR THIRD TERM

Senator Crawford Says Roosevelt Favors La Follette.

Detroit, Nov. 21.—That Theodore Roosevelt is not out for another term and is not a "stool pigeon for Morgan," as reported in New York, but in reality has broken with President Taft and his policies in favor of La Follette, were statements made here in an interview by Senator Coe I. Crawford of South Dakota, who began a week's speaking tour in Michigan in the interests of the La Follette presidential campaign.

The statements came in answer to a question whether the senator knew anything about the report that the former president had privately assured leaders of the progressive movement that he was for La Follette instead of being out for another nomination for himself.

TRUST ASKS FOR REHEARING

Harvester Company Petitions Missouri Supreme Court.

Jefferson City, Mo., Nov. 21.—Quoting Theodore Roosevelt's recent declaration for a "square deal" for both the corporations and the public the International Harvester company filed in the supreme court of Missouri a motion for a rehearing in the recent case in which it was conditionally ousted from the state and fined $50,000 on charge of violating the state anti-trust law. The gist of the motion is that the Harvester company ought not to be punished for the mere possession of power. It announced its "intention of vigorously resisting the fine."

JOHNSON FOR LA FOLLETTE

California Executive Demands People Name Choice for President.

Sacramento, Cal., Nov. 21.—Governor Johnson in a formal statement came out squarely for La Follette for president and a direct presidential primary. Declaring that while a "joker" in the primary law of 1909 gave the party in power full right to send a solid delegation for La Follette the governor indicated that he was sacrificing politics to principle and would insist that the people be given the right to name first hand their choice for president.

The execution began at 5:28 and lasted only twenty-three minutes.

It was the first triple electrocution at Sing Sing since the electric current superseded the gallows in New York state. Twenty years ago four murderers paid the death penalty at one time by hanging.

ARTICLE CAUSES POLITICAL STIR

Colonel Roosevelt Attacks Taft's Trust Policies.

MAY MARK PARTING OF WAYS

General Belief Is That Breach Between President and Predecessor Cannot Be Healed.

Washington, Nov. 17.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's attack on President Taft's trust policies was taken here as marking the parting of the ways between the former president and his chosen successor. For months it has been apparent that Roosevelt was not in sympathy with the Taft administration and an open declaration has been expected. Following the filing of the steel trust suit, in which Mr. Taft aimed an indirect blow at Roosevelt, it was predicted that the colonel would strike back.

The breach opened cannot be closed, according to general belief, before convention time and many who have doubted whether Roosevelt would oppose the renomination of Mr. Taft took the statement as conclusive evidence of his attitude. The Taft men were silent, declining to comment, but the Roosevelt article caused a sensation in political circles generally.

The political phase of the attack was much commented on here. The article is looked on as marking a complete break between Roosevelt and Taft. Coming on the heels of the attack on the arbitration treaties it can scarcely fail to stir up resentment at the White House.

It is looked on in some quarters here as a step on the part of Roosevelt to "square" himself with big financial interests and thus to play for their support in 1912. Progressive Republican leaders are pleased with it, as they consider it will weaken Mr. Taft among the devoted adherents of Roosevelt.

URGES CONTROL BY BUREAU

Roosevelt Discusses Methods of Regulating Trusts.

New York, Nov. 17.—Recent litigation and legislation to regulate the trusts is discussed and a remedy to meet the present situation is suggested by Theodore Roosevelt in an editorial entitled "The Trust, the People and the Square Deal," published in the Outlook.

"The suit against the steel trust by the government," Mr. Roosevelt begins, "has brought vividly before our people the need of reducing to order our chaotic government policy as regards business."

He concludes with the following recommendation:

"The national government exercises control over interstate commerce railways and it can, in similar fashion, through an appropriate governmental body, exercise control over all industrial organizations engaged in interstate commerce. This control should be exercised, not by the courts, but by an administrative bureau or board such as the bureau of corporations or the interstate commerce commission; for the courts cannot, with advantage, permanently perform executive and administrative functions."

PROBABLY VICTIM OF PLOT

President Caceres of Santo Domingo Assassinated.

Washington, Nov. 21.—Ramon Caceres, president of Santo Domingo, was assassinated by political malcontents in San Domingo city, according to reports to the state department. No uprising has followed as yet.

Lacking further information it is presumed here that Caceres has fallen a victim to one of the characteristic Dominican plots. It is known that Caceres' administration, which has lasted four years, an almost unprecedented period in Dominican history, has very recently been disturbed by several well defined rvolutionary plots.

Paris, Nov. 21.—Sarah Bernhardt, the famous actress, is shortly to be married to Lou Telegan, a Flemish actor, twenty-six years old, who played subordinate parts in Bernhardt's company during her last American tour.

Bernhardt, in her "memoirs," says she was born of Jewish parentage in Paris at 265 Rue St. Honore, Oct. 22, 1844, but in her infancy was baptized as a Roman Catholic.

The famous actress is a grandmother. Two years ago Mlle. Simone Maurice Bernhardt, the daughter of her son Maurice, married Edgar Gros of Paris. Her son Maurice is forty-six years old.

DECISION AGAINST THE BEEF BARONS

Judge Kohlsaat Dismisses Writ of Habeas Corpus.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—The government won another move in its fight to bring to trial nine indicted Chicago meat packers when Judge Kohlsaat in the United States circuit court quashed a writ of habeas corpus issued several days ago.

Judge Kohlsaat held that the circuit court had no power to issue a writ except in extraordinary circumstances and that in the present case it was without the right. "To do so," he said in his decision, "would be an attempt to review the finding of the United States district court. The order of the court will be to quash the writ, remand the defendants for trial and surrender them to their sureties."

Levy Mayer, counsel for the packers, prayed an appeal to the supreme court.

"We pray an appeal and ask your honor to fix the amount of bail," he said.

"Under the law," said Attorney Sheean, government counsel, "when a writ of habeas corpus is denied it is specifically provided that the respondents be remanded."

"Your honor's order to remand is void," said Mr. Mayer. "We shall find, unless care be taken, this question will be so snarled that there can be no adjudication."

After hearing arguments from the packers' attorneys Judge Kohlsaat refused to interfere. The packers gave notice of appeal.

Chinese Officials Confirm Killing of Foreigners and Manchus.

LEGAT[illegible]

[illegible] con[illegible] foreig[illegible] occurred [illegible] lieve that the report will prove true.

There were forty foreigners in Sianfu and many missionaries in the smaller Shensi towns.

Only Chinese reports have been received regarding the massacre. There has been no telegraphic or postal communication with Sianfu for more than three weeks.

The Swedish missionaries, Messrs. Sandberg and Erickson, arrived here from Tientsin. They said a telegram had been received from Sianfu, before their departure from Southern Shensi, telling of the murder of Mrs. Beckman, a schoolmistress, and five foreign children.

Many Chinese girls in Miss Beckingsale's school, who were mistaken for Manchus because of their big feet, were reported to have been murdered. A German, Philip Maennes, who is in the Chinese postal service, was among others killed.

Province Strongly Anti-Foreign.

Messrs. Sandberg and Erickson say that a magistrate in their town offered them $400 each to leave the province. Shensi probably is the most antiforeign province in China proper, not having received a lesson at the hands of the foreign troops in 1900.

At Sianfu, a city of nearly a million inhabitants, the English Baptists have two stations with six men and seven women missionaries. Also there is in the city the Society of the Brethren, an English organization, with two men and three women missionaries. The Young Men's Christian association is the only American institution which has workers in the local field of Sianfu.

The legations have taken no action, but they have the reported killing of foreigners under consideration. Without a strong invading force, however, nothing can be accomplished beyond the reach of the Yangtse gunboats. Most of the legations advised their countrymen in the interior to escape three weeks since. Many disobeyed, believing they were in no danger, though some of the women and children were sent to the coast.

PARCELS POST CONDEMNED

Transmississippi Congress Opposed to the Plan.

Kansas City, Nov. 19.—After selecting Salt Lake City as the meeting place for 1912 and Kansas City as official headquarters, the twenty-second annual session of the Transmississippi Commercial congress adjourned.

The resolution declaring that the congress was against the enactment of any parcels post law, which was adopted, provoked long and at times acrimonious discussion.

The congress did not openly endorse the plan of the national monetary commission to change the currency and banking system of the country, but the resolution adopted stated that the plan "may be a step in the right direction." It was recommended that the plan be given careful and conservative consideration.

Thompson, Socialist, for their alleged failure to do their duty in making up the 1912 tax roll.

Mayor Seidel recently notified the city council, which is controlled by Socialists, that Tax Commissioner Schutz, state Democratic chairman, had undertaxed the property of the rich and overtaxed that of the working men. Schutz immediately retorted that the mayor and city clerk had, as members of the board of review, been derelict in their duty in not correcting these errors when they sat on the board of review with him.

TELLS HOW TEN MEN PUT ON COAT OF TAR

Witness Describes Abuse of Kansas Schoolteacher.

Lincoln Center, Kan., Nov. 21.—Chester Anderson, a laborer of Beverly, this county, related to a jury the startling story of how ten men of Lincoln county dragged Miss Mary Chamberlain from a buggy near Twelve-Mile schoolhouse and administered a coat of tar to her naked body. The witness was implicated in the attack on the schoolteacher.

Under cross-examination Anderson admitted that he had never heard any gossip against Miss Chamberlain and said his part in the crime followed a talk at Clark's mill the day of the "party," when "Sheriff Clark or Mr Simms asked me if I would take Mary Chamberlain out that night; that they wanted to tar her. I said no."

Anderson told of how he had arranged with Edward Ricord to take the girl for a buggy ride and of going back to Clark's mill to notify the "gang." The night of the tarring Anderson and Delbert Kindelsparger drove to the scene in a buggy while other members of the mob came on motorcycles.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

WALL STREET IS ALARMED

Increasing Strength of LaFollete Creates Much Anxiety.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 23.—Wall Street is alarmed at the remarkable strength of the movement to nominate Senator LaFollette for the Presidency. It is likewise alarmed at the growing weakness of President Taft. Big business has determined that Senator LaFollette must not be nominated, and it has reached the conclusion that President Taft must not be nominated. It is therefore preparing to bring out a candidate to displace the President.

Such, in brief, is the startling information contained in a statement sent to the Progressive Republican Campaign Committee in Washington by John D. Fackler, of Cleveland, who is in charge of the Progressive campaign in Ohio. The fact that Wall Street is determined to defeat Senator LaFollete at all costs is the best illustration of his remarkable strength throughout the country, a strength which is being demonstrated every time a newspaper takes a poll.

Mr. Fackler's statement, which is self-explanatory, says:

"Last Thursday afternoon, a prominent Republican, who had heretofore held aloof from the Progressive Republican movement, called at my office and offered his support, declaring his willingness to aggressively aid the policies for which the movement stands.

"Saturday evening, this same Republican, in a state of great excitement called again and stated that it had become impossible for him to identify himself with the movement; that he was under large personal obligations to Myron T. Herrick, and that Herrick had called to see him and had made a personal demand that he reverse his decision to become a Progressive Republican.

"This gentleman (whose name, out of personal consideration, I shall not divulge, unless Mr. Herrick's attitude hereafter makes it necessary) declared that Herrick said that Wall Street recognized the impossibility of nominating Taft, but that it was unalterably opposed to the Progressive Republican movement, and especially to LaFollette; that Herrick named a probable candidate in place of Taft upon whom the business interests would probably unite, for the purpose of defeating LaFollette, a man high in the councils of the Republican party. By reason of the harm which it might do, the man whom Herrick named as the probable candidate of Wall Street, I shall withhold his name as well as the name of my informant, unless Herrick demands that I name them.

"At some time during the campaign I shall show the public the exceedingly interesting connection between local politics, Myron T. Herrick of the National Carbon Company, and the Carbon Schedule in the Payne-Aldrich Tariff law.

"This fight is the People's fight against the System. The issue is clear cut and well defined: 'Shall the people control big business or shall big business control the people throughout the control of the Government.'"

That Wall Street has not misjudged the strength of the sentiment in favor of Senator LaFollette is shown conclusively in two newspaper polls taken recently in Iowa and Oregon. In Oregon, the poll, taken by the Portland Journal, was state wide. Senator LaFollette received 301 votes from Republican voters responding, and 52 from Democratic voters, making his total 382 out of 607 who voted for a Republican candidate. Colonel Roosevelt received 163 votes, and President received only 55 votes, one-twelfth of the total votes cast and less than one-sixth as many as LaFollette.

In Story County, Iowa, 139 voters responded to a poll taken by the Nevada Representative, with the following result:

For LaFollette, 94; for Taft, 35; not for either, 10.

It is now up to the chairman of the several Republican State Committees to decide whether the Republican voters of the country are to be given an opportunity to express their choice for a presidential candidate. The issue is clearly and squarely presented to them in a letter sent to each chairman by Walter L. Houser, chairman of the Progressive Republican Campaign Committee.

Omund Bjorguson Says "Never Again

Omund Bjorguson, under the influence of something stronger than water, left here Saturday afternoon with his team and sleigh bound for his home four miles east of Erie. When he got four miles from town, his team decided to take a cut-off used by the Germantown mail-carrier, Duchamp. In taking the turn off the road the sleigh struck a bump and Mr. Bjorguson landed in a snow drift, where he slept peacefully for one and one-half hours until roused by Duchamp on his return trip late Saturday afternoon. The team ran on and finally landed in a ditch, where they remained unable to get out without assistance.

Duchamp, together with Miss Parker who was on her way to Minneapolis, having come from her homestead near Grygla, found the horses stuck in the ditch and later on saw Bjorguson's feet and hands sticking out of a snow-drift. Miss Parker suggested that they summon the coroner, but Duchamp, being of an investigative turn of mind, got out and poked around in the snow, discovering that Bjorguson was breathing faintly. Miss Parker told Duchamp to in some way arouse the man from his stupor, and since the usual methods of waking people did not affect Bjorguson, they decided to use the horse whip on him. This strenuous method finally caused the man to arise. He was taken to Hotel West, where he slept until Sunday morning, coming through the affair little the worse for wear. He looked up Duchamp and told him that he had saved his life, and to show his great appreciation thereupon presented Duchamp with three dollars in real money, and promised that he would never touch another drop.

Mr. Bjorguson is a married man and has several children. He says this experience has taught him a lesson he will never forget. Hereafter it will be the straight and narrow path for him, and a happy family at the Bjorguson home.

Another Red Cross Christmas Seal campaign is on. 30,000,000 seals were sold last year, providing the National State and Local Anti-tuberculosis Societies with about $300,000. It is estimated that the appropriation of twenty times this amount by public authorities in building hospitals, etc., was secured through the judicious use of this agitation fund as well as many nurses visiting the sick supported, and millions of people educated as to the dangers of tuberculosis.

The Minnesota Association for the Prevention & Relief of Tuberculosis has been appointed again sole agents for Minnesota. Last year the sales in Minnesota amounted to a trifle over three-quarters of a million seals. Of the proceeds of the sale the greater part went to the local associations, especially for visiting nursing work This year the aim will be to sell between one and two million seals. If two million seals were sold it would mean only one seal for each person in the State.

Last year there were 200 centers of distribution, ranging in size from the city of Minneapolis to a cross roads postoffice. This year it is planned to sell the seals in each of the 500 or so centers of population in the state and in addition to cover about one-third of the rural school districts of the state, making the school the center of distribution through the teacher. Probably 5,000 persons will be working as agents and assistants in this campaign, each one a bearer of the glad tidings that tuberculosis is preventable and curable, as well as a unit in a compact selling force that will aim to bring the seals to the attention of every person many times during the campaign and leave no stone unturned to exhaust both the educational and financial possibilities of the Red Cross Christmas Seal.

Any person not able to secure seals in his or her vicinity may send in a cash mail order for the same to the state agent at the Old Capitol, St. Paul.

Much good work has already been accomplished in this state. For example, a state sanatorium, visiting nursing appropriations from six county boards, action on county hospitals by three county boards, two state laws etc. But much remains to be done, especially the covering of the state with local hospitals for tuberculosis. Every organization of any kind, whether business, social, educational, philanthropic or political is requested to take part in an organized way in this campaign and to get in touch with the local or state agent. Tuning the Furniture.

"Before a piano tuner can get good results he sometimes has to tune up the general furniture as well as the piano," said an expert tuner. "The other day I was sent for to tune a piano that had not been out of the factory six weeks. It was a fine piano, but every time I struck a note a noise like a battery of tin pans let loose sounded through the room. I worked all morning without making any improvement. Finally I examined the rest of the furniture, and pretty soon I discovered the cause of those jangling chords. A cabinet filled with old brass plates, platters and pieces of armor stood against the same wall. One leg was shorter than the others, and every time I struck the piano keys the vibrations caused a slight tipping of the cabinet and set the brass contents a-jiggling. I pointed out the uneven legs to the pianist.

"'What you want is a furniture mender, not a piano tuner,' I said.

"They got one in to add an eighth of an inch to that short leg, and the piano sounded sweet and true."—New York Sun.

Andalusian Girls.

Despite their attractions Andalusian girls only marry after very long engagements, sometimes lasting ten years. One girl who has been engaged four years has a lover who comes from a distance twice a year to see her, and yet he has never once mentioned matrimony. He lives with his mother and no doubt keeps her, for Spanish mothers have great influence over their sons. When at last a marriage takes place the bride has often to reside with her mother-in-law, to whom custom requires her to be most subservient. Extremely devoted to their own mothers, Andalusian girls are in no hurry to marry should their doing so require them to live at any distance from their old home. On the other hand, they do not appreciate having to wait ten years, but, as they say, "No hay remedio" (there is no remedy).—Seville Letter.

When Vapor Is Dry.

Mr. M. Mott-Smith points out in Science a popular misconception in the supposition that aqueous vapor and ice are wet. They are in themselves dry and become wet only when they turn to water. "So dry is aqueous vapor that it will dry any moist object that it comes in contact with." Superheated steam before it condenses is a dry gas. Ice feels wet if the temperature of the hand is sufficient to melt it. As ice it is dry. Another misconception is that the air can be either moist or dry. It is condensed aqueous vapor in the air that is moist, and it would be moist if there were no air. A given quantity of aqueous vapor confined in a given space will be wet or dry according to the temperature. At 32 degrees, for instance, it might be partially condensed and consequently wet, while at 70 degrees, owing to expansion, it would be dry.

Bear Lake's Black Bass.

"The only black bass water I know of where the black bass are really black," said a man who makes fishing tackle and tries it out on waters almost everywhere, "is Bear lake, in the western corner of New York. It lies high among the hills of Chautauqua county, near the Pennsylvania line. It has no inlet and no visible outlet. A peculiarity of Bear lake is that it has no shallows. There is no gradual slope from its shores into deep water, but they pitch off at angles so acute as to be almost perpendicular, giving the impression that the water of the lake fills an immense pit of great depth. The lake is almost round and only a mile in diameter. Owing to its odd formation and unusual depth, Bear lake has the appearance of a vast pool of black ink. In these depths are black bass which are said to be natural to that water, plentiful, large and full of

A MOCK MARRIAGE

By R. D. CHATSWORTH

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Though twenty-seven is young for a man, he feels at that age usually the first tinge of ennui at his bachelorhood. The first freshness of youth has gone out of him, and a vision of a home enlivened by wife and children looms up before him.

Walter Nixon had reached this age, or, rather, in his case, it was standing between the period of thoughtless youth and thoughtful middle age. One day he was skylarking with a lot of young men and women when some one proposed that they should have a mock wedding.

"I'll be the bride," said Jaqueline Woodruff, a girl who was always first and foremost in any prank.

"And I'll be the groom," said Walter gallantly since he was standing beside her at the moment, and all eyes were turned upon him.

Few young people realize that it is dangerous to trifle with a wedding, but it is.

So Walter Nixon and Jaqueline Woodruff stood up. One of the young men of the party asked if they would take each other for husband and wife. Walter took a seal ring off his finger and put it on that of Jaqueline, the man who was officiating pronounced them man and wife, and amid many jokes and much laughter, they received congratulations from the others. No one considered it anything more than an escapade, and when a new amusement was proposed the spectators forgot all about the first.

A few days later Miss Woodruff, on opening her mail, read a note from Walter Nixon, beginning "My dear wife." It contained an invitation to the theater and several facetious remarks as to her duty toward the writer as her husband. It was all very funny, and somehow it sounded rather pleasant. She was of a marriageable age and since she was twenty-two years old thought it high time she should be married. Nixon was a good fellow, able to support a wife and generally acceptable. Jaqueline did not know how much of joke and how much of earnest there was in his letter, but she felt at liberty to reply in kind. So she began her letter "My dear husband" and signed it "Your loving wife."

Soon after this Nixon was telling Cummings, a lawyer friend, about "the joke," as he called it. Cummings looked a trifle serious, whereupon Nixon asked him if he thought anything of import could come of it.

"The lady," replied the lawyer, "if she were disposed to claim you as her husband, might make it very unpleasant for you."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Nixon.

"You have addressed her as 'My dear wife,' which is pretty good evidence in law that you have married her. Suppose she says she considered the marriage a contract. What are you going to do about it with your letter in her hands?"

"By Jove! I never thought of that. What shall I do?"

"The only thing you can do is to get your letter and destroy it."

"I'll do it at once."

That evening Nixon called on Miss Woodruff for the express purpose of returning her letter and getting possession of his own. She was in a very becoming costume and smiled on him pleasantly.

"I'm glad you've come, dear," she said, with a twinkle in her eye. "I've been in an agony for fear you had met with some accident. How could you remain so long away from me?"

How pleasant that sounded! Though the words were in fun, he thought he would like to hear more of their kind. He would keep up the pleasantry for awhile before mentioning the matter of the exchange of letters. So he said something to her that he considered proper for a husband to say to a wife, forgetting that it was more appropriate for a lover, and it was all so funny that they kept it up for some time Before departing he said:

"My friend Cummings says that if you really choose to claim me—I mean if I really choose to claim you for my wife—I might put you to a lot of trouble."

"What trouble?"

"Well, I might insist that our marriage was serious."

"Well?"

"And you might"— He stopped.

"Put you to a lot of trouble." She looked down on the floor, apparently much pained.

"Not that. You might"—

"Might what?"

Her voice trembled a little.

"Oh, I can't get it out. Don't feel hurt. I didn't mean to say anything I should be sorry for—that is, nothing you should be sorry to hear. I'm awfully ashamed. There's nothing to cry about."

There seemed to be an irresistible attraction in the girl's waist for the man's arm and an equally irresistible attraction in the man's shoulder for the girl's head. There were a few incoherent murmurings, and the cart was harnessed before the horse. In other words, their wedding had preceded the engagement.

Their friends declared that there was no need of another marriage, for they had intended to be married by the first, but the bride bridled at such an accusation and insisted on a large and splendid wedding.

Saving Money.

"My dear we can't go on in this way. You simply must find some way to cut down your household expenses."

"I've been cutting them down right along. Twice last week I refrained from ordering celery, and on Thursday I telephoned to my dressmaker, saving 10 cents car fare that would have been wasted if I had gone to try on my new gown, which wasn't ready. So you see I'm doing my best. But you can't expect me to do all the economizing. What are you doing to reduce your expenses?"

"Me? Great heavens! How can you ask such a thing? I saved $600 last week."

"Six hundred dollars! Why, George you haven't got $600 to save."

"I know it, but I saved it all the same. A friend of mine who claimed to have inside information concerning stocks gave me a pointer, and if I had borrowed $600 and done as he advised I'd have lost every cent of it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Classic Central New York.

Here in central New York we have our own peculiar problem. Some one with a devout admiration for the classics got in his work when the business of christening was going on in these parts. Authorities are in dispute as to who this person was. We shall not enter into that controversy, but merely call attention to the fact that in a county containing Apulia, Borodino, Camillus, Cicero, Delphi, Fabius, Manlius, Mycenae, Marcellus, Navarino Pompey, Tully and Syracuse, to say nothing of Joshua and Jordan, there devolves upon the resident citizenship an obligation to use such pronunciation as shall honor the classic heroes and localities so carefully remembered by the pioneers. We have heard Apulia pronounced Apyocolye by the unthinking, and, on the other hand, that honored Scriptural name Joshua is now infrequently stretched into Joshaway, which overdoes it in the other direction.—Syracuse Post-Standard.

A Lawyer's Apology.

Many years ago there was an old judge on the bench in Berks county whose decisions, in consequence of numerous reversals, did not always command universal respect. One day in a case in which he was sitting one of the lawyers lost patience at his inability to see things in a certain light and in the heat of the moment remarked that the intellect of the court was so dark a flash of lightning could not penetrate it. For this contempt the judge showed a disposition to be very severe with the offender, and it was only after much persuasion by friends of the latter that he yielded and decided to accept a public apology. The following day the lawyer accordingly appeared before his honor and made amends by saying:

"I regret very much that I said the intellect of the court was so dark lightning could not penetrate it. I guess I could. It is a very penetrating thing."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Carved Cherry Stone.

Dr. Peter Oliver, who lived in England during the early part of the eighteenth century, tells of seeing a carved cherry stone which would be a wonder even in this age of fine tools and fine workmanship. The stone was one from a common cherry, and upon it were carved the heads of 124 popes, kings, queens, emperors, saints, etc. Small as they must necessarily have been, it is announced on the authority of Professor Oliver that with a good glass the heads of the popes and kings could readily be distinguished from those of the queens and saints by their miters and crowns. The gentleman who brought this little wonder to England purchased it in Prussia, allowing the original owner £5,000 for his treasure. Think of it—$25,000 for a cherry seed!

Jewels on an Idol.

The jewels of an Indian idol must be worth stealing if many of those remarkably hideous images possess such valuable head ornaments as one made for the idol Parthasathy, in the Triplicane temple at Madras. The ornament is worth some 50,000 rupees and is made of sovereign gold studded with diamonds, emeralds and rubies, the largest emerald being valued at 1,000 rupees and the biggest ruby and diamond at 300 rupees apiece.

The Money Power.

Braggs—It is positively absurd to talk about a "money power" in this country. There is no such thing. Waggs—I'd just like to discuss that with you. Have you got a minute to spare? Braggs—Not a minute. I've got a note due at the bank, and they're bothering me to death about it.—Life.

The Value of a Secret.

"I'm sure," said an interviewer, "the public would be interested to know the secret of your success."

"Well, young man," replied the captain of industry, "the secret of my success has been my ability to keep it a secret."

Obstinacy.

There is something in obstinacy which differs from every other passion. Whenever it fails it never recovers, but either breaks like iron or crumbles away like a decayed arch.

Went Too Far.

An unsuccessful lover was asked by what means he had lost the object of his affections.

"Alas," he said, "I flattered her till she got too proud to speak to me."

Cheerfulness keeps up a kind of sunshine in the soul and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity.

HOW A FEUD AROSE

By EVAN CAMERON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Quarrels are like fires. First there is a spark, then a tiny flame, then a snapping, then a blazing fire, then a roaring conflagration. And the worst kind of quarrels are those between friends.

Two pioneers, Daniel Simpson and Henry Underwood, emigrated with their families to the far west and entered land owned by the government. They had been schoolmates and owned farms side by side. There was no occasion for a dispute to arise between them so long as they remained in the east, for their boundaries had been surveyed and fixed generations ago, and, being well fenced, the stock of neither could trespass upon the other's premises. Therefore their affection for each other grew stronger, and the families were further bound together by an engagement between Eliza Simpson and Frank Underwood, the oldest daughter of the one and oldest son of the other.

The two friends each entered a quarter section of land, the two farms being side by side. Simpson's land was more largely covered with timber than Underwood's, and this fact became a wedge between them. A railroad soon after their settlement on the land was projected to run alongside their property, and it became at once apparent that the timber would be valuable for ties. As soon as this was learned Underwood became interested in his boundary line covering as much of a wood as it could be stretched to cover, living on the line between the two properties.

One morning Simpson went out toward his friend's property and found Underwood driving stakes on what he considered to be his own land. He protested, and Underwood declared that that was the dividing line and he was intending to begin the next morning to fell trees in order to be ready to supply the railroad with ties as soon as there was need. Simpson declared that every tree he cut beyond a certain point would be robbery. Then Underwood called Simpson a pig and the fight was on.

The next morning the ex-friends met on the line of dispute, each having an ax with which to fell timber, and before the day was over instead of felling trees they felled each other. Neither coming home to supper, their respective families went out to look for them and found their dead bodies, the skulls of both being cloven.

The trouble threw a gloom over both families. It was especially deplorable on account of the engagement of the two young people. Frank Underwood, in order that there might be no more trouble, sent to the county seat for a surveyor, who fixed the boundary. It turned out that neither his father nor his father's friend was right, the true boundry being a diagonal line with the one about which they contended.

Nor was this all that was mistaken in the matter. The disputants had not long been buried when the railroad to whose contractors they had expected to sell so many ties was discovered to be running the line several miles away from the property of either and through its own timberland.

One night when Eliza Simpson was sleeping at home she was awakened by the sound of axes being driven into the trunks of trees. The sound seemed to her to come from the direction of the boundary line. She sat up in bed and listened. The ax men were apparently vying with each other, each striving to strike more rapidly. Eliza got up and went into her mother's room to awaken her, but by the time she had succeeded in doing so the sound had ceased.

The next morning when she had told of what she had heard all considered that she had been dreaming. Nevertheless she declared that she had heard the axes distinctly, the sounds coming from a point between the Simpsons' and the Underwoods' dwellings. When she told her lover about it he declared that if any such sounds had existed he would have heard them more readily than his fiancee, since the Underwood house was nearer the line on which the timber bordered than the Simpsons'. Eliza, who was positive as to what she had heard, gave him a sharp reply, and he left her in anger.

Eliza Simpson heard again the sounds of axes on the boundary line. Since the double murder of the heads of the two families the conditions had been embarrassing, and the day after Eliza's having heard the mysterious ax men again Mrs. Simpson went to Mrs. Underwood and told of the occurrence. Mrs. Underwood had been under a strain ever since the catastrophe and upon Mrs. Simpson's visit lost her self control completely, declaring that she believed Simpson had murdered her husband, who acted simply in self defense.

The families of the men who had killed each other now came to open warfare. The match between Eliza and Frank was broken off, and no one of the Simpsons spoke to an Underwood. The members of the younger generation were becoming men and women, and the generation after them inherited the quarrel. As the families multiplied the feud spread. A clergyman, preaching on the matter to the third generation, declared that he believed the two murderers had continued their quarrel as spirits, and Satan had made their axes audible in order to transfer their quarrel to mortals.

Increasing Strength of LaFollete Creates Much Anxiety.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 23.—Wall Street is alarmed at the remarkable strength of the movement to nominate Senator LaFollette for the Presidency. It is likewise alarmed at the growing weakness of President Taft. Big business has determined that Senator LaFollette must not be nominated, and it has reached the conclusion that President Taft must not be nominated. It is therefore preparing to bring out a candidate to displace the President.

Such, in brief, is the startling information contained in a statement sent to the Progressive Republican Campaign Committee in Washington by John D. Fackler, of Cleveland, who is in charge of the Progressive campaign in Ohio. The fact that Wall Street is determined to defeat Senator LaFollete at all costs is the best illustration of his remarkable strength throughout the country, a strength which is being demonstrated every time a newspaper takes a poll.

Mr. Fackler's statement, which is self-explanatory, says:

"Last Thursday afternoon, a prominent Republican, who had heretofore held aloof from the Progressive Republican movement, called at my office and offered his support, declaring his willingness to aggressively aid the policies for which the movement stands.

"Saturday evening, this same Republican, in a state of great excitement called again and stated that it had become impossible for him to identify himself with the movement; that he was under large personal obligations to Myron T. Herrick, and that Herrick had called to see him and had made a personal demand that he reverse his decision to become a Progressive Republican.

"This gentleman (whose name, out of personal consideration, I shall not divulge, unless Mr. Herrick's attitude hereafter makes it necessary) declared that Herrick said that Wall Street recognized the impossibility of nominating Taft, but that it was unalterably opposed to the Progressive Republican movement, and especially to LaFollette; that Herrick named a probable candidate in place of Taft upon whom the business interests would probably unite, for the purpose of defeating LaFollette, a man high in the councils of the Republican party. By reason of the harm which it might do, the man whom Herrick named as the probable candidate of Wall Street, I shall withhold his name as well as the name of my informant, unless Herrick demands that I name them.

"At some time during the campaign I shall show the public the exceedingly interesting connection between local politics, Myron T. Herrick of the National Carbon Company, and the Carbon Schedule in the Payne-Aldrich Tariff law.

"This fight is the People's fight against the System. The issue is clear cut and well defined: 'Shall the people control big business or shall big business control the people throughout the control of the Government.'"

That Wall Street has not misjudged the strength of the sentiment in favor of Senator LaFollette is shown conclusively in two newspaper polls taken recently in Iowa and Oregon. In Oregon, the poll, taken by the Portland Journal, was state wide. Senator LaFollette received 301 votes from Republican voters responding, and 52 from Democratic voters, making his total 353 out of 607 who voted for a Republican candidate. Colonel Roosevelt received 163 votes and President received only 55 votes, one-twelfth of the total votes cast and less than one-sixth as many as LaFollette.

In Story County, Iowa, 139 voters responded to a poll taken by the [illegible] vade Representative, with the following result:

For LaFollette, 94; for Taft, 35; not for either, 10.

It is now up to the chairman of the several Republican State Committees to decide whether the Republican voters of the country are to be given an opportunity to express their choice for a presidential candidate. The issue is clearly and squarely presented to them in a letter sent to each chairman by Walter L. Houser, chairman of the Progressive Republican Campaign Committee.

A few days later Miss Woodruff, on opening her mail, read a note from Walter Nixon, beginning, "My dear wife." It contained an invitation to the theater and several facetious remarks as to her duty toward the writer as her husband. It was all very funny, and somehow it sounded rather pleasant. She was of a marriageable age and since she was twenty-two years old thought it high time she should be married. Nixon was a good fellow, able to support a wife and generally acceptable. Jaqueline did not know how much of joke and how much of earnest there was in his letter, but she felt at liberty to reply in kind. So she began her letter "My dear husband" and signed it "Your loving wife."

Soon after this Nixon was telling Cummings, a lawyer friend, about "the joke," as he called it. Cummings looked a trifle serious, whereupon Nixon asked him if he thought anything of import could come of it.

"The lady," replied the lawyer, "if she were disposed to claim you as her husband, might make it very unpleasant for you."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Nixon.

"You have addressed her as 'My dear wife,' which is pretty good evidence in law that you have married her. Suppose she says she considered the marriage a contract. What are you going to do about it with your letter in her hands?"

"By Jove! I never thought of that. What shall I do?"

"The only thing you can do is to get your letter and destroy it."

"I'll do it at once."

That evening Nixon called on Miss Woodruff for the express purpose of returning her letter and getting possession of his own. She was in a very becoming costume and smiled on him pleasantly.

"I'm glad you've come, dear," she said, with a twinkle in her eye. "I've been in an agony for fear you had met with some accident. How could you remain so long away from me?"

How pleasant that sounded! Though the words were in fun, he thought he would like to hear more of their kind. He would keep up the pleasantry for awhile before mentioning the matter of the exchange of letters. So he said something to her that he considered proper for a husband to say to a wife, forgetting that it was more appropriate for a lover, and it was all so funny that they kept it up for some time. Before departing he said:

"My friend Cummings says that if you really choose to claim me—I mean if I really choose to claim you for my wife—I might put you to a lot of trouble."

"What trouble?"

"Well, I might insist that our marriage was serious."

"Well?"

"And you might"— He stopped.

"Put you to a lot of trouble." She looked down on the floor, apparently much pained.

"Not that. You might"—

"Might what?"

Her voice trembled a little.

"Oh, I can't get it out. Don't feel hurt. I didn't mean to say anything I should be sorry for—that is, nothing you should be sorry to hear. I'm awfully ashamed. There's nothing to cry about."

There seemed to be an irresistible attraction in the girl's waist for the man's arm and an equally irresistible attraction in the man's shoulder for the girl's head. There were a few incoherent murmurings, and the cart was harnessed before the horse. In other words, their wedding had preceded the engagement.

Saving Money.

"My dear, we can't go on in this way. You simply must find some way to cut down your household expenses."

"I've been cutting them down right along. Twice last week I refrained from ordering celery, and on Thursday I telephoned to my dressmaker, saving 10 cents car fare that would have been wasted if I had gone to try on my new gown, which wasn't ready. So you see I'm doing my best. But you can't expect me to do all the economizing. What are you doing to reduce your expenses?"

"Me? Great heavens! How can you ask such a thing? I saved $600 last week."

"Six hundred dollars! Why, George you haven't got $600 to save."

"I know it, but I saved it all the same. A friend of mine who claimed to have inside information concerning stocks gave me a pointer, and if I had borrowed $600 and done as he advised I'd have lost every cent of it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Classic Central New York.

Here in central New York we have our own peculiar problem. Some one with a devout admiration for the classics got in his work when the business of christening was going on in these parts. Authorities are in dispute as to who this person was. We shall not enter into that controversy, but merely call attention to the fact that in a county containing Apulia, Borodino, Camillus, Cicero, Delphi, Fabius, Manlius, Mycenae, Marcellus, Navarino, Pompey, Tully and Syracuse, to say nothing of Joshua and Jordan, there devolves upon the resident citizenship an obligation to use such pronunciation as shall honor the classic heroes and localities so carefully remembered by the pioneers. We have heard Apulia pronounced Appyoolye by the unthinking, and, on the other hand, that honored Scriptural name Joshua is now infrequently stretched into Joshaway, which overdoes it in the other direction.—Syracuse Post-Standard.

A Lawyer's Apology.

Many years ago there was an old judge on the bench in Berks county whose decisions, in consequence of numerous reversals, did not always command universal respect. One day in a case in which he was sitting one of the lawyers lost patience at his inability to see things in a certain light and in the heat of the moment remarked that the intellect of the court was so dark a flash of lightning could not penetrate it. For this contempt the judge showed a disposition to be very severe with the offender, and it was only after much persuasion by friends of the latter that he yielded and decided to accept a public apology. The following day the lawyer accordingly appeared before his honor and made amends by saying:

"I regret very much that I said the intellect of the court was so dark lightning could not penetrate it. I guess it could. It is a very penetrating thing."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Carved Cherry Stone.

Dr. Peter Oliver, who lived in England during the early part of the eighteenth century, tells of seeing a carved cherry stone which would be a wonder even in this age of fine tools and fine workmanship. The stone was one from a common cherry, and upon it were carved the heads of 124 popes, kings, queens, emperors, saints, etc. Small as they must necessarily have been, it is announced on the authority of Professor Oliver that with a good glass the heads of the popes and kings could readily be distinguished from those of the queens and saints by their miters and crowns. The gentleman who brought this little wonder to England purchased it in Prussia, allowing the original owner £5,000 for his treasure. Think of it—$25,000 for a cherry seed!

Jewels on an Idol.

The jewels of an Indian idol must be worth stealing if many of those remarkably hideous images possess such valuable head ornaments as one made for the idol Parthasathy, in the Triplicane temple at Madras. The ornament is worth some 50,000 rupees and is made of sovereign gold studded with diamonds, emeralds and rubies, the largest emerald being valued at 1,000 rupees and the biggest ruby and diamond at 800 rupees apiece.

The Money Power.

Braggs—It is positively absurd to talk about a "money power" in this country. There is no such thing. Waggs—I'd just like to discuss that with you. Have you got a minute to spare? Braggs—Not a minute. I've got a note due at the bank, and they're bothering me to death about it.—Life.

The Value of a Secret.

"I'm sure," said an interviewer, "the public would be interested to know the secret of your success."

"Well, young man," replied the captain of industry, "the secret of my success has been my ability to keep it a secret."

Obstinacy.

There is something in obstinacy which differs from every other passion. Whenever it fails it never recovers, but either breaks like iron or crumbles away like a decayed tooth.

Went Too Far.

An unsuccessful lover was asked by what means he had lost the object of his affections.

"Alas," he said, "I flattered her until she got too proud to speak to me."

HOW A FEUD AROSE

By EVAN CAMERON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Quarrels are like fires. First there is a spark, then a tiny flame, then a snapping, then a blazing fire, then a roaring conflagration. And the worst kind of quarrels are those between friends.

Two pioneers, Daniel Simpson and Henry Underwood, emigrated with their families to the far west and entered land owned by the government. They had been schoolmates and owned farms side by side. There was no occasion for a dispute to arise between them so long as they remained in the east, for their boundaries had been surveyed and fixed generations ago, and, being well fenced, the stock of neither could trespass upon the other's premises. Therefore their affection for each other grew stronger, and the families were further bound together by an engagement between Eliza Simpson and Frank Underwood, the oldest daughter of the one and oldest son of the other.

The two friends each entered a quarter section of land, the two farms being side by side. Simpson's land was more largely covered with timber than Underwood's, and this fact became a wedge between them. A railroad soon after their settlement on the land was projected to run alongside their property, and it became at once apparent that the timber would be valuable for ties. As soon as this was learned Underwood became interested in his boundary line covering as much of a wood as it could be stretched to cover, living on the line between the two properties.

One morning Simpson went out toward his friend's property and found Underwood driving stakes on what he considered to be his own land. He protested, and Underwood declared that that was the dividing line and he was intending to begin the next morning to fell trees in order to be ready to supply the railroad with ties as soon as there was need. Simpson declared that every tree be cut beyond a certain point would be robbery. Then Underwood called Simpson a pig and the fight was on.

The next morning the ex-friends met on the line of dispute, each having an ax with which to fell timber, and before the day was over instead of felling trees they felled each other. Neither coming home to supper, their respective families went out to look for them and found their dead bodies, the skulls of both being cloven.

The trouble threw a gloom over both families. It was especially deplorable on account of the engagement of the two young people. Frank Underwood, in order that there might be no more trouble, sent to the county seat for a surveyor, who fixed the boundary. It turned out that neither his father nor his father's friend was right, the true boundry being a diagonal line with the one about which they contended.

Nor was this all that was mistaken in the matter. The disputants had not long been buried when the railroad to whose contractors they had expected to sell so many ties was discovered to be running the line several miles away from the property of either and through its own timberland.

One night when Eliza Simpson was sleeping at home she was awakened by the sound of axes being driven into the trunks of trees. The sound seemed to her to come from the direction of the boundary line. She sat up in bed and listened. The ax men were apparently vying with each other, each striving to strike more rapidly. Eliza got up and went into her mother's room to awaken her, but by the time she had succeeded in doing so the sound had ceased.

The next morning when she had told of what she had heard all considered that she had been dreaming. Nevertheless she declared that she had heard the axes distinctly, the sounds coming from a point between the Simpsons' and the Underwoods' dwellings. When she told her lover about it he declared that if any such sounds had existed he would have heard them more readily than his fiancee, since the Underwood house was nearer the line on which the timber bordered than the Simpsons'. Eliza, who was positive as to what she had heard, gave him a sharp reply, and he left her in anger.

Eliza Simpson heard again the sounds of axes on the boundary line. Since the double murder of the heads of the two families the conditions had been embarrassing, and the day after Eliza's having heard the mysterious ax men again Mrs. Simpson went to Mrs. Underwood and told of the occurrence. Mrs. Underwood had been under a strain ever since the catastrophe and upon Mrs. Simpson's visit lost her self control completely, declaring that she believed Simpson had murdered her husband, who acted simply in self defense.

The families of the men who had killed each other now came to open warfare. The match between Eliza and Frank was broken off, and no one of the Simpsons spoke to an Underwood. The members of the younger generation were becoming men and women, and the generation after them inherited the quarrel. As the families increased the feud spread. A clergyman, preaching on the matter to the third generation, declared that he believed the two murderers had continued their quarrel as spirits, and Satan had made their axes audible in order to impart their quarrel to mortals.

STATE NEWS BITS

Minor Happenings of the Week Throughout Minnesota

Minneapolis is officially recognized by the United States census bureau as having the lowest death rate of any city in her class, which means cities of 300,000 or over. With a rate of 10.7 in 1909 and 12.8 in 1910, the city made a better showing than any city of its class, and the estimated death rate for 1911, based on the statistics for the first ten months, is 11.4. St. Paul claims to be the "healthiest city," but on account of its smaller population is not considered in the same class as Minneapolis by the census bureau.

At a meeting of the city council of Two Harbors plans were accepted for a municipal coal dock that will supply fuel direct to the consumer, greatly reducing the price of coal and cutting out the middleman's profit. The Duluth and Iron Range road will join in as co-partner in the enterprise. The capacity of the dock will probably be at least 100,000 tons.

The Virginia Garden club has been organized to encourage gardening. Members of the club are requested to pledge themselves to put in and develop a small garden in their yards or on vacant lots in the city or vicinity next summer. The object of the club is to lower the cost of living in Virginia.

Harry Olson and Enith Collins, two New Duluth youths, brought down a 200-pound buck on Commonwealth avenue. They had been hunting in the vicinity of the city and had trailed a deer. They chased the animal until it reached a point in front of an office building, where they shot and killed it.

As an illustration of what can be produced on Minnesota soil with intelligent tilling, one acre of ground in the city limits of Little Falls has this year produced $3,000. The land is owned and worked by J. G. Highhous, who has for four years taken first premium on celery at the state fair.

One of the biggest sales of state land in Koochiching county was held at International Falls last week by State Auditor Iverson and Sales Manager Nelson. Three hundred persons attended and 8,575 acres of land was sold.

The contract for the construction of the Minneapolis postoffice was awarded by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Bailey to the H. N. Leighton company of Minneapolis at its bid of $565,537.

DEATHS OF THE WEEK.

Supported by a young man who had found her on the sidewalk Miss May Eaton of Minneapolis, associate principal of Stanley Hall, fifty years old, died just as she was being taken through the front door of Hill Crest hospital. Heart trouble is said to have been the cause. Miss Eaton had been connected nineteen years with Stanley Hall.

Captain Joseph Kidd, one of the best known marine surveyors on the Great Lakes, died suddenly of heart disease at Duluth. He was superintendent of the American Steel Barge works, and superintended the construction of all the "whaleback" ships ever constructed, many of which are now in Atlantic and Pacific ocean service.

F. A. Mathwig, a leading attorney of Southwestern Minnesota, is dead at Fairmont of typhoid fever after an illness of two weeks. Mr. Mathwig was a native of Minnesota, being born on a farm near Owatonna on Nov. 21, 1867. He was graduated from the law course of the University of Minnesota in 1893.

Warren C. Stetson, seventy years old, an early settler in Minneapolis and a well known Western lumberman, is dead at Seattle, his home since 1888, when he left Minneapolis. Mr. Stetson built the first government dam across the Mississippi from Hennepin Island.

The death of Francis McCauly of Owatonna, aged ninety-two, recalls a peculiar incident. A number of years ago Mr. McCauly was given up for dead, but was found to be in a trance, reviving from which he enjoyed perfect health for a long time.

Mrs. E. A. Gooch, sixty-one years old, for many years identified with philanthropic work in Minneapolis, is dead.

FARM ORCHARD AND GARDEN

Conditions found on the average farm are most favorable for egg production, and the cost per dozen has been found to be approximately 8 cents.

The champion wolfhound of Ireland, a species almost extinct, was sold the other day to a New York fancier for $7,500. He was a titled foreigner and came high.

The fellow who comes along with a proposition in which you are to make a wad without working is engaged in this very game, and it is safe to set the dog on him.

While a fifteen pound gobbler of last spring's hatch makes a fine centerpiece for the Thanksgiving table, it is hard to beat an eight or nine pound hen turkey of the same age.

Land irrigated by the several government projects produced last year $20,000,000 worth of stuff, and it is estimated that the increase in land values due to this irrigation approximates $105,000,000.

The chances of many a promising calf are often greatly decreased through lack of just the right care during the first few months. Once let a youngster get the skinny, pot belly look and it's a hard matter to get rid of it.

On American cattle markets a prime steer fetches the highest price. In England a prime heifer is most sought for local market consumption, the contention of the island butcher being that the flesh of a heifer is finer grained and that the carcass dresses with less waste.

A good housewife that the dispatches told of the other day thought her flock of chickens were afflicted with blind staggers, but a little investigation made clear the fact that they were drunk from eating some fermented crab apple sauce which she had thrown into the yard a short time before.

While rich land is necessary to the production of bumper crops of corn another condition equally important is that the land shall produce a perfect stand. On rich soils capable of producing 100 bushels of corn per acre an average of between three and four kernels seems to give a maximum yield.

Dr. Evans of Chicago, recognized as one of the best health authorities in the United States, gives from 60 to 70 degrees F. as the temperature at which the home should be kept during the winter months. In too many cases the thermometer stands above 75 degrees most of the time, a condition that greatly increases the likelihood of taking cold when the inmates of the house go outdoors.

A great point in favor of the Rural New Yorker as a potato for late field use is the remarkable trait it seems to possess of developing a crop in late summer and early fall following periods of drought calculated to discourage every growing thing. In a number of instances that have come under the writer's attention practically the entire growth of tubers of this variety was made after the middle of August.

The remarkable radish stories that have appeared frequently in many country papers are understood when it is known that this giant radish is not of home origin, but was introduced from Japan some four years ago. It is called the Sakurijama radish and sometimes attains a weight of thirty or forty pounds and the size of a water bucket. It is most edible when about half grown. The Japs often boil it as we do turnips or cabbage.

A rather interesting discussion has been started in some of the dairy papers of the country on the relative influence of the dam and sire upon the butter fat production of their female offspring. One writer contends that a cow from a low test dam follows almost invariably the low per cent tendency of her dam. If there is anything in this claim it puts in rather ridiculous light the claims that have been made in the past as to the merit of dairy sires in improving the butter capacity of their offspring.

Some idea of the age of the old world in which we live may be gathered from the fact, now pretty generally accepted by those having any knowledge of geology, that in the beginning the surface of the earth was solid rock. What we now call soil is a combination of this decomposed rock plus the decayed vegetable matter produced during thousands and thousands of years. In this interesting process of soil formation glaciers, frost, rain, sunshine and even the wind have had an important part.

For those who have had no experience with bees it is a good idea—as with a number of other enterprises—to take the work up on a modest scale. Under these conditions experience is got at a minimum cost.

In sections where beets are grown as a stock ration care should be taken to see that they are not fed after being frozen and later thawed out. Some chemical change takes place in the freezing process that develops an active poison.

It is quite important that the pupils in town and country schools should be given instruction by competent teachers. It is even more important during the time spent in the schoolroom they should have enough fresh air to properly oxidize their blood. It is uphill business trying to "lead out" the mind when the air a child breathes is laden with carbonic acid gas.

Latest estimates put the potato crop of the whole country at about 10 per cent less than that of last season, which was 340,000,000 bushels. When the drought was at its worst in mid summer the outlook for the crop was discouraging, but the rains that came after the 1st of August caused fields that gave no prospect of a crop to produce yields of from 150 to 350 bushels per acre.

It is seldom advisable to plant young fruit trees among those that are mature or to set an entirely new orchard where an old one has stood. It is more than likely that the soil of such old site will be pretty thoroughly exhausted along the line of the elements which the young trees will need in growth and fruit production. On this account a new site should be chosen whenever possible.

The Hindu, a type seldom seen in central and eastern states, is much in evidence on the Pacific slope from southern California to Puget sound, there being in the neighborhood of 10,000 of these turbaned Asiatics in the territory mentioned. The majority of them are employed in railroad construction and other contract work, but not a few find employment out on the ranches. While they have no acquaintance with agriculture they learn quickly and are willing to work for a small wage.

Because they have been wasting thousands of dollars annually in the purchase of poor seeds there has been established for the benefit of Missouri farmers in connection with the agricultural college at Columbia a seed testing laboratory in which the United States department of agriculture is co-operating. Any farmer of the state having seeds which he wants tested for either purity or germinating power can have them inspected free of charge by sending a few ounces to the seed testing laboratory.

Some experiments that have been conducted by the biological survey at Washington seem to show that sparrows stick very closely to one area and that because of this habit it is possible to rid a locality of them by trapping or poisoning them. While exterminating them it is worth remembering that, while it takes quite a good many of them, the little chaps make an excellent pie. To kill them grain should be scattered in a long strip in a spot which they frequent and a dose of fine bird shot fired along the row when the bunch is busy feeding.

An orchardist living in Missouri has found the following plan excellent for keeping apples during the winter in small quantities where the outdoor temperature is not severe. He digs a pit large enough to cover the end of the barrel and gradually sloping to a few inches. Put in another way, he makes the excavation large enough to receive just half the barrel, with the top just above the ground. He puts as many apples in the barrel as it will hold without them rolling out, tacks slats over the top so as to permit ventilation and packs earth and straw well up around the barrel.

If the country boy enjoys one privilege over the lad in town that both he and his parents should be profoundly thankful for it is that he is quite largely removed from the temptation to form the cigarette habit through not coming in contact with the detestable sharks who seek to increase their income by selling "stinkers" to small boys in violation of law. If there is any proposition on the face of the earth that is hopeless it is a half baked kid who acquires this habit. He might about as well be knocked on the head and buried at once, for he'll soon become dead to everything that's worth while.

There is probably no class of animals in the great corn belt that make easier or quicker money for the man who raises them than hogs, yet no class of animals receive such scant attention in the matter of the housing and accommodations furnished them. The outcome of this carelessness is that there is hardly a locality where any attempt is made at raising hogs in which more money is not lost in a season through the death of little pigs than warm and dry quarters would cost. Not only should the hog house be warm and dry, but it should be so built that the sunshine will have access to it during a part of the day, while it is equally important that it should be well ventilated. There are no two factors that have so much to do with the health of farm animals as sunshine and fresh air, and yet in many cases little advantage is taken of them.

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do your realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured.

MRS. C. C. GOKEY, Northfield, Vt.

If you have any of the symptoms Mrs. Gokey mentions, it is your duty to protect yourself.

Band for Plummer.

A number of the local boys are working hard to gather together enough material with which to organize a brass band for Plummer. With the number who have assigned their willingness to join up to the present time a membership of between twelve and fourteen can be organized.

Quite a number of musicians are available here with which to organize a brass band and as a big majority of these have had some band and orchestra experience the boys should be able to make rapid progress when once they get started.

The matter of selecting a leader and of raising funds with which to purchase some instruments will be brought up at a meeting to be held shortly.

In Need of A Barber.

The male population of Plummer is left in a peculiar predicament since the departure of the village barber last week. Without any means of getting a shave or hair cut unless they condescend to do it themselves they will either have to let their hair and whiskers grow at will or go to one of the near-by towns; the latter practice which will prove rather expensive.

We need a barber and if $25 to $30 a week is an inducement to anyone who is a hustler and willing to work, here is a proposition that will stand investigating.

New Quarters for Pioneer.

The Plummer Pioneer plant will be moved to new quarters next week and will hereafter be found in the new Rose building just west of the Rose feed mill. The crowded condition of the present quarters makes the change almost necessary in order to be able to do the work satisfactory. The new quarters, after it is completed, will give us plenty of room and will furnish a good location.

In order to get better acquainted with the residents of the village and surrounding country we extend to the public a cordial invitation to call in at our office any time for a social chat as in this way we may become acquainted sooner and be able to give our readers better news service.

Harry Lennon Leaves.

Harry Lennon, the popular Plummer tonsorial artist, who has made his home here since last July, left Saturday evening for St. Paul, where he went to assume management of his brother's barber shop, during the latter's absence in the southern states this winter.

Harry has given the people of Plummer the utmost satisfaction as a barber and worked up a handsome trade for himself, and the people were loth to see him leave.

The absence of Mr. Lennon leaves Plummer without a barber at the present time at least, but the splendid opening here for a live and hustling barber and the patronage worked up by Mr. Lennon is an inducement that will undoubtedly be taken advantage of within a short time.

Gave Interesting Program

The students of the Plummer school with their teacher Miss Halseth gave a Thanksgiving program in the school house Friday afternoon at 2:30. In addition to quite a number of local people in attendance a number came up from Brooks and Red Lake Falls to pay a visit to the school. The program was a success in every way and speaks highly for pupils and their teacher.

Land Going Fast.

Every day sees one or more land seekers in town who are looking over the fine farming lands in this vicinity. Lands are fast being bought up in this section and next spring will see a great influx of settlers. Never in the history of this country has farm lands been so keenly saught for and the advantage of getting some of the most productive lands in Minnesota at a rediculously low price is certainly being taken.

This section is just getting the recognition that it desirves and at the rate lands are going cheap lands in this country will be unheard of in a comparatively short time.

Band for Plummer.

A number of the local boys are working hard to gather together enough material with which to organize a brass band for Plummer. With the number who have assigned their willingness to join up to the present time a membership of between twelve and fourteen can be organized.

Quite a number of musicians are available here with which to organize a brass band and as a big majority of these have had some band and orchestra experience the boys should be able to make rapid progress when once they get started.

The matter of selecting a leader and of raising funds with which to purchase some instruments will be brought up at a meeting to be held shortly.

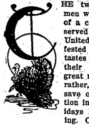
How Our Presidents have Given Thanks



THE two dozen and more men who have in the course of a century and a decade served as presidents of the United States have manifested quite a variety of tastes and preferences in their observance of our great national holidays—or, rather, all the holidays save one. The one exception in the category of holidays has been Thanksgiving. One and all, our presidents have, save under the most unusual circumstances, observed the November day of prayer and thankfulness in pretty much the same way. Indeed, it is something of a marvel that men of widely differing temperaments living at different periods of our history have found it possible to conform so closely to what has now almost become a set of unwritten rules at the White House.

None of the veteran employes of the presidential mansion has even been able to advance a wholly satisfactory theory as to why our chief magistrates have followed so closely in one another's footsteps in the observance of Thanksgiving when they have allowed themselves considerable latitude with regard to other holidays, such as Fourth of July. One supposition is to the effect that the religious significance of Thanksgiving prescribes a certain form of observance. Another theory is that it is the fact that Thanksgiving is so pre-eminently a family holiday—a day for family reunions. And finally, and perhaps it is the most plausable, is the premise that precedent once firmly established at the White House is pretty likely to be rigidly adheared to.

Whereas the program of a president of the United States on the last Thursday in November does not differ much from that of many an ordinary citizen, the Thanksgiving event requires attention from him earlier than from the average individual, who, perhaps, does not give it a thought until the good wife reminds him that he had better engage a turkey, or the son and heir begins to discuss the prospects of the Thanksgiving day football contest. The forethought of the president in the matter arises from the responsibility which rests upon him for the issuance of the official Thanksgiving day proclamation which fixes the date and formally calls upon all the people of the country to assemble in the churches and give thanks for the blessings of the year.

As it is, there is no surety and little likelihood that a busy president will, on his own initiative, assume the role of herald of the Thanksgiving. Accordingly one of the clerks at the White House, whose duty it is to keep tab of the president's engagement and act as a human memorandum pad, reminds his chief along about the first week in November that it is time to issue the customary Thanksgiving proclamation. Or perhaps the proclamation, beautifully engrossed, comes over to the White House from the state department all ready for the president's signature. And this lets a secret out of the bag—namely, that not all of our presidents have written their own Thanksgiving proclamations. Roosevelt, who rather prides himself on his literary abilities, insisted on doing so, but most of the occupants of the White Hause have been only too glad to fall back on precedent and allow this call to be properly phrased by a man named Smith, who holds a confidential position in the state department and has been for, lo, these many years, acting as the chief executive's proxy in writing holiday proclamations and composing those ceremonial letters of congratulation or condolence which our ruler is called upon to send every now and then to sovereigns overseas.

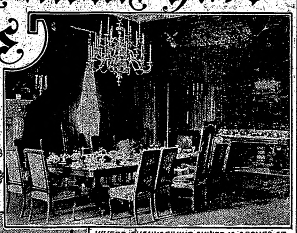
With the proclamation out of the way the president does not need to bother any further about the preliminaries for Thanksgiving—not even as to the turkey for the feast—since kind-hearted admirers of the chief magistrate can always be depended upon to send him especially choice gobblers as gifts. Why, one prosperous farmer in Rhode Island has not missed a Thanksgiving for considerably more than a third of a century in the donation of a White House Thanksgiving bird. Apparently he does not let his own politics influence the size of the birds he sends either, for Grant and Cleveland and Roosevelt all received from this source turkeys that tipped the scales at close to 36 pounds apiece.

Thanksgiving day, when it arrives, is a morning when the president does not have to tumble out of bed at any particular hour, because the president has no office hours on Thanksgiving. To some of our presidents, such as Roosevelt, who were never tempted to oversleep, this is no special boon, but it is something of a blessing to the present occupant of the White House, who is by preference a late riser. The White House offices are open on Thanksgiving, as they are on every other day and night in the year, and the president may stroll over to dispose of the most urgent mail and telegrams, but there is nothing obligatory about this, and there have been Thanksgivings on which the chief magistrate has not set foot in his workshop.

The one pre-eminent and invariable duty of Thanksgiving morning for the president is attendance at divine worship. Having advised other people to repair to the churches on this occasion to give thanks it would be accounted odd if he did not do likewise, no matter what the weather conditions. Very often the president has walked to church on Thanksgiving, and he is almost certain to find his route lined with spectators who avail themselves of a certainty that does not characterize a president's church-going at other times. Almost all our presidents, from Washington to Lincoln, attended Thanksgiving services in quaint little St. John's church—nicknamed the "Church of the Presidents"—which stands just across the park from the White House, but later presidents have worshipped in different edifices. President Taft goes to a Unitarian church about one-third of a mile from the presidential mansion, but Mrs. Taft and Miss Helen go to St. John's, to occupy the pew that for nearly a century has been reserved for our president's families.

Of late years the president has on some Thanksgivings attended two church services in succession, and this brings him home late for luncheon. Just here should be mentioned one of the few changes that have ever taken place in the White House program for Thanksgiving day. Years ago it was the invariable custom to serve the Thanksgiving dinner at noon, but latterly most presidents have preferred to have dinner served at 7 or 730 o'clock in the evening.

An American president is allowed some latitude as to the manner in which he spends the afternoon of Thanksgiving day. He may spend it visiting with his family or reading, but almost invariably the later afternoon is devoted to a constitutional. A long walk is an excellent appetizer for the turkey and cranberry sauce, although some of our later presidents, including both Taft and Roosevelt, have ridden horseback in the twilight of the autumn holiday.



WHERE THANKSGIVING DINNER IS SERVED AT WHITE HOUSE

It is pretty safe for the president of the United States to count on a house full of people on Thanksgiving. The holiday is recognized as the occasion for family reunions, and when, as in the case of Roosevelt and Taft, there are a number of children, the young people have all come home for the occasion—like as not accompanied by school friends, who account it a real treat to be entertained at the White House over a holiday. In the case of presidents who, like McKinley, have had no living children, there have usually been nieces and nephews and other relatives to make up a merry circle, and one mistress of the White House—the beloved Mrs. Hayes—made it a custom to entertain at dinner on such occasions all the employes of the presidential offices and their families. However, in justice to latter day First Ladies of the Land, it should be explained that such hospitality would be no slight chore when there are dozens of employes, to say nothing of the couple of dozen policemen who are detailed to guard the White House.

In some administrations it has been the custom to spend the evening of Thanksgiving day very quietly at the White House, but latterly, with the principal meal of the day postponed until nightfall, it has been the rule for the dinner party to adjourn to the spacious and historic East room for social festivities of one kind or another. There is always music on such occasions, the $15,000 "gold piano" being ready to hand in one corner of the big room, and when young people have been in evidence, as at every Thanksgiving celebration in the White House during the past decade, there has usually been some dancing—the old-fashioned dances, such as the Virginia reel, being the favorites on such occasions. President Taft, it may be added, however, does not need the charitable consideration of "square dances." He is adept at waltzes and other "round dances," and trips the "light fantastic" with the enthusiasm of a man of half his weight.

Good Reasons For Thankfulness

There is no one so old nor so young that he cannot scare up cause for thankfulness, if merely for the pharisaical reason of not being as some one else.

When you do not see the necessity of being grateful for what you are and have, go probing for what you have escaped. From this point of view the national holiday will not seem a hollow mockery of your hard luck.

The woman who thinks herself too trouble pursued to give thanks may "take another think" and say fervently: "It is to be grateful that for me:

"The stealing of my morning paper will not ruin my temper and a belated breakfast will not put me in a grouch for the day.

"There is no waiting my time for a barber to make me a daily sight with lather while he converses at length.

"There is open enjoyment in a bit of gossip without feeling bound to pretend my sex never indulged in such a pernicious habit.

"A mirror need not mean surreptitious glances lest I be thought vain, and if I happen to be loud in my tastes I need not subdue them to somber hues or else go clad in ties, socks, and vests that are the joke of the club.

"There is no need for inventiveness to explain nights out and I can take my pleasure less wearingly than in 'whooping it up.'

"The first of the month means merely my own bills, or some one to pay them, not settling accounts for a whole family.

"A cotillion is an accustomed sensation of waiting to be asked, not a nerve racking fear of being a masculine wall flower.

"There may be a dozen strings to my bow without achieving the reputation of being a gay deceiver and running risks of getting my hand called if I pay marked attention to two fair ones at once."

A GRIM REMINDER.

"Doctor," said the desperate heavyweight, "give me something to make me weigh less."

"That sort of thing merely makes you dangerously ill."

"I don't care if it does."

"Very well. But I can't see why you should go to all that trouble merely to make labor a little lighter for your pallbearers."

TO KEEP OUT THE DUST

Veil-Like Cloth That Will Relieve Housekeeper of Much Worry and Labor.

There is a perennial joke about the dust gathering on a mantle where the mistress calls the attention of the fact that she "can write her name in it," getting an answer, with the inherent wit, of "how great it must be to have the advantage of an education."

If one were to look further into this it will also be seen that it is necessary for one to become educated to the requirement or remedy that the fact of the dust's presence indicates and that requirement is the excluding of the dust to the best of one's knowledge and ability.

As the wire screen is manufactured to exclude the fly, so is there a veil-like cloth texture of net, though slightly rougher and much cheaper, which can be applied to the use of keeping out the ever present dust to a very great extent.

The low price of this article, which can be purchased at almost any drygoods store or counter, places it within the reach of practically everyone, and when one thinks of the fearful toll of human life that dust-carried germs are wont to take, there will be no hesitation in applying this as well as any other remedy that may come to our notice during our daily routine. This material can be tacked on the inside of screens and if one resides on a very dusty street it can be doubled for better effect. As it does not exclude the light or air but is effective where the dust is concerned, it will be availed of all the more quickly when it is known that it also precludes the entering of the much-hated malarial mosquito.

Where the dust is extremely heavy in the street it is the best plan to do all the ventilating only from the back of the house and it is seldom that draughts cannot be caused to clean out the air in the veriest cranny-like closet or wardrobe.

DIET FOR DELICATE CHILD

Food That Is Easily Assimilated by Weak Stomach and Gives Sufficient Nourishment.

In caring for a weak child, the important thing is to keep the bowels open. A simple diet is as follows:

Breakfast, dry toast (whole wheat bread preferred) and a coddled egg; don't let the white get hard. Dinner the same, and for supper a glass of skimmed milk with a little hot water in it, with dry toast; just enough to take the chill off the milk, and get it in the proper condition for a weak stomach. For a school lunch or a little variety we give our girl Dutch rusks. This diet is to eliminate the gas and fermentation, and frequently we give a pinch of soda to keep the stomach sweet.

Never allow a day to pass without a movement of the bowels, and whenever the eyes are red or bloodshot or inflamed, resort to high injections; if you don't understand about the latter a trained nurse should be consulted.

Don't allow candy or sweet stuff of any kind to enter the child's weak stomach. The diet given above seems to be what a weak stomach will take care of and seems to be sufficient nourishment. Get strictly fresh eggs and give plenty of fresh air. You will have to watch and learn what is and what is not agreeing with him.

Doctors can assist some, but it is a case of constant care and nursing on your part rather than going to different doctors from time to time. Watch for the red or inflamed eyes, which is a sign of constipation.

Eggs With Sauce.

Six neatly poached eggs, six squares of buttered toast, a few drops of anchovy sauce, half a pint of white sauce, two ounces of tarragon and chervil leaves, parsley, chives and watercress. Wash the leaves carefully, then pound them together in a mortar, adding to them a few drops of anchovy sauce. Next rub the mixture through a sieve, and add to it the white sauce, stirring it over the fire till both are well mixed. Arrange each egg on a piece of toast an pour a little sauce over. Serve them neatly arranged on a hot dish.

Roly-Poly.

Roll half a pound of short pastry into a round about a quarter of an inch thick. Spread over it a layer of jam, leaving a margin all around. Wet this edge slightly and then roll the pudding up. Press the edges tightly. Then place the roly-poly in a floured baking tin and bake thirty minutes. Serve hot with a hard sauce seasoned with sherry or brandy.

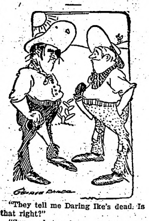
Leaving "Ring" When Cleaning.

When removing spots from woolen or silk material first brush the dust from the garment, then place the material to be cleaned over a bag made of cheescloth filled with powdered magnesia, then rub well with rag saturated with gasoline. The magnesia absorbs the gasoline, thus preventing the "ring."—Harper's Bazar.

To Clean Flat Irons.

When starch sticks to the flatiron use a piece of fine wire screening. Place screening upon a paper on the ironing board and pass iron over it. It is much better than scraping iron with a knife. The wax-coated boxes in which crackers are packed make excellent polishers—better than the little blocks of paraffin so generally used.

NOT SO SURPRISING.



"They tell me Daring Ike's dead. Is that right?"

"Sure; shot plumb through the heart."

"Well, I ain't surprised, then; his heart always was weak."

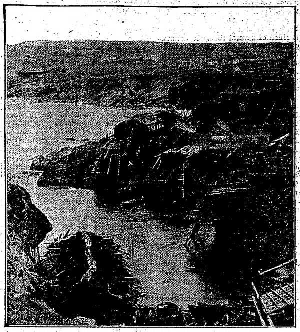
OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Pouch Cove, Newfoundland



Pouch Cove is a typical fishing village near the city of St. John's, Newfoundland. Practically all of the 230,000 inhabitants of the island are to be found in just such villages, of which there are 2,300 around the coast. When the codfish are brought in they are dried on such racks as those shown in the photograph. This work of "making the fish," as it is termed by the fisher folk, is performed largely by women, who carry the fish from the boats, spread them over the racks and kep turning them until they are thoroughly cured. The sheds are but storehouses for the fish when they are ready for market.

WARRIOR CHIEF OF CONGO

Down in the Congo, over which territory in Africa the French and Germans are disputing, the inhabitants have not taken kindly to the ways of civilization. Our illustration is a portrait of a warrior chieftain who has been unusually successful in following the native custom of letting the finger nails grow. These natives are armed with modern weapons and are desperate fighters.

SOMETHING OF A SLEEPER

The people who tell stories of sleeping through all the excitement when some calamity occurs in the house next door, will have to take their hats off to Thomas Sweeney, of Jersey City. He continued to sleep soundly when his own house collapsed under him.

Sweeney's house was a two-story structure, resting on piles. Some time after he, his wife and seven-year-old son had retired for the night, the piles wearied of sustaining their burdens any longer and let it slip off to the ground, seven feet below. Policemen heard the crash several blocks away and rushed to the building to give first aid to the injured. They found Mrs. Sweeney and the boy on the second floor trying to wake the master of the household. Sweeney yawned, shook the ruins of the plaster ceiling from his blankets and turned over to sleep again.

"Go on to bed," he remarked. "The place can't fall any further, can it?"

ELECTRICITY FROM STARS

Experiments conducted in Ireland, if they are to be trusted, reveal a distinct electromotive force exercised by the stars. Using a reflecting telescope of two feet aperture to concentrate the star rays, and sensitive electrometers to note their influence, the experimenter had reason to believe that they were able not only to detect, but to measure, the electromotive force of both stars and planets.

To Venus, for example, they ascribed a force of about seventeen one-hundredths of a volt, and to Jupiter a force of at least three one-hundredths of a volt. In the case of Jupiter only a part of the planet's light fell upon the electrometer, so that the experimenters inferred that his entire electric influence must be much greater than that stated. Sirius, which appears to us as the brightest of the fixed stars, showed a force amounting to two one-hundredths of a volt.

BEST BABY ALPINE CLIMBER.

The youngest Alpinist in the world is probably little Flavia Guidini, daughter of Dr. Joseph Guidini, of Turin, Italy. She is only four and a half years old, and her mother is an English woman. On September 4, accompanied by her parents, she performed what is believed to be an absolutely unprecedented feat for one of her years, successfully climbing several of the peaks of the Mont Blanc range.

First, on the previous day, she reached the Mont Frety but, 7,240 feet, making the ascent from Courmayeur. Then in six hours she climbed the Giant's Neck, 11,230 feet. There she rested a little while, and next, crossing the glacier of the Giant's Neck, reached the summit of the Petit Flambeau, 11,450 feet. The descent to Courmayeur was made in two days. So far as is known, no child of anything approaching her youthfulness has ever even attempted, much less successfully accomplished, any one of these climbs.

HEN THAT CHEWS ITS FOOD

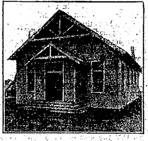
Isaac Schantz of Bayonne, N. J., has a curiosity in a young Plymouth rock hen, which has a face resembling that of a human being. The hen was purchased by him for 39 cents. It has several teeth and chews its food, which is principally chopped meat. The hen has nails on its feet like those of a human being, and it refuses to mingle with Schantz's other chickens. The hen was hatched last spring, but its owner does not know where, as the man from whom he purchased it bought it along with several other ordinary fowls.

RECORD FEAT IN BUILDING

What is declared to be a record feat was that recently accomplished in Waco, Tex. It consisted in the erection and equipment of a church capable of holding 350 worshipers in eight hours. The edifice in quistion, the Herring Avenue Methodist church, was commenced at eight o'clock one morning upon a vacant site and finished at five o'clock in the afternoon. Deducting the hour for luncheon, this means that a whole building was put up in eight hours.

Even the foundations, which are laid in cement, had not been previously prepared, grass still growing upon the site when the men began their momentous task. By ten o'clock, however, the foundations were secured and the working force increased by another thirty men, making an army of forty all told. Every man knew what was expected of him and there was no clash or hindrance. As the carpenters finished so the painters came upon the scene, and the moment they had completed their task they were followed by the electricians and the paperhangers.

By noon the entire frame was up, the front steps and vestibule nearly finished, part of the floor laid, and the rafters were being put in place. At 12 o'clock the men ceased work for lunch and at one o'clock started in earnest again. The rafters and the roof boards were soon in place, when the roofers began to lay the rubberoid roofing. Twenty-eight men were engaged in this task, and at 4:30 it was finished. By this time, too, the floor and ceiling as well as the electric wiring were about finished while the painters were putting on the second coat. The paperhangers had also finished hanging the brown finish burlap dado and buttermilk-finish paper on canvas on the inside walls. By five o'clock the building was complete with the exception of equipping it with seats, this being the work of only a few minutes.



Promptly at 5:30 p. m. all the workmen were called to the front seats and a service held, and in the evening the edifice was dedicated by Rev. H. L. Munger. The church measures some 32 feet in width and 65 feet in length, including the vestibule, with a seating capacity of 350. The flooring is raised above the level of the ground.

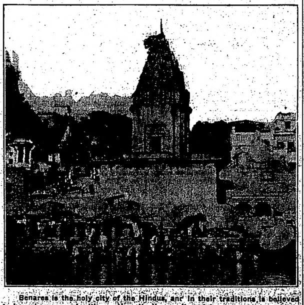
TOO TICKLISH FOR ARMY

Seized with a desire to be a soldier, Christian Johnson, an Ohio farmer of 22 years, went to Columbus to be enlisted. He looked good to the officers and all went well till it came time to measure him. Every time the officer's hand touched the young man he almost went into hysterics, laughing, squirming and giggling ad infinitum.

"What's the matter?" the officer asked.

"I'm so ticklish," was the answer, and it proved so true that it was impossible to complete the measurements, and he was sent back to the ancestral farm.

Washing Away Their Sins



Benares is the holy city of the Hindus, and in their traditions is believed to have been coeval with creation. Its three miles of frontage on the Ganges is occupied chiefly by great flights of steps or ghats where crowds of all classes spend the day in business, amusement or devotion. In the sacred river itself there are always throngs of pilgrims to be seen bathing to wash away their sins.

Prejudice Is a Serious Menace

Prejudice is a hard thing to overcome, but where health is at stake and the opinion of thousands of reliable people differs from yours, prejudice then becomes your menace and you ought to lay it aside. This is said in the interest of people suffering from chronic constipation, and it is worthy of their attention.

In the opinion of legions of reliable American people the most stubborn constipation imaginable can be cured by a brief use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You may not have heard of it before, but do not doubt its merits on that account, or because it has not been blatantly advertised. It has sold very successfully on word of mouth recommendation. Parents are giving it to their children today who were given it by their parents, and it has been truthfully said that more druggists use it personally in their families than any other laxative.

Letters recently received from Mr. E. M. Connelly, Genoa Jct., Wis., and Mrs. E. Bolch, Hatfield, Wis., are but a few of thousands showing the esteem in which Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is held. It is mild, gentle, non-griping—not violent, like salts or cathartics. It cures gradually and pleasantly so that in time nature again does its own work without outside aid. Constipated people owe it to themselves to use this grand bowel specific.

Anyone wishing to make a trial of this remedy before buying it in the regular way of a druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a large bottle (family size) can have a sample bottle sent to the home free of charge by simply addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

A Hunting Story.

An old backwoodsman that Agraham Lincoln often told of had very heavy, overhanging eyebrows, and wore big spectacles with brass rims. One day he came rushing into his cabin and seizing his rifle, aimed it carefully through a crack of the door at a great oak tree that stood near, and fired.

"What is it?" whispered his wife.

"A wildcat," Sairy," he said, excitedly, "an' I missed him!"

He hastily loaded and fired again, and then again.

"Now, hold on, Joshua," said his good wife. "Let me look at you. why, laws-a-daisy, it's nothin' but a little bug on one o' your eyebrows!"—Housekeeper.

Adam Bede on Pittsburg.

Pittsburg patriots twisted their faces awry at a Smoketown pun delivered by former Congressman Bede of Minnesota.

Bede put it over in the climax of a sparkling speech at a chamber of commerce banquet.

After telling how dearly he loved old Pittsburg and her fine old people, her rich people and her toilers, he said:

"I like Pittsburg because if I ever get tired of the town I can wash it off."

A BRAIN WORKER.

Must Have the Kind of Food That Nourishes Brain.

"I am a literary man whose nervous energy is a great part of my stock in trade, and ordinarily I have little patience with breakfast foods and the extravagant claims made of them. But I cannot withhold my acknowledgment of the debt that I owe to Grate-Nuts food.

"I discovered long ago that the very bulkiness of the ordinary diet was not calculated to give one a clear head, the power of sustained, accurate thinking. I always felt heavy and sluggish in mind as well as body after eating the ordinary meal, which diverted the blood from the brain to the digestive apparatus.

"I tried foods easy of digestion, but found them usually deficient in nutriment. I experimented with many breakfast foods and they, too, proved unsatisfactory, till I reached Grape-Nuts. And then the problem was solved.

"Grape-Nuts agreed with me perfectly from the beginning, satisfying my hunger and supplying the nutriment that so many other prepared foods lack.

"I had not been using it very long before I found that I was turning out an unusual quantity and quality of work. Continued use has demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that Grape-Nuts food contains the elements needed by the brain and nervous system of the hard working public writer." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

CARE IN MEASURING

SUCCESS OF MANY COOKS DUE TO ACCURACY.

Very Difficult to Measure Foods With the Eyes, and It Can Only Be Done After Long Experience.

Much of the success attained by good cooks can readily be traced to their accurate measuring. Many housekeepers will say without thinking: "I never measure anything." You may not actually have a measuring cup and measure materials as girls are taught to do in the cooking schools. You have become so accustomed to cooking and making certain dishes that you always know the amount to use; in other words, you measure with your eyes. This is very difficult to do and can only be done after long experience. Try and keep a couple of measuring cups, either glass or tin, in your home. They do not cost very much and will save you a great deal of trouble in teaching your girls to cook.

Directions for Measuring.

Sift or shake up lightly with a spoon all dry material (flour, baking powder, etc.) before measuring. All measures are to be taken at a level unless otherwise stated. To measure a cupful of dry material fill the cup with spoon or scoop and level off with a case knife. To measure a teaspoon or tablespoon fill full and then level off by holding a caseknife erect and passing over the top. To measure one-half spoonful divide a spoon lengthwise with a knife, crosswise for quarters. A cupful of liquid is all the cup will hold.

Handy Equivalents.

Three teaspoonfuls make one tablespoonful.

Sixteen tablespoonfuls of any dry material make one cupful.

Twelve tablespoonfuls of liquid make one cupful.

Four cupfuls make one quart.

A half pint cup is the standard.

Table of comparison between weights and measures:

Two cups of butter (packed solidly) is equal to one pound.

Two cups finely chopped meat (packed solidly) is equal to one pound.

Two cupfuls of granulated sugar, one pound.

Two and two-thirds cupfuls powdered sugar is equal to one pound.

Two and two-thirds cupfuls brown sugar is equal to one pound.

Two and two-thirds cupfuls oatmeal is equal to one pound.

Four and three-fourths cupfuls of rolled oats is equal to one pound.

Four cupfuls of flour is equal to one pound.

Nine or ten eggs is equal to one pound.

Two tablespoonfuls of butter is equal to one ounce.

Four tablespoonfuls flour is equal to one ounce.

Juice of one lemon is equal to three tablespoonfuls.—Mrs. Hazel L. Dunford, Utah Agricultural College.

Apple and Chestnut Tarts.

These are served in pumpkin cases and made as follows: Blanch chestnuts, then boil them, then mash in a warm bowl. Sift together a quarter of a cupful of granulated sugar and two tablespoons of flour, add the chestnut meal and half a cupful of sweet milk; cook for five minutes in a double boiler. Beat stiff whites of two eggs and fold into the custard after removing from the fire. Half fill tart forms of puff paste with well sweetened apple sauce, flavored with nutmeg; put a dab of whipped cream on each.

Food Value of Fruit.

Here are a few facts worth considering. Baked apples are more nutritious than baked potatoes, and will produce more work. Dates, prunes, figs, apricots and raisins are dried fruits always available. Instead of looking upon them as merely supplemental food—like confectionery—we should remember that they are really among the most healthful, palatable and concentrated of vegetable foods.

Among fresh fruits, bananas, apples, figs, grapes, blackberries, strawberries and oranges have decided food value and may be used as economical sources of nourishment.

Minced Liver on Toast.

Chop fine cold liver, to make one cupful. Cook one tablespoon of chopped onions in three tablespoons butter until a pale brown, add three-fourths cup of milk, into which are stirred two tablespoons flour; add liver, season with salt and pepper, and when piping hot pour over slices of nicely browned toast. Very appetizing. Fine for breakfast or lunch, and very easy to make.

Butterscotch Pie.

Melt thoroughly together two cupfuls of light brown sugar and one large tablespoonful of butter, to this add one cupful hot water or milk and yolks of two or three eggs, four tablespoonfuls of flour and a pinch of salt. Beat the whites of the eggs with a little powdered sugar and spread over the tops.

To Whip Thin Cream.

If the cream is too thin to whip, place the dish containing it in another dish of cold water, leaving it there until it is well chilled. Then put into a pan of hot water. It will whip without difficulty.—The Housekeeper.

Canada at the Chicago Land Show

WILL MAKE A MAGNIFICENT EXHIBIT OF GRAINS AND GRASSES, VEGETABLES AND FRUIT.

A carload of grain in straw, grasses and other of the products of Western Canada arrived at Chicago the other day, and is now installed in the Coliseum, where the United States land and irrigation exposition is under way. Those who are interested in the "Back to the land movement" will find in the Canadian exhibit one of the best displays of the agricultural products of Western Canada that has ever been made. There are representative men there, who will be pleased to give the fullest information regarding the country.

The exhibit shows what can be done on the free grant lands of that country and most of the grain was produced on the farms of former residents of the United States who have taken advantage of the homestead lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The vegetable exhibit will attract a great deal of attention, and some marvelous potatoes, carrots, turnips, cabbage and cauliflower are shown.

It is true that the homestead area is being rapidly taken up and the bulk of that now to be had lies north of the Saskatchewan river in a portion of the country known as the park country. Here there is a large quantity of open prairie interspersed by beautiful groves of poplar and willow. Water is in abundance, hay is plentiful and consequently fodder for animals is right at hand. Those who have taken advantage of farming in these districts and watched the efforts of those in the prairie proper feel that they have the advantage of their brother, who is not able to secure fuel and the other conveniences of the park district on his own farm.

The crop conditions throughout Western Canada the past year have been generally good, and some wonderful crop yields of wheat, oats and barley are recorded. The Canadian Government, under whose auspices the exhibit spoken of is being made, is preparing reports on crops in the different Western Canada districts, and while these will not be ready for distribution at the land show commencing on the 18th of November and closing on Dec. 8th, application made to the Canadian Government agent nearest you will bring them to you as soon as they are published.

Legal Charges.

The Judge—You say you don't get your alimony?

The Complainant—I don't get it all, your honor. It's only five dollars a week; and I need every cent of it.

The Judge—And what is the reason you get only part of the amount?

The Complainant—It's because my former husband sends it to me by a lawyer; and the lawyer charges me car fare, brokerage, transportation and time—and that leaves only 80 cents.

PHYSICIAN ADVISES CUTICURA REMEDIES

"Four years ago I had places break out on my wrist and on my shin which would itch and burn by spells, and scratching them would not seem to give any relief. When the trouble first began, my wrist and shin itched like poison. I would scratch those places until they would bleed before I could get any relief. Afterwards the places would scale over, and the flesh underneath would look red and feverish. Sometimes it would begin to itch until it would waken me from my sleep, and I would have to go through the scratching ordeal again.

Our physician pronounced it "dry eczema." I used an ointment which the doctor gave me, but it did no good. Then he advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. As this trouble has been in our family for years, and is considered hereditary, I felt anxious to try to head it off. I got the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, and they seemed to be just what I needed.

"The disease was making great headway on my system until I got the Cuticura Remedies which have cleared my skin of the great pest. From the time the eczema healed four years ago, until now, I have never felt any of its pest, and I am thankful to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment which certainly cured me. I always use the Cuticura Soap for toilet, and I hope other sufferers from skin diseases will use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Irven Hutchison, Three Rivers, Mich., Mar. 16, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 17 K, Boston.

The bright side is sure to be the right side.—Mary D. Brine.

WIDOW ON TRIAL

MRS. GERTRUDE PATTERSON, WHO SHOT CHICAGOAN, WILL PLEAD SELF DEFENSE.

SHOOTING AFTER QUARREL

Asserted Prisoner Will Reveal the Story of Her Unusual Career as Mistress of a Millionaire for Five Years.

Denver, Colorado.—Gertrude Gibson Patterson, who on Sept. 25 shot and killed her husband, Charles A. Patterson, a young Chicagoan, while the couple were walking together near a tuberculosis sanitarium in which Patterson was a patient, is on trial for her life in the district court.

Mrs. Patterson, according to her counsel, will plead self defense, alleging that she shot her husband in the course of a quarrel in which he attempted to take her life. That the quarrel was over a suit for alienation of Mrs. Patterson's affections which the young husband contemplated bringing against a well-known Chicago millionaire and that the killing resulted from Patterson's refusal to drop the affair will be contention of the state.

Important in its effect on the jury, counsel for the defense claim, will be the story Mrs. Patterson will tell upon the stand. She will lay bare, they say, all the details of her life, from the time when as a girl of 16 she met the Chicago millionaire.

She will tell of the interest that led him to send her to Paris to be educated, which resulted five months later in relations between them that were maintained for five years, during which, she says, her family and friends, as well as the friends of the millionaire, believed the couple to be husband and wife.

That after she had married Patterson she discovered he had been paid $1,500 by the millionaire to make her his wife, and that her married life was one long humiliation, marked by constant effort on the part of Patterson to use her to wring money from the man with whom she says she had previously lived, will be told the jury.

The youth and beauty of the prisoner and her tragic life story are expected to make a deep impression on the sympathies of the twelve men who will decide her fate.

Mrs. Patterson's parents are here from Sandoval, Ill., to be with her through the trial. District Attorney Willis W. Elliott is a member of the law firm through which Mrs. Patterson filed a divorce action just before the shooting. As a consequence, the state will be represented by a special prosecutor, Horace G. Benson. Elliott may be summoned as a witness for the defense.

FILM EXCHANGE IS BURNED.

Milwaukee Concern Suffers Damages of $200,000.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Fire caused a loss of $200,000 to the Western Film Exchange, located in the Enterprise building, at Second and Sycamore streets. No insurance was carried, the building being considered fireproof.

The fire started from a film coming in contact with an electric wire. The loss on the building was small.

Washington Towns Flooded.

Seattle, Wash. — Warm chinook winds bringing a heavy downpour of rain in the lowlands and melting the six feet of early snow in the Cascade mountains flooded the rivers of western Washington. The torrents broke the dam of the municipal electric plant, cut off Seattle's water supply, demoralized railroad service, washed out bridges and flooded many farms and valley towns. No lives have been reported lost. The water swept through the streets of Benton, driving the people to the hills.

NANKING'S FALL IS NEAR

REFORMERS LIKELY TO STARVE OUT MANCHU TROOPS.

Imperial and Rebel Armies Are Strong and Well Armed—Foreigners Safe.

Shanghai, China.—The fall of Nanking will possibly mark the real commencement of the final act of the Chinese revolutionary drama. The outcome of the attack the reformers are planning on Nanking is problematical. If the imperialists decide to remain behind the walls of the city it will probably become a case of siege and starvation. Neither side has an over abundance of food supplies.

The revolutionary forces approaching Nanking number many thousands. From Nanking on the north side of the river, 4,000 revolutionists with 41 guns, are marching to Pukow, which lies opposite Nanking. From Wu Hu, on the south side of the river, 2,000 men are advancing. Above Chin Kiang there is a force of 8,000 revolutionists, with 100 guns and it is estimated that 3,000 more are proceeding down the line of the Tientsin-Pukow railway. Fifteen warships now in the river under command of the rebels are awaiting the signal for the attack.

The imperialist garrison in Nanking, under command of General Chang of about 11,000 men, well trained and armed are strongly entranched and fortified. It is believed that all the Republican forces are within one day's striking distance of the city.

Loyalist Victories Reported.

Haukow.—Mail advices just received from Cheng Tu, Sze Chuen province, say that the rebels are very active. Numerous engagements have been fought and the loyalists have recaptured many cities. There were considerable losses on both sides. An expedition which was sent to retake Sint Sing Haien, about 30 miles to the southwest of Cheng Tu, lost between 400 and 500 men.

GOV'T IS UPHELD

JUDGE KOHLSAAT QUASHES WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS GRANTED NINE DEFENDANTS.

DODGED COURTS 9 YEARS

Obstacle Removed, Trial May Be Begun—Full Jurisdiction Declared to Be Vested in District Tribunal.

Chicago, Illinois. — Ten packing house magnates whom the government has sought for more than eight years to bring to trial on charges of violation of the Sherman anti-trust law will face a jury.

The last avenue of escape, the final plan to temporize, and the last desperate expedient of the packers to stave off a trial, was blocked by decision of United States Circuit Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, when he quashed a writ of habeas corpus previously sued out by them, and, in granting them an appeal from his decision, refused to take the defendants out of the custody of the district court.

Counsel for the packers were granted right to appeal on the question of whether the court erred in quashing the writ of habeas corpus. They will take that question, which involves also an attempt to have the Sherman law's penal section declared unconstitutional, because of indefiniteness, to the supreme court of the United States. But, by refusing himself to admit the defendants to bail, and requiring that they should be surrendered back to their bondsmen, Judge Kohlsaat keeps the packers in the physical custody of the district court, and so far as lawyers could figure out, makes it impossible for the defendants to avoid standing trial. Their appeal on the habeas corpus writ is separated from the main issues in the case.

It will be the first time since July 1, 1903—when the government first began its prosecution against them—that the department of justice has succeeded in forcing thm to trial. Through nearly nine years of litigation, the defendants have successfully interposed obstacle after obstacle to prevent consummation of the government's plans.

The men are indicted for criminal conspiracy to restrain commerce, and, if convicted, may be sent to jail.

Judge Kohlsaat, in his decision, declared that the plea of the petitioners that an immediate adjudication of the constitutionality of the penal section of the Sherman law—under which the packers were indicted—constituted special and extraordinary reasons why it should be granted, was untenable.

"In the opinion of this court, the district court has full jurisdiction, and for this court to intervene and inquire into the constitutionality of the law, after that question had been raised and decided in the district court, as pleaded by the government, would be in effect a review of the decision of the district court.

GRAND RAPIDS ROBBERY

ADAMS EXPRESS CO'S DEPOT OFFICE PLUNDERED.

Amount of Loot Is Unknown—Stranger Found in Railroad Yards Is Arrested.

Grand Rapids, Mich. — The Adams Express company's depot office here was robbed of everything in the safe. A lone bandit held up the agent and made a successful getaway. The safe was rifled of several thousand dollars, the exact amount not being known.

A. D. Harrison, the route agent, had just come into the Union station, and, after securing a quantity of mail, entered the express room. He called for Messenger Paul Tower, who, he supposed, was on duty, but received no reply.

He turned on the light and stood at a desk with his back to the safe and had commenced to open the mail when suddenly he heard someone behind him say, "Boost' em up and be quick about it.' He turned and was facing a masked man and the muzzle of a big revolver.

Harrison, with the muzzle of the gun in his back, was marched to a large truck, filled with packages.

"Now back up to that," said the robber, "and put your hands behind you. Harrison obeyed. With a piece of cord the bandit tied the expressman's hands behind him and to the tongue of the truck. With a threat to kill him if he made a sound, the robber knelt before the safe, and filled his pockets with money, bills and valuables.

A stranger was found by detectives in the vicinity of the railroad yards at midway and taken into custody pending an investigation.

AMERICAN MAY RULE CHINA.

Military Government for Period Under U. S. Officer Is Suggested.

London, England.—Archibald Ross Colquhoun, journalist and explorer, in an article in the Daily Graphic, which professes to outline the program of the Chinese rebels on the authority of leaders of the rebellion, says the revolutionary committee has summoned Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the instigators of the present revolt, and that he will shortly arrive in Shanghai to take up the direction of affairs.

The intention is, according to the article, to institute a military government under the direction of an American, General Homer Lee. There will be a period of three years or less of martial law, during which administrative reforms will be undertaken, this to be followed by another period of three years during which the military government will be assisted by certain elected bodies.

At the expiration of this time it is expected the country will be prepared for a constitutional republican government, with a president and two elective chambers.

It is understood that the ambassador comes empowered to negotiate a revision of the treaty of friendly relations of 79 years' standing between this country and Russia, the abrogation of which is advocated in resolutions now pending in congress.

SAW TAR PARTY

SAYS MEN HELD THE GIRL PROSTRATE WHILE HOT FLUID WAS APPLIED.

ON NAKED BODY OF GIRL

Kansan on Stand Alleges He Was Asked to Decoy Teacher—Victim Displays No Emotion During Ordeal.

Lincoln Center, Kansas. — While the young victim sat motionless, betraying not the least sign of a tear, Chester Anderson, a laborer of Beverly, this county, related to the jury the startling story of how ten men of Lincoln county dragged Miss Mary Chamberlain from a buggy near Twelve Mile schoolhouse and administered a coat of tar to her naked body. The witness was implicated in the attack on the school teacher.

Under cross examination, Anderson admitted that he had never heard any gossip against Miss Chamberlain and said his part in the crime followed a talk at Clark's mill, the day of the "party" when "Sherrill Clark or Mr. Simms asked me if I would take Mary Chamberlain out that night, that they wanted to tar her. I said no."

Anderson told of how he had arranged with Ed Ricord to take the girl for a buggy ride and of going back to Clark's mill to notify the gang. The night of the tarring Anderson and Delbert Kindelsparger drove to the scene in a buggy while other members of the mob came on motor cycles. When he got to the scene of the tarring, Anderson said he was forced to laugh, for there stood Everett Clark, the wealthy miller of Beverly, with a gunny sack over his head, through which eye and breathing holes had been poked.

When Miss Chamberlain and Ricord drove up Anderson said he and Kindelsparger stepped out into the road and pointed a toy pistol at them and halted the pair.

Assaulters Wore Masks.

"Two other men, wearing masks, came up and took Mary out of the buggy and Ricord got out and hid. Another man held the tar can." Anderson said two of the men were Everett Clark and Fitwater. The third one he did not know. They stripped her to the skin.

"On what part of Miss Chamberlain's body did they put the tar?" Anderson was asked.

"On her lower limbs, as near as I could tell," he replied.

Anderson said after the act was accomplished, Miss Chamberlain was helped into her clothes and with tar dripping from them, she got into the buggy and drove away with Ricord.

Alfa Lendermuth, one of Anderson's companions, corroborated the testimony. He said he recognized eight of the men since arrested for the crime. Lindermuth said he took no part in the tarring, merely hiding behind a fence to see the fun.

Just before time for court to adjourn the county attorney startled the spectators who were struggling to make their way from the court-room by calling Ricord, who told the same story as related by Anderson.

MADERO PREPARES FOR WAR.

Twenty-five Thousand Troops Mobilized on Mexican Border.

Mexico City, Mexico. — Orders to mobilize 25,000 men in a zone paralleling the northern boundary line was issued by the war department. The government is yet skeptical concerning the inauguration of the Reves-Vasquesta revolution, but should it be begun, President Madero and his cabinet believe the army would be sufficient to check it.

All these troops will be under the order of General Geronimo Treyino, with headquarters at Monterey. The chief of operations will be General Guvinio Robles, now at Torreon, in command of 1,000 men who are being held in that city as a result of the strike. They will join the northern movement.

In Connection With Express Robbery at Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids, Mich. — Following the daring robbery of the Adams Express Company safe at the Union depot by a masked man, two men have been taken into custody by the police. They are Paul Tower, the messenger, and James C. Odell, a former employe. Tower asserts that he was skating at the Coliseum roller rink a block from the scene of the robbery.

DR. A. A. AMES DIES

PHYSICIAN, SEVERAL TIMES MAYOR OF MINNEAPOLIS, DIES AT HIS HOME.

HAD PICTURESQUE CAREER

Elected Mayor of Minneapolis Several Times, Alternately on Democratic and Republican Tickets—Democratic Candidate for Gov.

Minneapolis. — Doctor Alonzo A. Ames, several times mayor of Minneapolis and otherwise one of the most interesting figures in her history died suddenly at his residence, 3104 James avenue south. His family had no hint of the approaching end. He was 70 years old and did not present the robust appearance which was familiar to most of the people of the city only a few years ago, but his friends did not expect his early death. Dr. Ames leaves his wife, his fourteen year old daughter, Maurine, and Fred W. Ames, a brother.

Dr. Ames' Life.

Albert Alonzo Ames was born at Garden Prairie, Boone county, Ill., January, 1842. He was the fourth of seven sons of Alfred Elisha Ames, M. D., one of the earliest pioneers of Minnesota who died at Minneapolis in 1874, and who came here in the spring of 1852 when the future Minneapolis was a part of the Fort Snelling reservation.

Albert Ames was 10 years old when his parents moved here and he attended the public schools, graduating in 1857 from the high school. He began the study of medicine and surgery under his father and after attending two preliminary and two regular courses at Rush Medical college, Chicago, was graduated Feb. 5, 1862, when he was 20 years old. The following August he returned to Minneapolis and began practicing. At the call of President Lincoln shortly afterwards he helped to organize Company B of the Ninth Minnesota regiment and enlisted as a private.

Dr. Ames first was appointed orderly sergeant and a few days later was given command as assistant surgeon of the Seventh Minnesota infantry volunteers and ordered to report to Fort Ridgely. He served with his regiment three years and was promoted to surgeon major in July, 1864, when he was 22 years old.

In 1867, previous to going to California, he was elected to the Minnesota legislature on the soldiers' ticket. In 1876 he was elected mayor of Minneapolis. This was the centennial year of the nation. He was again elected in 1882 and also in 1886. In the latter year he was nominated by the Democrats for governor of Minnesota. He was defeated by A. R. Gill of St. Paul by a majority of 2,600, although he always declared, as still do many Democrats, that he was really elected, but was counted out by the manipulation of votes in the up-state counties. Funds were raised for an investigation of the vote but nothing ever came of it.

Dr. Ames' political career was decidedly spectacular. A man of magnetic personality, he attracted a following that for years could not be swerved from its loyalty. It began with his popularity with the laboring classes when he ran for mayor against C. M. Loring in 1882 as a Democratic candidate. He had been defeated by Loring for the Republican nomination.

The election resulted in Ames defeating Loring by about 1,800 votes, the Republican vote being divided by the candidacy of W. W. Satterlee, Prohibitionist, who drew some of the Republican votes. This campaign both identified Ames as the friend of the labor element, and made him a Democratic leader.

George A. Pillsbury, Republican candidate, was elected in 1884 by about 6,000 votes.

In 1886 Dr. Ames was a candidate for re-election against Mayor Pillsbury and the fortunes of war were reversed, Pillsbury being defeated by 6,000 votes. The election took place in the spring and in the fall Dr. Ames was also made Democratic candidate for governor.

Again a Candidate.

In 1900, Dr. Ames became again a candidate for mayor, this time running as the Republican nominee. This was the first time the Australian ballot system, which introduced nominations by petition instead of convention, was in effect and Dr. Ames secured the nomination in the face of his former fierce attacks upon Republicans and the vehement denunciations that had been heaped upon him by Republican newspapers and leaders. It was again the introduction of a Prohibition candidate that aided him in the three-cornered campaign which followed, between Dr. Ames as candidate of the Republicans, James Gray, candidate for re-election by the Democrats, and W. J. Dean, candidate of the Prohibitionists. Dr. Ames was elected by 3,500 plurality. He served one year of his term, when the city was scandalized by the expose of the corruption of the police force, which was started by sensational articles appearing in McClure's magazine, entitled "The Shame of Minneapolis," which attracted attention all over the country and occasioned grand jury investigation. As a result several indictments were returned against police officials and Mayor Ames.

Mayor Ames tendered his resignation, which was not accepted, to the city council, and left the city, his whereabouts being unknown for several months. In the meantime, D. Percy Jones, president of the council, was made acting mayor. Dr. Ames was returned and brought to trial upon the charge of having received funds collected by his agents from gamblers and disorderly houses. The first trial resulted in a disagreement of the jury and the second in a conviction. An appeal was taken, however, which was granted, and a third trial and fourth trial resulted in disagreements, after which the county attorney's office declared that further prosecution would be useless, owing to the improbability that 12 men could be found in Hennepin county who would agree upon a verdict that would put Dr. Ames behind prison bars.

Was Always Popular.

This shows the remarkable personal popularity of the man, for his brother, who had been superintendent of police, and two detectives, were convicted upon the same charge of collecting and receiving money for police protection and sent to the penitentiary. This popularity had for its foundation Dr. Ames' reputation for benevolence to the poor. While mayor he continued his practice as a physician and surgeon and rarely charged for either advice or attendance. His office was crowded daily with the sick and afflicted, for whom he wrote prescrip- was at its greatest height during his administration of 1886. The city was wide open. Gambling was almost a recognized industry, money was easy, and speculation in real estate was rife. Thousands of strangers were arriving and passing through the city. Dr. Ames was the popular idol. He uniformed his police in military style and altogether conducted himself as king of the city. He even released prisoners at the request of political friends.

Evidently, when he was again elected mayor in 1900 he was unable to appreciate the changed conditions. He allowed gambling to run without control and his police force openly collected revenues. It was the sudden awakening of the public conscience through publicity that brought about the political downfall of the man so popular that at one time he was seriously considered as a candidate for the Democratic nomination as vice president of the United States.

His career was very picturesque and even when out of office, with the newspapers of the city against him, he kept himself in the public eye by the publication of a paper known as the News Letter, in which he lampooned his enemies, political and personal, with much vigor. Of late years he had conducted his practice of medicine quietly.

He was twice married, in 1862 to Miss Sarah Strout, daughter of Captain Strout of Minneapolis. There were three children, Effie F. Ames, the wife of Dr. W. E. Rockford, who survives him, and two sons, Charley C. and Frank E., both dead. His two brothers are living.

Dr. Ames was very prominent in fraternal organizations of the city. He served as worshipful master of Hennepin lodge, No. 4, A. F. and A. M.; high priest of St. John's chapter, No. 9, eminent commander of Zion commandery No. 2, Knights Templar; grand chancellor of the grand commandery of the Knights of Pythias of Minnesota; chancellor commander of Minneapolis lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias; supreme representative of the supreme lodge of the world, and was the first exalted ruler of Minneapolis lodge No. 44, B. P. O. E. He also was a member of George Morgan post, G. A. R.

BISHOP McGOLRICH IS HONORED.

Testimonial Banquet and Reception Is Tendered Prominent Churchman.

Duluth.—Four hundred Duluth people, Catholic and non-Catholics, did honor to Rt. Rev. James McGolrick, Bishop of Duluth, at a testimonial banquet at the Spalding hotel. The banquet was preceded by a reception. In the receiving line were Bishop McGolrick, Mrs. A. V. Kelly, president of the Bishops club, and the past presidents of the club. Rt. Rev. A. F. Schinner, Bishop of Superior, and Rt. Rev. Timothy Corbett, Bishop of Crookston, were present besides other members of the Catholic clergy from near-by towns. The speakers were Bishop McGolrick, Senator James P. Boyle, P. E. Dowling, Dr. E. L. Tuohy, and Rev. Hugh A. Floyd, pastor of Sacred Heart Cathedral.

The banquet was arranged by the Bishops club as a tribute to the Bishop who has been prominent not only in church work, but in art, literary and civic circles in Duluth during the 21 years in which he has been Bishop of the Diocese of Duluth.

MANKATO MALT HOUSE LEASED.

Chicago Men Take Over Minnesota Brewery.

Mankato.—S. J. Woolner and William Gottlieb, malt men of Chicago, have leased the local malt house, which has been idle for two or three months, and will reopen it this week, giving employment to fifteen men. Some extensive repairs and improvements are in progress. The malt will be shipped South and made into beer and whisky.

MURDER TRIAL ENDS.

Harvarth Acquitted at Elk River on a Plea of Self-Defense.

Elk River.—The jury in the case of Barlin Harvarth, who was tried here for murder in the second degree for killing Joseph Balogh at a wedding celebration two months ago, returned a verdict of not guilty. The defendant pleaded self-defense and the evidence went to substantiate his version of the quarrel and fight which ended in the death of Balogh.

CLEAR WHITTIER

BOARD OF CONTROL VOTES EXONERATION OF TRAINING SCHOOL HEAD.

OFFERS HIS RESIGNATION

Republican Member Agrees With Majority—They Admit Use of Whipping Machines and Hose Floggings.

St. Paul, Minn.—Frank A. Whittier, superintendent of the state training school for boys at Red Wing, was exonerated in the report of the board of control. After it had presented its report the board announced that it had received the resignation of Mr. Whittier. The resignation was dated Nov. 16.

C. J. Swendsen, Governor Eberhart's appointee on the board, agreed with his Democratic colleagues, Chairman Dingdal and C. E. Vasaly, to the extent the board could not lawfully remove Mr. Whittier, but he dissented from many of the reasons advanced by the board in support of retention of the superintendent.

His authority for this stand, he said, was the opinion of the attorney general. He also agreed with the majority that the superintendent had the right to exercise wide discretion in disciplinary methods; that no permanent injury was shown to have resulted from any of the punishments authorized and that no malice was shown in administering punishment.

The report is a document of 55 pages, divided into two parts. One part is signed by the Democratic majority and the other by Mr. Swendsen.

Governor Eberhart refused to comment on the findings. He refused to suggest what the next step in the controversy might be. It was clear that the action taken by Mr. Swendsen was a keen disappointment.

The action of the board puts the matter straight up to Governor Eberhart. The governor has promised to straighten conditions at Red Wing. The reported resignation of Superintendent Whittier and the fact that the members of the board are practically unanimous may indicate that a compromise arrangement has been reached, which will mean that the governor will refuse to act and the superintendent's resignation will close the matter.

Taking up the testimony of the various witnesses in detail who had charged excessive punishment the majority members took as the basis for the exoneration their belief that most of the whippings were proper and that a tendency to exaggerate had characterized the testimony offered. The vicious character of some of the witnesses and the necessity for severe punishment also was asserted.

Spanking Machine Admitted.

Speaking of the spanking machine which was first brought to the attention of the public by former Senator Andrew Stephens, of Crookston, the board admitted there was such a machine and said it was built under the direction of the board of control about 1903 and that it was used until July 5, 1905, when it was destroyed by fire.

The further admission was made that with the knowledge and consent of the board, Mr. Whittier also authorized the use of the paddle, also that a wet towel was applied to the naked body to prevent abrasions of the skin under the beatings which the boys received.

The use of a piece of rubber hose to whip girls in the girls' department was admitted. But the board said that no cruel, inhuman or excessive punishment was administered.

Thanks Are Exchanged.

In his letter of resignation Mr. Whittier said:

"Having received notice that I have been exonerated of the charges that were filed against me in May last, I hereby tender my resignation as superintendent, such resignation to take effect at your pleasure and convenience. I wish at this time to thank you for the constant support given me in the performance of my duties."

In its acceptance of the resignation the board complimented Mr. Whittier on his work.

Chairman Ringdal said the board would exercise much care in the selection of Mr. Whittier's successor and that similar institutions in other states would be visited with the view of securing ideas and suggestions looking to the betterment of the school at Red Wing. While on this tour the board will try to find a superintendent.

"Trouble Makers" At Minneapolis.

Minneapolis.—Those past masters in the art of amusing, Ward and Vokes, will be at the Bijou, Minneapolis, Thanksgiving Week, in the hilarious musical comedy the "Trouble Makers." They appear as suffragettes, and contending for the rights of women to the police force.

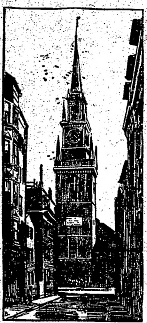
Corruption in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis police officers were asked by the mayor to hand in their resignations as the result of charges and countercharges of graft made by each against the other. None of the charges were substantiated, but were of such a nature that they could not be overlooked. The men affected are Lieutenant Henry A. Stanley and Detective George Bahan. Stanley has served 15 and Bahan 23 years on the force. Both resigned at once.

REPAIR PAUL REVERE CHURCH

"Old North" Edifice to Be Closed to the Public for a Year.

Boston.—Christ church, the Old North church, from the steeple of which were hung the lights which sent Paul Revere on his ride through Middlesex, is to be closed to the public for a year while the edifice is being rebuilt and made fireproof. The danger of the old church's being destroyed by fire has been a menace for years.



Old North Church.

"Hang a lantern aloft in the belfry arch," Longfellow makes Paul Revere say to his companion the night of the famous ride. A tablet on the wall of the church commemorates the famous incident. It reads:

The signal lanterns of Paul Revere
Displayed in the steeple of this church
April 18, 1775,
Warned the country of the march of the British troops to

BUTTRESSED TREE IN BRAZIL

One of Many Strange Forms of Tree Life Found in Brazilian Forests.

Tampa, Fla.—Brazil is wonderfully rich in forest resources at present practically untouched. Only a small portion of the country's vast forests have been explored and logging operations are carried on only at a few points on its great rivers.

The illustration shows an odd "buttressed" tree on the banks of the Amazon. It is only one of many strange forms of tree life in which Brazilian forests are rich. So vast is the extent of the Brazilian forests that botanists will have free scope for investigations for many years to come and when the railroads penetrate these great forests Brazil will be in a position to furnish the entire world with hardwood lumber of the finest quality.

SAID 'SWEETHEART' TO HORSE

New York Driver Who Says Other Animal Is Named "Darling" Is Dismissed.

New York.—As Mrs. Magdaline Petz and her husband of Brooklyn were crossing the street Samuel Rosen drove in a wagon.

"Step lively there, old sweetheart," Rosen called out.

So angered were Petz and his wife that they called Policeman Poole and had Rosen arrested. He was taken before Magistrate Breen.

"Why," Rosen protested; "I call one of my horses Darling and the other Sweetheart. I was just telling Sweetheart to gid-ap a little faster. I wasn't addressing the woman at all." He was discharged.

Woman Trapped in a Bed.

Kenton, Del.—Imprisoned for three days in a wrecked bed, Miss Elizabeth Graham was rescued just in time to save her life. She sat on the edge of the bed to undress when three slats gave way. The bed sank in the middle and closed upon her, holding her prisoner until neighbors came to the rescue three days later.

The HOME DEPARTMENT

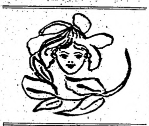
ONE'S OWN NOTEPAPER

IDEA PARTICULARLY PLEASING TO THE CHILDREN.

Hand-Painted Designs Easy of Accomplishment by Even the Very Smallest Members of the Household—Pictures to Copy.

When you were a child, did you ever have notepaper all your very own? If so, you will appreciate the joy in the receipt of a box of paper and envelopes, with designs especially made and painted by hand. Children are very fond of colored drawings. When they can be combined with letter paper, the little sketches are doubly valuable.

Here's a collection before you. You will purchase notepaper that comes in small sizes, and by aid of a carbon paper trace the little suggestions here shown. Place the carbon between this sheet and the letter paper and draw over the outline with a sharp pencil. There will be an impression left on the paper which will guide you in the coloring.

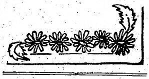


The little rose girl can be colored pink in the petals and green in the leaves. Make hair golden, the eyes blue, and color the cheeks a faint pink.

A long, oblong sketch is that which shows the sun peeping over the edge of a hill. Make Old Sol a bright yellow and the hill green. Line in the oblong and the features with ink.

Little sketches from magazines, newspapers, etc., will afford the working basis for your coloring. Watercolors or wax crayons will do the rest. The work is fascinating and the results will speak for themselves. If you doubt it just try a set for your favorite child.

Last is the long panel of flowers that should be drawn across the top of the first page of the paper. Delicate shades of blue, lavender, pink or yellow should be used for coloring the blossoms and pale green will finish the leaves.



These are merely suggestions that should point the way for other decorations.

New Champagne Color.

One of the questions that few are able to answer is, What will Dame Fashion think of next? The latest idea is to have the gloves in a dainty champagne color. These, in case one be in mode, are worn with the latest gowns of pure white lace or tailored, as the case may be. The scarf, too, which plays an important part in the present costume, is of the same shade, and if belt is worn it is of this color. The hat, too, can be of the shade, or its trimmings can show the fashion by their color. Crushed roses in the champagne tint are very pretty on a hat of the same pale tone.

OLD STYLES ARE REVIVED

Season's Shirt Waists Copied From Those That Were in Vogue a Generation Ago.

Lots of people now grown up remember as children a time when nearly all the Olympians of their particular households wore shirt waists of dark colored velveteen. One was washed and combed and taken to school by a waist of dark brown velveteen, fed with custard pie by a blue one, and upbraided and stood in the corner by a green one. One remembers counting little steel nubs all around the edge of the fancy buttons down its front, to divert one's mind when the storm raged. So now that this type of waist actually reappears it is promptly recognized as a belated reincarnation of an old style and identical with it, even to the very buttons down the front. Here it is, warm, comfortable and serviceable, ready to repeat all its vigorous morning exercise over another generation, which in its turn will probably be equally impressed.

Another ancient resurrection is the rather dressy stiff blouse, of large patterned braid, with brightly colored satin hair stripes running all about on the bias over blue and green or brown and red or plum and purple backbrounds. Unlike the velveteens, these waists admit of touches of trimming, flutings and silk buttons and lace necks and revers piped around with one of the colors of the stripes.

Shot silk is another popular material for waists. Some of these models deal largely in fine tucks.

Striped silks continue to tie on, scarf style, with a lining of plain color and a girdle tied in a good sized bow, either back, front or side.

The very good looking, plain, pocketed shirt of French flannel again answers this year's roll call. It is quite as expensive as far more elaborate silk blouses, because, to be possible at all, it must be most excellently tailored. This style is always present wherever people play golf or are in the habit of taking long tramps out into the country. In fact, one of these ought never to be left behind when going out of town for week ends. For the great fireplaces and furnaces in country houses are run by persons well used to the cold—who prefer it, in fact—and who won't understand if, to avoid sudden death from pneumonia, the city visitor keeps herself well wrapped in her sweater.

Ironing Handkerchiefs.

To make handkerchiefs that have been washed look like new, put a very thin starch in them after washing—just a suspicion of starch—and after they are dry, dampen slightly and let lie for half an hour.

Place them on the ironing board with the embroidered side down, if they are embroidered, and over them put an old thin piece of muslin. Press with a hot iron, fold and press—always under the muslin.

MANY NOVELTIES IN BELTS

Designers Have Surely Done Their Best in Devising Multitude of New and Pretty Things.

Belts are once more coming into fashion. In the newest models two colors of leather are used in combination. For instance, narrow red strips are quilted upon a white kid belt. In another very narrow belt, one and one-half inches wide, of navy blue leather, there is inserted red leather for the length of two and one-half inches. The leather or plain metal buckle matches the body of the belt. There are also belts of elastic velvet, with narrow strips of thin leather of contrasting shade. On wider descriptions of leather belts are seen fasteners of imitation precious stones. One of the latest novelties is a belt composed of quadrangular galalith stones connected by delicate gold chains or rods. The stones are hollowed out so as not to be too heavy, blue and red. The belt is finished off with a tassel of metal cord.

The wide elastic belt woven in a color to match the costume promises to be very much liked, as elastic molds without compressing the figure. The elastic belt is both an elegant ornament and a support to the figure, and is more original if accompanied by a cordeliere, or cord and tassels, tied at one side with ends of unequal length. Anything in the way of passementerie is a craze at present, and an elastic belt with ends of passementerie is a delightful novelty. Belts are also seen in gold and silver tinsel and in several tones of the metals as well.

My Lady of the North

THE LOVE STORY OF A GRAY JACKET

by RANDALL PARRISH

AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING"

Illustrations by Arthur T. Williamson

COPYRIGHT BY A. C. McCLURG & CO. -ENTERED AT STATIONERS' HALL, LONDON

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. The two, after a wild ride, get within the lines of the enemy. In the darkness, Wayne is taken for a Federal officer who came to keep an appointment, and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape but fails. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, one Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but Mrs. Bungay discovers him to be a disguised impostor, who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy. While a prisoner Wayne sees flies of Confederate pass and knows that Craig has delivered the message. He is brought before Sheridan, who refuses to set him free unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is given the choice of revealing the Lee message or of being shot as a spy. He is rescued by Jed Bungay.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.

That he meant every word he spoke I felt convinced, and his enthusiasm was contagious. My blood leaped within me at this call to action; all lethargy fled, and with it every deadening thought of her who had so suddenly woven about me the meshes of her power. False or true, maid, wife, or widow, my duty as a soldier to my commander and the army to which I belonged, blotted out all else. Even as this new rush of determination swept over me, above us there sounded clearly the dashing music of a military band in the strains of a Strauss's waltz, and we could distinguish the muffled shuffling of many feet on the oaken floor overhead. Caton's chance remark about the great ball to be given that evening by officers of the headquarters staff recurred to my memory.

"That dancing up there will help us, Jed," I said quickly, my mind now active to grasp every detail. "You say there is a chance for escape from your cell? Then give me your hand, and help me to crawl through that hole."

It was a narrow squeeze for a man of my size, yet I crept through without great difficulty, and found myself in the dense darkness of a room which, as I judged hastily from feeling about me, was similar in shape and extent to the one in which I had been confined. Bungay, however, permitted me little time for exploration. Grasping me firmly by the arm, and feeling his way along the wall, he groped across to the other side.

"There's a mighty big stone chimbly comes down yere, Cap," he whispered. "An' ther openin' ter take out soot an' ashes is up thar, jist b'low ther fluer. It's a sheet-iron pan, I reckon, ther way it feels; an' it must be thar they put a nigger in ter clean ther chimbly whin it gits stuffed up. I could git up thar alone, but I couldn't do no work, but thet thar pan ought ter cum out all right. Dew ye think ye cud hol' me up, Cap? I'm purty durn heavy."

I smiled in the darkness at the little fellow's egotism, and lifting him as I might a child, poised him lightly upon my shoulder. He struggled a moment to steady himself against the wall, and then I could feel him tugging eagerly at something which appeared to yield slowly to his efforts As he worked, a dense shower of dust and soot caused me to close my eyes.

"She's a comin' all right," he said, cheerfully, puffing with his exertions, "but I reckon as how this chimbly ain't bin cleaned out since ther war begun. Hold up yer right han', Cap, an' git a blame good grip on her, fer she's almighty full, an'll wanter go down sorter easy like."

I did as he suggested, bracing myself to meet his movements, as he stood straining on my shoulders, and in another moment I had succeeded in lowering the large sheet-iron pan silently to the floor.

"Room 'nough yere fer two men ter oncet," chuckled my companion, in rare delight. "'The chief in silence strode before.' Yere goes."

His weight left my shoulders; there was a slight scramble, another shower of dirt, then the sound of his voice once more.

"Lift up yer han's, Cap; dig in yer toes on ther stones, an' we'll begin our v'ge."

He grasped my wrists with a strength which I had no conception the little fellow possessed. There was a moment's breathless struggle, and I squirmed through the opening, and lay panting on the flat slabs which composed the foot of the great funnel. To afford me more room Bungay had gone up a little, finding foot-lodgment upon the uneven stones of which the chimney was constructed. For a moment we rested thus motionless, both breathing heavily and listening to the music and shuffling of feet now almost upon a level with our heads.

The noise, which was strong and continuous, rendered discovery from any misstep highly improbable, and as delay was dangerous neither of us was disposed to linger long.

"Be ye all ready, Cap?" questioned Bungay, bending his head down. "Fer if ye be, I'm a goin' up."

"All right," I answered, struggling to my knees in the narrow space; "only take it slow, Jed. I'm a trifle bigger man than you, and this is rather close quarters."

"Wal, yes, maybe a matter of a poun' er two," he retorted, and the next moment I could hear him scraping his way upward, feeling for foothold upon the irregular layers of stone. I followed, pressing my knees firmly against the rough wall, and trusting more to my hands than feet for security against falling. There was evidently a fireplace of some kind on the first floor, with a considerable opening leading from it into the chimney we were scaling, for as Jed slowly passed, I could perceive a sudden gleam of light streaming across his face from the glare of the lamps within. He glanced anxiously that way, but did not pause in his steady climb upward.

A moment later I came opposite that same beam of radiance, and cautiously peered down the sloped opening that led to the disused fireplace. All I could perceive was a pair of legs, evidently those of a cavalry officer, judging from the broad yellow stripe down the seam of the light-blue trousers, and the high boots ornamented with rowel spurs. He stood leaning carelessly against the mantel, talking with some one just beyond the range of my vision.

At that moment the music ceased suddenly, and afraid to proceed until it should strike up again, I braced myself securely on a projecting stone and bent my head over the orifice until I could catch a portion of the conversation being carried on by my unconscious neighbors.

"No," said the cavalryman, gruffly, and apparently in reply to some previous question, "the fellow was most devilish obstinate; wouldn't tell the first thing; even a threat of treating him as a spy and hanging him outright proved of no avail. But Sheridan's theory is that Lee has ordered Longstreet to hit our rear, while he makes a direct attack in front. That's why the 'old man' proposes to get in his work first, and we march at daylight to form connection with Hancock. By Jove, Chesley, but that woman in black over there with Follansbee is the handsomest picture I've seen south of the line. Mark how her eyes sparkle, and how prettily the light gleams in her hair. Who is she, do you chance to know?"

"Yes," lisped the other, languidly, "met her at breakfast, headquarters, this morning. Deuced pretty and all that, mighty good style, too, but taken, old man. She's Brennan's."

"What! not Major Brennan?" in surprise. "Why, he's always posed as a bachelor among our fellows."

"Don't know anything 'bout that, dear boy," indifferently, "but the lady came in with him yesterday, was introduced to the crowd of us as Mrs. Brennan, and he called her Edith. Deuced nice name, Edith. As Brennan has shown such poor taste as to be absent to-night, I am inclined to give a little of my time to his lady. Far and away the prettiest thing here. Well, so long, Somers; see you in the morning. I'm going to give the fair Edith a whirl."

The cavalry legs shifted their position; the band resumed its functions, and in the renewed activity and noise I began again the toilsome climb, my mind now a bewildered chaos between my plain duty to Lee and my nearly uncontrollable desire to meet once more the woman who was dancing in the room below.

The little mountaineer, as active as a cat, and not especially hampered by lack of room in which to work, was well above me by this time. The chimney, acting as a tube, brought down to me from time to time the slight noise of his climbing, varied by an occasional exclamation or comment, but I could perceive no other evidence of his presence. Above, all was as black as the grave.

"Holy smoke!" he ejaculated, probably unaware that he was giving utterance to his thoughts. "That was a sharp rock! Durn if thar's a inch o' skin left on my knee. Ough! stop thet! who's got hold o' my fut?"

"Hush your racket, you little fool," I said angrily. "Do you want the whole Yankee army to trap us here like rats? I cannot get up this chimney any further; it is growing too small to permit my body to pass."

"Is thet so, Cap?" he asked anxiously. "Whut be ye goin' ter dew 'bout it?"

I made no answer for a moment; I was groping about in the darkness of our narrow quarters to see if I could determine exactly where we were.

"How high is this house, Jed, do you know?"

"Three stories an' attic."

"How far up are we?"

"'Bout halfway 'long ther third story, I reckon; must be jist b'low whar ye are thet I stuck my fut down an openin'. Reckon it was 'nother fireplace, like thet one on ther first flure."

I lowered myself silently, and felt along the stones until I located the opening, and roughly measured its dimensions.

"I shall have to risk crawling out here, Jed," I said finally, "for I shall surely stick fast if I go up another ten feet. Do you suppose you can squeeze through to the top?"

"I reckon I kin," he returned calmly. "But hadn't we better stick tergether, Cap?"

"No," I answered firmly. "You go on, and one of us must get through to Lee. Don't mind me at all; get down from the roof as best you can. If I am caught it will be all the more important that you should succeed."

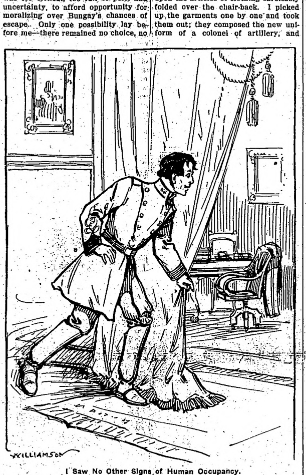
"'T is done—I thank thee, Roderick, for the word; it nerves my heart, it steels my sword.'"

Even as he spoke I could hear him creeping steadily upward. It soon became evident that his progress was growing slower, more difficult. Then all sounds above me ceased, and I knew he must have attained the roof in safety.

CHAPTER XIV.

I Became a Colonel of Artillery.

My own situation at this moment was too critical, too full of peril and uncertainty, to afford opportunity for moralizing over Bungay's chances of escape. Only one possibility lay before me—there remained no choice, no necessity for planning. It was pure luck which pries open most doors of life, and it was upon luck alone I must rely now. I have often wondered since how I ever succeeded in squeezing my body through that narrow opening into the empty fireplace without at least knocking over something during the difficult passage. But I did manage, working my way down slowly, creeping inch by inch like a snake, carefully testing each object I touched in the darkness for fear of its proving loose, until I finally lay stretched at full length upon what was evidently, from its feeling, a carpet of unusually fine texture.



I Saw No Other Signs of Human Occupancy.

The room proved to be an inner one and unlighted, a bedchamber, as I soon determined, for my outstretched hands encountered the posts of a bed. Then a slight gust of air partially swept aside a hanging curtain, which rustled like silk, and I caught a brief glimpse of the adjacent parlor. It was likewise unillumined, but the door leading into the front hall stood ajar, and through that opening there poured a stream of radiance, together with the incessant hum of many voices in animated conversation, the deep blare of the band, with the ceaseless movement of dancing feet.

Satisfying myself by sense of touch that the bed was unoccupied, for I was far too experienced a soldier to leave an enemy in my rear, I crept cautiously forward to the intercepting curtain, and drawing it aside took careful survey of the outer apartment. It was a large and handsomely furnished room, a polished mahogany writing-table littered with papers occupying a prominent position against the farther wall. A swivel chair stood beside it, and across its back hung what appeared to be a suit of clothing. I saw no other signs of human occupancy.

Convinced that the apartment was deserted, and discovering no different means of egress, I crossed the room on tiptoe, and peered cautiously out into the hall. It was not a pleasing prospect to one in my predicament. The lower portion, judging from the incessant hum of voices, was filled with people, who were either unable to find place within the crowded ballroom, or else preferred greater retirement for conversation. Even the wide stairway had been partially preempted; a young lieutenant, as I judged from his shoulder-straps, sitting just beneath the landing, whispered eagerly into the attentive ear of a pronounced blonde who shared the broad carpeted step with him.

I drew back noiselessly, to figure out the situation and determine what was best for me to attempt. It would be sheer madness to venture upon a passage to the front door, clad as I was in travel-worn gray uniform; to rush through that jam was impossible. If I were to wait until the dance was concluded the later hours of the night might indeed yield me somewhat clearer passage, yet it was hardly probable that the house, used as I knew it to be for a military prison, would be left unguarded. Besides, such delay must absolutely prevent my getting beyond the Federal picket lines before daybreak, and would hence render valueless the news I sought to bear to Lee.

I moved to the only window and glanced out; it opened upon the back of the house and presented a sheer drop to the ground. At the slight noise of the moving sash a sentry standing at the corner glanced up suspiciously. Evidently each side of the great building was abundantly protected by patrols.

Something had to be attempted, and at once. The room I was in bore unquestionable evidence of recent occupancy, and at any moment might be re-entered. My searching eyes fell upon the articles of clothing carelessly folded over the chair-back. I picked up the garments one by one and took them out; they composed the new uniform of a colonel of artillery, and were resplendent with bright red facings and a profusion of gold braid. With all my soul I loathed the thought of disguise, and especially the hated uniform of the enemy. It was repugnant to every instinct of my being, and would certainly mean added degradation and danger in the event of capture.

Yet I saw no other way. Sheridan, Brennan, Caton, the three who would certainly recognize me on sight, I was assured were absent, although they might return at any moment. The greater reason for haste, the less excuse for delay. But if I should chance to run foul of the rightful owner of the garments amid that crush below, and he should recognize them, what then? I stood close beside the writing-table as I revolved these considerations rapidly in mind, and my eye chanced to fall upon an open paper. It was an official order, bearing date at 5 p. m. that same day, commanding Colonel Culbertson to move his battery at once down the Kendallville pike, and report to Brigadier-General Knowls for assignment to his brigade. Evidently the new dress uniform had been carefully brushed and laid out to be worn at the ball that evening; the sudden receipt of this order had caused the owner to depart hastily in his service dress, vigorously expressing his feelings, no doubt, while his servant, now enjoying liberty below stairs, had neglected to pack up his master's things.

This knowledge was the straw which decided me; I would chance it. Hastily I drew on the rich blue and red over my old gray, adding the dress sword I had discovered in a closet, and then, wondering curiously what sort of figure I might cut in all these fine habiliments, sought a glance at myself within a mirror hanging upon the bedroom wall. Faith! but it was God's mercy that I did!

Such a face as grinned at me from that glass, peering over the high-cut, decorated collar, would surely have created a genuine sensation in those rooms below. Serious as my situation was, I laughed at the thought of it until tears ran down my cheeks, leaving white streaks the full length of them; for no chimney-sweep in the full tide of his glorious career was ever worse sooted and begrimed. I thought of the elegantly dressed lieutenant and the blonde young lady upon the stairs—surely they would have supposed the very devil himself was coming down.

It took me nearly a quarter of an hour to get myself tolerably clean, and I could not have done that had I not used some grease that was upon the stand. At the end, however, I stepped back from the glass confident that with good luck I should run the gantlet safely.

Just as I prepared to step forth a new thought occurred to me—who was I? If questioned, as was highly probable, how could I account for my presence? Who should I pretend to be? I turned over the mass of papers lying before me on the table. They were mostly accounts and detailed orders about which I cared nothing, but finally my search was rewarded by the discovery of a recent army list. I ran my eyes hastily down the artillery assignments—Barry, Sommers, Fitzmorris, Sloan, Reilly. Ah, there at last was exactly what I wanted—"Patrick L. Curran, Colonel Sixth Ohio Light Artillery, McRobert's Division, Thomas's Corps, assigned special service, staff Major-General Halleck, Washington, D. C."

"Curran, Sixth Ohio"—good; and the other? I glanced again at the open order. "Culbertson, Fourteenth Pennsylvania." I would remember those names, and with a jaunty confidence in my success, born of thorough preparation, I stepped to the open door and strode forth into the brilliantly lighted hall. Barring the single accident of encountering a possible acquaintance in the throng below, I felt fully capable of deceiving his Satanic Majesty himself.

CHAPTER XV.

At the Staff Officers' Ball.

The young officer glanced up hastily at sound of approaching footsteps, and rose to his feet to permit of my passage. He wore the full dress uniform of an artilleryman, and his evident surprise at my presence made me realize the necessity of addressing him.

"Lieutenant," I asked courteously, resting one hand easily upon the balustrade, "could you inform me if General Sheridan and those members of the staff who accompanied him down the lines this afternoon have yet returned?"

"They have not, sir."

"Ah, I was in hopes they might have arrived by this time."

I bowed to them both, and passed slowly down the wide stairway, several couples rising as I drew near to permit of my passage. The lower hall was very comfortably filled with figures moving here and there in converse, or occupying seats pressed close against the walls. The greater portion were attired in uniforms of the various branches of service, yet I observed not a few civilian suits, and a considerable number of women, some wearing the neat dress of the army nurse, others much more elaborately attired—daughters of the neighborhood, probably, with a sprinkling of wives and sisters of the soldiery. Guards, leaning upon their muskets, stood in statuesque poses on either side of the main entrance, while the wide archway, draped with flags, opening into the ballroom, revealed an inspiring glimpse of swiftly revolving figures in gay uniforms and flashing skirts. Over all floated the low, swinging music of the band.

A fat, good-natured-looking man of forty, an infantry major, but wearing staff decorations, and evidently officiating in the capacity of floor-manager, after whispering a word in the ear of another of the same kind beside the ballroom door, hastily pushed his way through the laughing throng directly toward me.

"Good-evening, Colonel," he said, bowing deeply. "Your face is not familiar to me, but you will permit me to introduce myself—Major Monsoon, of General Sheridan's staff."

I accepted the fat, shapeless hand he extended, and pressed it warmly.

"I was just meditating a retreat, Major, when you appeared," I replied frankly. "For I fear my face is equally unknown to all others present. Indeed, I feel like a cat in a strange garret, and hesitated to appear at all. My only excuse for doing so was a promise made Colonel Culbertson previous to his being ordered out on duty. I am Colonel Curran, of the Sixth Ohio, but at present serving on the staff of General Halleck at Washington."

The Major's round, red face glowed with welcome.

"Extremely pleased to meet you, indeed," he exclaimed eagerly, "and you may be sure of a cordial greeting. Will you kindly step this way?"

As we slowly elbowed our way forward, all desire to escape from the ordeal fled, and I assumed the risks of the masquerade with the reckless audacity of my years. Before we reached the ballroom my conductor, his fat countenance fairly beaming with cordiality, had stopped at least twenty times to present me to various military titles, and I had accepted innumerable invitations without in the least knowing who gave them, or where they were to be fulfilled. Finally, however, we broke through the massed ring, and succeeded in reaching the tall individual in spectacles to whom the Major had spoken previous to seeking me, and I learned through the introduction which followed that I was in the presence of Brigadier-General Carlton, chief of staff.

The AWAKING of the OLDER NATIONS

Tower of Babel Is Again in Use—Mesopotamia's Reclamation—Sir William Willcock's Great Project Now in Course of Realization.

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Babylon.—Possibly the greatest present project of civilization, and certainly the most romantic, the reclamation of Mesopotamia, is now in course of actual realization. During the time of my sojourn in Mesopotamia the papers providing for the construction of these vast irrigation works were signed by the Turkish government and Sir John Jackson, the distinguished British engineer, to whom the carrying on to completion of the imperial project of Sir William Willcocks has been entrusted. Sir John has left one of his consulting engineers in charge at Bagdad, and the other men of his staff are either already here or on the way. The magnificent conception of Sir William Willcocks, to give back to civilization the fertile land between the Tigris and the Euphrates, which was the birthplace of history, and the home of teeming millions of people, is no longer a dream.

So dramatic an event as the rehabilitation of this once-fertile land, now become a desert, is found to be full of startling aspects. Not the least of these I discovered when I came to Babylon and saw that what the archaeologists are agreed upon as the remains of the Tower of Babel is now practically a hole in the ground; and when I went out to the Hindia Barrage, where the Willcocks engineers are at work, I saw the bricks from the Tower of Babel being ground up into powder to make cement for the foundations of the new barrage. There is a measure of fitness in this ancient tower of deliverance being used to help save the land from its thirsty aridity. Lest anybody accuse Sir William of being an iconoclast, it may be said that the bricks were taken from their original site 30 years ago by the Turkish government, which tried to build a dam that would send the waters of the Euphrates once more past Babylon, or, what meant more to it, past the modern town of Hillah.

Making the Garden of Eden Bloom.

Sir William Willcocks, like all archaeologists and students of the Bible, locates the Garden of Eden in the Tigris-Euphrates delta. Sir William fixes the site at a point west of Hit, the famous springs from which both antiquity and modern times secured vast supplies of bitumen. These smoking and forbidding regions are said by some to have given the ancients their figure of the angels with the flaming swords at the gates of the garden.

No doubt is entertained by the archaeologists that it was in this region that civilization had its birth. Here were the great empires of antiquity. From beneath the drifted dust and silting mud of Mesopotamia the scholars with spades are digging up the wonderful stories of Babylon, Niffur, Tello, Ninevah and Asshur, while other "tells," or mounds, such as mark the site of Ur of the Chaldees, the city of Abraham's ancestors, await the coming of archaeological expeditions.

The Garden Made a Desert.

As every traveler in this part of the world has remarked, the Moslem is not a builder, but a waster. The statement is commonly made concerning the Arab, but it is equally true of the Turk. It seems as if the fatalism and physical excesses of Mohammedanism cut the nerve of initiative and endeavor. Certainly the followers of the Prophet found this region a garden; but they have made it a desert. I have traveled over a considerable part of Mesopotamia, by kelek, horse, wagon, donkey, small boat and afoot. Everywhere the same story is repeated. It is all poverty, ruin and desolation. The Arabs live in the same black tents that Solomon sang about, or else in miserable mud hovels. They have none of the conveniences of civilization. Life is a hand-to-mouth existence. The appliances of agriculture are primitive beyond belief—a small triangular shovel, a little hoe about the size and shape of an adze, and a sharpened stick for a plow.

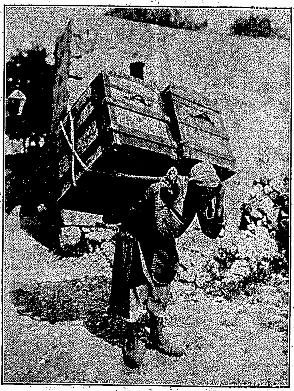
Only a small strip of territory, lying along the rivers, or the few subsidiary canals that remain, is cultivated. Water is raised by the "cherit," a leather bucket let down to the stream, and hauled up by oxen, donkeys, camels or cows. The process is cumbersome, expensive and inadequate. In a few places oil engines and pumps made in Britain and America, have displaced the cumbersome cherit, and it seems inevitable that they should become general in the new day that is dawning for Mesopotamia.

Back of these cultivated areas lies the Mesopotamia desert. I have traversed sections of it where not a plant bigger than the camel thorn could be seen. It looks quite as desolate as the sandy Arabian desert to the west of the Euphrates. Yet it is every foot good gray earth, friable and productive, needing only water to make it pour forth crops to enrich the markets of civilization and to deliver the present population from dire poverty. And the water is still available, as fully as it was when this region was the world's granary.

"The Father of the Nile dams," Sir William Willcocks, who has also had extensive experience in irrigation work in India, has for years been calling the attention of the world to the irrigation possibilities of the delta of the Euphrates and the Tigris. There is no good reason why the ancient productiveness of this district should not be restored. The water is still available, and the soil is as good as ever it was. The only reason for its ancient productiveness—which was so great that Herodotus was afraid to describe it in full lest his veracity be questioned—was the system of canals maintained by the peoples of old.

It is to be remembered that the dense populations which filled this delta in a former time were not savages or barbarians; they represented alike the beginnings and the high water mark of ancient civilization. Greece and Rome were the heirs of this Eastern culture. Here it was that many of the fundamental inventions of civilization had their origin. It was here that wheat and barley were first domesticated. Some of the sciences took their rise in this part of the world. A code of laws as old, or older, than the Mosaic, is now known to have prevailed in this Babylonian civilization.

For the present it is enough to recall that a complete and wonderful system of canals covered all the land known as lower Mesopotamia. Nothing like it is known in modern times; engineers have freely conceded high praise to this achievement. Not until Sir William Willcocks took up the subject, from high humanitarian motives, was the re-establishment of the Babylonian canals ever seriously considered. His preliminary observations led him to broach the question, and five years ago he undertook, on behalf of the Turkish government, whose interest he had enlisted, the actual mapping out and beginning of a canal system. This he has done for a nominal salary, which has straightway gone back into the project. In some cases the lines of the old canals, which to this day are the outstanding feature of Mesopotamian scenery, are followed. In others, newer methods, made possible by modern engineering skill, are employed.



Mode of Carrying Baggage.

A Livelihood for New Millions.

The Willcocks operations, which the engineering firm of Sir John Jackson take over at the first of April, provide for two great works to be completed in less than three years. One of these is the Hindia Barrage, which will cause once more to flow "the rivers of Babylon," now practically dry, and the Habbania Escape, further up the Euphrates, at Ramadi. When these have been completed, with their incidental canals (and the Hindia Barrage may be ready in a year and a half), three million acres of land that is at present arid, will be available for cultivation. The only real obstacle feared by those engaged in the work is the lack of stablemindedness of the Turkish government, and its depleted treasury. This latter point is covered, it is understood in these parts, by the terms of the contract with Sir John Jackson, who practically finances the undertaking, recouping himself from the income off the new lands, receiving what is equivalent to seven per cent. on the investment.

At present the area affected by the irrigation project contains about a million and a half of population. These are mostly poor Arabs, who subsist on a pittance, so that thousands of them are glad to get work on the new canals and barrages at 12 cents a day. The women and children make even less than this, while some of the foremen and picked workmen receive as much as 25 cents a day. All, however, are learning, to a degree, the habits of steady industry which will stand them in stead when they come to take up the land that is being redeemed by their present labors. Sir William Willcocks is authority for the statement that there should be a livelihood for twelve million people in the reclaimed area.

Where these extra ten and a half millions of population are to come from gives concern to some students of the scheme, inasmuch as the Young Turks refuse to admit any settlers who will not become Turkish subjects. Otherwise the surplus peoples of India and Egypt, already trained to work on irrigated land, would quickly find their way here. It is not at all unlikely that within the next three years the chauvinistic Young Turks will have had a chastening that will remove this difficulty. In any case there are the industrious Kurds of the mountains who would flock down in numbers, while the Moslem Persians have no scruples against exchanging their present sovereign for the caliph of all the faithful. Then there is the not unreasonable prospect that the roving Bedouin will settle down to agriculture, when conditions become more stable in the land.

Is This Germany's Chance?

At present the delta is a land of lawlessness. Some of the tribes along the lower reaches of the two rivers are little better than sheer savages. Everybody carries a gun or a stout cudgel, with a ball of pitch on the end. The lack of safety for the farmer is one reason for the abandonment of the old irrigation works. The new government, however, has vigorously undertaken the disarmament of the people and the establishment of law and order. If it succeeds in this a greater obstacle to the prosperity of Mesopotamia than any that confronts the engineers will have been overcome.

Some persons there are who say that Germany should be permitted to fulfill her ambitions in this region. Everybody knows that a primary consideration in the building of the Bagdad railway is to give Germany access to the wheat and cotton fields of Mesopotamia. Here lies the potential granary which Germany so much needs. Here, too, may be grown the cotton for which her spindles are hungry. In all her projects looking toward the Persian gulf she has been hindered by Great Britain and Russia.

Now a school of British statesmen, among whom Sir William Willcocks may be counted, have arisen to ask for Germany the outlet that she so sorely needs. At present she is bottled up. It is this very repression, argue the men of this new school, which makes Germany a menace to the peace of Europe and the world. Give her a legtimate outlet for her energies, and she will cease to keep the statesmen of other nations awake at night. Let her take on Mesopotamia, or a large part of it, and she will have troubles enough right at hand, as well as a field for the labors of her surplus population. It would be inconsonance with the ideals of the twentieth century, and in particular with those of Sir William Willcocks, if the great dream, and equally great achievements of this Briton, aided by others of King George's subjects, should be instrumental in delivering his country from the peril of German militarism, while at the same time doing an incalculable service to humanity.

Back to the Garden of Eden.

The immediate results of the new irrigation are fairly staggering. The land which within three years will be calling for settlers will, according to Sir William, be capable at once of producing a million tons of wheat and two million hundredweight of cotton, not to mention rice, dates, beans, barley, oats, melons, etc. Sir William has figured out an entire scheme for the most profitable order of crops. This scheme is at the present moment visualized in mountains of new-piled earth, great canals, throbbing engines, growling stone-crushers, thumping pile-drivers (which use Lackawanna piles), and regiments of slow and singing Arab laborers. Here are in prospect the freights of the new Bagdad railway.

Basket Ball Game and Dance.

A basket ball game and dance was held last night by the Plummer Athletic association for the purpose of raising funds with which to buy suits, paraphernalia, etc. The basket ball game was played between Oklee and the local team.

A very large crowd is reported a having been present at both the basket ball game and the dance and a good time is reported.

The music was furnished by an orchestra from Red Lake Falls.

The publication day of the Pioneer will in a short time be changed from Saturday to Friday morning. This we think is advisable, as at the present time farmers who reside some distance from the village sometimes do not get their paper until the week following.

Blunders by Novelists.

Novelists, even of eminence, are prone to make blunders. Sir Walter Besant in "For Faith and Freedom" wrote after the Eykins had settled in Providence, "Barnaby soon grew tired of this quiet life and went on board a steamer bound for England, promising that we should hear from him." This was in 1686 or 1687, and the first steamer from America to this country did not reach Liverpool till July, 1819. Wilkie Collins also made numerous amazing blunders. In "The Duel In Herne Wood" he makes the story open with the receipt of a telegram, and the period is 1817, when twenty years had to elapse before the first telegraphic wire was laid. Three of the characters also talk of "taking the express train to London" in defiance of the fact that the first railway to London was not opened till 1838.

Two Seats In the Aisle.

On a visit of John W. Gates to New York shortly before his last trip abroad he was discussing Wall street speculation and how dull it was with a friend who sometimes takes a flier in the market himself.

"Let me see," said the friend; "it was five years ago that a Stock Exchange seat brought $97,000. Now one can be got for $75,000."

"Seventy-five thousand dollars!" shouted Gates. "If a man went down to the exchange with $75,000 real money he could get two seats on the middle aisle."—New York Sun.

The Jenny Lind Rock.

The Ohio river claims among its treasures the Jenny Lind rock. The singer was a passenger on a steamer which struck on a sand bar near the rock, and while waiting for the boat to be floated Miss Lind had boatmen row her out to the rock, where she stood alone and sang a song.

Of Course.

In the bankruptcy court I once heard a witness asked the amount of his gross income. "Me gross income, is it? Sure an' I'd have ye know that I have no gross income. I'm a fisherman, an' me income is all net," was the astonishing reply.—Green Bag.

A Queer Customer.

"Mandy," said the village tailor to his wife, "I'm going to give Sam Billings a suit of clothes for a pig."

"My goodness, papa!" exclaimed his little daughter. "What does a pig want with a suit of clothes?"—New York Times.

THE HORSEMAN.

In order to have a horse stand while you are getting into the wagon never touch him with the whip until you are ready to go.

Wheat bran and oats are what make the bones strong in a colt.

Hay should never be combed from the horses' locks with a currycomb. It makes them nervous.

Colts and mares which have been on pasture all summer should be fed a little grain daily for two or three weeks before they are changed to dry feed for the winter.

If possible every horse stall should be six feet wide and nine feet long, for then the animal can turn around and lie down comfortably. The floor, too, should be nearly level.

Never try to get a horse to eat more salt by mixing it with his grain. Put it before him clear and nature will tell him how much to eat.

BLUE GRASS FOR BEEF.

Interesting Experiment In Feeding at the Missouri Station.

It remained for the Missouri experiment station to conduct a careful test showing what feeds could be most economically used in connection with blue grass, says Orange Judd Farmer. The work was done under the direction of Professor F. B. Mumford. The main object of the experiment was to determine how to most rapidly increase the weight of cattle during their fattening period and also how to improve the quality of the beef. Representatives of the Hereford, Shorthorn and Angus breeds were used in this test. They were good cattle and were high grades, containing from one-half to seven-eighths pure blood.

The average of the five years' work shows that where nitrogenous supplementary feeds were used with young cattle, the rate of gain was greater than when corn alone constituted the sole grain ration. This is in line with other tests of the kind and was to be expected. One explanation given by Professor Mumford is that the larger gains resulted because of the palatability of the supplementary ration, resulting in the consumption of larger quantities of feed. It was quite fully demonstrated that it is highly profitable to feed at least a limited amount of nitrogenous food during the latter stages of the feeding period, particularly to cattle that have been receiving a grain ration consisting of corn only.

The character of the food had a great deal to do with the quality of the beef, as shown by slaughter tests. It was found that where nitrogenous rations were used, the beef was of a higher character than when corn alone was fed. It was also found that more uniform and consistent gains resulted from the feeding of some nitrogenous material. Then, too, the fatter the animal the more efficient relatively were nitrogenous feeds.

The most interesting and important part of the entire test was the relative cost of gains with the different feeds. It was not surprising, therefore, when it was found that the ration containing nitrogen invariably cost more than the ration of corn alone. Furthermore, the relative cost of each 100 pounds of gain was less from the lots receiving shelled corn than from the lots receiving rations in which nitrogen formed a part. The greater rapidity of the gain, however, the higher quality of the product more than offset this difference of cost.

Professor Mumford concludes with the statement that the results of the experiment for many years and with various kinds of cattle clearly indicate the great value of nitrogenous feeds in maintaining the appetite and in securing satisfactory gains during the latter part of the feeding period.

With many of the western breeders and fatteners the Aberdeen-Angus breed of beef cattle is a warm favorite. They are gentle and docile, adapted to early maturity, are very hardy and will withstand adverse conditions as well as other breeds. The cattle are extra good rustlers and thrive well on roughage alone. They are good breeders, and the mothers supply sufficient milk to raise their calves. The steers are second to none for the feed lot, and in looking over prize winners at various shows it will be found that the Angus are there with the goods. The Angus cow herewith pictured is an excellent type of the breed.

The Self Sucking Cow.

The nuisance of a self sucking cow can be prevented by taking a piece of tough wood about the size of a hoe handle and long enough to reach from the ring in her halter to a surcingle placed around her body just back of the fore legs. With the stick passed between her fore legs and fastened to the girth the cow cannot get her head back to her teats, but she can graze or drink water without any trouble.

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured.

A NEW BRIDGE TO SPAN RIVER

Will Be Located Just West of Creamery and Saw Mill.

A meeting of the citizens of Plummer was held last Wednesday evening for the purpose of considering the advisability of building a bridge across the Clearwater river just west of the creamery and abandon the old structure by the dam. This matter has been discussed at various times as the latter bridge is reported in a bad shape and unless it is repaired it would in all probability be condemned against public traffic before a very long time.

It was the unanimous opinion of everyone present that inasmuch as a large amount of money would eventually have to be expended on the old bridge for repairs that the favorable thing to do is to erect a new bridge and instructed the village council to draw up a petition to be presented to the county commissioners at their next regular meeting.

The proposed site is an ideal location for a bridge as this will make it a lot more convenient for the farmers residing out west to enter the village. The road running west to the river has been made into a very good piece of highway and only a small stretch of road will have to be built and this will be over the Pleth property just west of the river, thence connecting with the main road.

Right-of-way over the Pleth property has been given in case the road is built.

COMMERCIAL CLUB FOR PLUMMER

Progressive Citizens to Start "Boost" Campaign for Plummer.

Plummer has joined the ranks of the more progressive towns of the state and has organized a commercial club. Last Wednesday at the meeting called for the purpose of considering the bridge question the sentiment of the citizens in regard to the organization of a commercial club for the village was taken, and it was the desire of everyone present that Plummer should be represented by an organization of that kind.

Plummer, like many other cities and villages who are not represented by a commercial club are letting many opportunities of securing industries of various kinds slip into oblivion by reason of the fact there is no one to directly take hold and push the thing thru.

A list of about twenty-one members was drawn up who assigned their willingness to join, or who are sure to join at the next meeting, as a few of those mentioned below as well as a number of others were absent from the meeting. The list follows:

O. J. Johnson, Tom Norby, E. B. Lanager, O. H. Langlie, Edw. Johnson, S. J. Rice, J. A. Carlson, H. J. Hugget, Wm. Bottineau, N. A. Nelson, Aug. Anderson, James Alrick, E. A. Hermanson, H. J. Enderle, Julius Pleth, G. J. Hagen, John Rice, Oscar Carlson, E. L. Wichterman, G. A. Krueger and Dr. Clark.

A committee of three was also appointed to draw up the by-laws to govern the organization, and are H. J. Enderle, E. A. Hermanson and Wm. Bottineau.

The first meeting will be held next Wednesday evening, Dec. 13, in the city hall, at which time the election of officers will be held and the by-laws will be submitted for their approval.

It is the desire of the organization to have every business man present at the next meeting and if not already a member to become one at this time.

Band Organized.

The first meeting of the Plummer brass band was held in the Anderson Bros. restaurant last Tuesday evening, at which time the organization was almost completed and ways and means by which to raise funds to buy some instruments which are lacking was also discussed. It was thought advisable to take up a subscription among the people of Plummer to meet the immediate expenses to get the thing established and later to give a dance or social for the further advancement of funds.

Another meeting was held last night for the purpose of sending away for instruments.

Fats and Leans Next.

Such unquestionable skill at basket ball was shown on the part of some of the fatter men of this village at the business men's meeting last Wednesday evening that there is some talk of arranging a game between the fats and the leans in the near future. The leans, however, have not as yet illustrated their ability so the outcome of the match is just merely a matter of speculation, but the fats assert that they are not to be beaten so now it is up to the leans.

BLACKSMITH SHOP BURNS

Oklee Visited By a Fire Early Monday Morning.

Explosion of Gasoline Engine Is The Cause of Fire.

The Ole Lundtvedt blacksmith shop at Oklee was totally destroyed by fire early Monday morning, the fire having commenced about nine o'clock. The fire originated from the explosion of a gasoline engine when Mr. Lundtvet was in the act of starting it up and the fire spread quickly to all parts of the room and the building was soon enveloped in a mass of flames. Outside of a few slight burns about the hands and face Mr. Lundtvedt escaped any injury.

All efforts on the part of the fire fighters to extinguish the flames proved futual and the building was soon a heap of ashes.

Fear was entertained for some of the adjoining buildings, but the fire was kept from spreading and no other damage was done.

Basket Ball Game and Dance Well Attended.

The basket ball game between the Gully and Plummer teams last Friday night which was followed by a dance was well attended. The basket ball game resulted, after a heated contest, in a score of 16 to 7 in favor of the visitors, but both teams faught hard for first honors and the game proved to be very interesting.

The dance which immediately followed the game was very well attended and drew in addition to the large number among the local people, also quite a crowd from Thief River Falls, Oklee, Brooks and other points.

The ball game and dance were given by the Plummer Athletic Assn. for the purpose of raising funds to buy suits for the basket ball team and other paraphernalia, and netted them a neat sum of money.

Barber For Plummer.

Plummer no longer has to worry over the lack of a tonsorial artist, as last Tuesday the Plummer barber shop was again opened to the public under the management of Mr. R. E. Agnew, of Mahnomen. Mr. Agnew was advised of the opening here on reading an item to that effect in the PIONEER last week, and arrived here Tuesday morning to look over the field. He was favorably impressed with the town and made arrangements to rent the barber shop immediately. He is well pleased with his new location and has during his short stay here done a good business. Mr. Agnew comes well recommended as a first-class barber and is capable of giving the public the best of service in his line.

TAKES UP TRUST PROBLEM

Only Matter Touched On In President's Message to Congress

Additional Legislation to Strengthen Present Statutes Is Recommended---Defends Standard Oil and Tobacco Decisions

Washington.—President Taft's annual mesage, which was read in both houses of congress Tuesday, deals exclusively with the anti-trust statute. The message in part is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: This mesage is the first of several which I shall send to congress during the interval between the opening of its regular session and its adjournment for the Christmas holidays. The amount of information to be communicated as to the operations of the government, the number of important subjects calling for comment by the executive, and the transmission to congress of exhaustive reports by special commissions, make it impossible to include in one message of a reasonable length a discussion of the topics that ought to be brought to the attention of the national legislature at its first regular session.

The Anti-Trust Law—The Supreme Court Decisions.

In May last the Supreme court handed down decisions in the suits in equity brought by the United States to enjoin the further maintenance of the Standard Oil trust and of the American Tobacco trust, and to secure their dissolution. The decisions are epoch-making and serve to advise the business world authoritatively of the scope and operation of the anti-trust law of 1890. The decisions do not depart in any substantial way from the previous decisions of the court in construing and applying this important statute, but they clarify those important decisions by further defining the already admitted exceptions to the literal construction of the act. By the decrees, they furnish a useful precedent as to the proper method of dealing with the capital and property of illegal trusts. These decisions suggest the need and wisdom of additional or supplemental legislation to make it easier for the entire business community to square with the rule of action and legality thus finally established and to preserve the benefit, freedom and spur of reasonable competition without loss of real efficiency or progress.

No Change in the Rule of Decision—Merely in Form of Expression.

The statute in its first section declares to be illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations," and in the second, declares guilty of a misdemeanor every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize or combine or conspire with any other person to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce of the several states or with foreign nations."

In two early cases, where the statute was invoked to enjoin a transportation agreement between interstate railroad companies, it was held that it was no defense to show that the agreement as to rates complained of was reasonal at common law, because it was said that the statute was directed against all contracts and combinations in restraint of trade whether reasonal at common law or not. It was plain from the record, however, that the contracts complained of in those cases would not have been deemed reasonable at common law.

It has been said that the court, by introducing into the construction of the statute common law distinctions, has emasculated it. This is obviously untrue. By its judgment every contract and combination in restraint of interstate trade made with the purpose, or necessary effect of controlling prices by stifling competition, or of establishing in whole or in part a monopoly of such trade, is condemned by the statute. The most extreme critics cannot instance a case that ought to be condemned under the statute which is not brought within its terms as thus construed.

The sugestion is also made that the Supreme court by its decisions in the last two cases has committed to the court the undefined and unlimited discretion to determine whether a case of restraint of trade is within the terms of the statute. This is wholly untrue. A reasonable restraint of trade at common law is well understood and is clearly defined. It does not rest in the discretion of the court. It must be limited to acomplish the purpose of a lawful main contract to which, in order that it shall be enforceable at all, it must be incidental. If it exceeds the needs of that contract it is void.

The Remedy in Equity by Dissolution.

In the Standard Oil case the Supreme and circuit courts found the combination to be a monopoly of the interstate business of refining, transporting, and marketing petroleum and its products, effected and maintained through thirty-seven different corporations, the stock of which was held by a New Jersey company. It in effect commanded the dissolution of this combination, directed the transfer and pro-rata distribution by the New Jersey company of the stock held by it in the thirty-seven corporations to and among its stockholders, and the corporations and individual defendants were enjoined from conspiring or combining to restore such monopoly; and all agreements betwen the subsidiary corporations tending to produce or bring about further violations of the act were enjoined.

In the Tobacco case, the court found that the individual defendants, twenty-nine in number, had been engaged in a successful effort to acquire complete dominion over the manufacture, sale, and distribution of tobacco in this country and abroad, and that this had been done by combinations made with a purpose and effect to stifle competition, control prices, and establish a monopoly, not only in the manufacture of tobacco, but also of tin-foil and licorice, used in its manufacture and of its products of cigars, cigarettes and snuffs. The tobacco suit presentend a far more complicated and difficult case than the Standard Oil suit for a decree which would effectuate the will of the court and end the violation of the statute. There was here no single holding company as in the case of the Standard Oil trust. The main company was the American Tobacco company, a manufacturing, selling and holding company. The plan adopted to destroy the combination and restore competition involved the redivision of the capital and plants of the whole trust between some of the companies constituting the trust and new companies organized for the purposes of the decree and made parties to it, and numbering, new and old, fourteen.

In the original suit there were twenty-nine defendants who were charged with being the conspirators through whom the illegal combination acquired and exercised its unlawful dominion. Under the decree these defendants will hold amounts of stock in the various distributee companies ranging from 41 per cent. as a maximum to 28½ per cent. as a minimum, except in the case of one small company, the Porto Rican Tobacco company, in which they will hold 45 per cent. The twenty-nine individual defendants are enjoined for three years from buying any stock except from each other, and the group is thus prevented from extending its control during that period. All parties to the suit, and the new companies who are made parties, are enjoined perpetually from in any way effecting any combination between any of the companies in violation of the statute by way of resumption of the old trust. Each of the fourteen companies is enjoined from acquiring stock in any of the others. All these companies are enjoined from having common directors or officers, or common buying or selling agents, or common offices, or lending money to each other.

Size of New Companies.

Objection was made by certain independent tobacco companies that this settlement was unjust because it left companies with very large capital in active business, and that the settlement that would be effective to put all on an equality would be a division of the capital and plant of the trust into small fractions in amount more nearly equal to that of each of the independent companies. This contention results from a misunderstanding of the anti-trust law and its purpose. It is not intended thereby to prevent the accumulation of large capital in business enterprises in which such a combination can secure reduced cost of production, sale and distribution. It is directly against such an aggregation of capital only when its purpose is that of stifling competition, enhancing or controlling prices and establishing a monopoly. If we shall have by the decree defeated these purposes and restored competition between the large units into which the capital and plant have been divided, we shall have accomplished the useful purpose of the statute.

Confiscation Not the Purpose of the Statute.

It is not the purpose of the statute to confiscate the property and capital of the offending trusts. Methods of punishment by fine or imprisonment of the individual offenders, by fine of the corporation, or by forfeiture of its goods in transportation, are provided, but the proceeding in equity is a specific remedy to stop the operation of the trust by injunction and prevent the future use of the plant and capital in violation of the statute.

I venture to say that not in the history of American law has a decree more effective for such a purpose been entered by a court than that against the Tobacco trust.

Common-Stock Ownership.

It has been assumed that the present pro-rata and common ownership in all these companies by former stockholders of the trust would insure a continuance of the same old single control of all the companies into which the trust has by decree been disintegrated. This is erroneous and is based upon the assumed inefficacy and innocuousness of judicial injunctions. The companies are enjoined from co-operation or combination; they have different managers, directors, purchasing and sales agents. If all or any of the numerous stockholders, reaching into the thousands, attempt to secure concerted action of the companies with a view to the control of the market, their number is so large that such an attempt could not well be concealed and its prime movers and all its participants would be at once subject to contempt proceedings and imprisonment of a summary character. The immediate result of the present situation will necessarily be activity by all the companies under different managers and then competition must follow, or there will be activity by one company and stagnation by another. Only a short time will inevitably lead to a change in ownership of the stock, as all opportunity for continued co-operation must disappear.

Movement for Repeal of the Anti-Trust Law.

But now that the anti-trust act is seen to be effective for the accomplishment of the purpose of its enactment, we are met by a cry from many different quarters for its repeal. It is said to be obstructive of business progress, to be an attempt to restore old-fashioned methods of destructive competition between small units, and to make impossible those useful combinations of capital and the reduction of the cost of production that are essential to continued prosperity and normal growth.

In the recent decisions the Supreme court makes clear that there is nothing in the statute which condemns combinations of capital or mere bigness of plant organized to secure economy in production and a reduction of its cost. It is only when the purpose or necessary effect of the organization and maintenance of the combination or the aggregation of immense size are the stifling of competition, actual and potential, and the enhancing of prices and establishing a monopoly, that the statute is violated. Mere size is no sin against the law. The merging of two or more busines plants necessarily eliminates competition between the units thus combined, but this elimination is in contravention of the statute only when the combination is made for purpose of ending this particular competition in order to secure control of, and enhance, prices and create a monopoly.

Lack of Definiteness in the Statute.

The complaint is made of the statute that it is not sufficiently definite in its description of that which is forbidden, to enable business men to avoid its violation. The suggestion is, that we may have a combination of two corporations, which may run on for years, and that subsequently the attorney general may conclude that it was a violation of the statute, and that which was supposed by the combiners to be inocent then turns out to be a combination in violation of the statute. The answer to this hypothetical case is that when men attempt to amass stupendous capital as will enable them to suppress competition, control prices and establish a monopoly they know the purpose of their acts. Men do not do such a thing without having it clearly in mind.

New Remedies Suggested.

Much is said of the repeal of this statute and of constructive legislation intended to accomplish the purpose and blaze a clear path for honest merchants and business men to follow. It may be that such a plan will be evolved, but I submit that the discussions which have been brought out in recent days by the fear of the continued execution of the anti-trust law have produced nothing but glittering generalities and have offered no line of distinction or rule of action as definite and as clear as that which the Supreme court itself lays down in enforcing the statute.

Supplemental Legislation Needed—Not Repeal or Amendment.

I see no objection—and indeed I can see decided advantages—in the enactment of a law which shall describe and denounce methods of competition, which are unfair and are badges of the unlawful purpose denounced in the anti-trust law. The attempt and purpose to suppress a competitor by underselling him at a price so unprofitable as to drive him out of business, or the making of exclusive contracts with customers under which they are required to give up association with other manufacturers, and numerous kindred methods for stifling competition and effecting monopoly, should be described with sufficient accuracy in a criminal statute on the one hand to enable the government to shorten its task by prosecuting single misdemeanors instead of an entire conspiracy, and, on the other hand, to serve the purpose of pointing out more in detail to the business community what must be avoided.

Federal Incorporation Recommended.

In a special message to congress on January 7, 1910, I ventured to point out the disturbance to business that would probably attend the dissolution of these offending trusts. I said:

"But such an investigation and possible prosecution of corporations whose prosperity or destruction affects the comfort not only of stockholders but of millions of wage earners, employes, and associated tradesmen must necessarily tend to disturb the confidence of the business community, to dry up the now flowing sources of capital from its places of hoarding, and produce a halt in our present prosperity that will cause suffering and strained circumstances among the innocent many for the fault of the guilty few. The question which I wish in this message to bring clearly to the consideration and discussion of congress is whether, in order to avoid such a possible business danger, something cannot be done by which these business combinations may be offered a means, without great financial disturbance, of changing the character, organization and extent of their business into one within the lines of the law under federal control and supervision, securing compliance with the anti-trust statute.

"Generally, in the industrial combinations called 'Trusts,' the principal business is the sale of goods in many states and in foreign markets; in other words, the interstate and foreign business far exceeds the business done in any one state. This fact will justify the federal government in granting a federal charter to such a combination to make and sell in interstate and foreign commerce the products of useful manufacture under such limitations as will secure a compliance with the anti-trust law. It is possible so to frame a statute that while it offers protection to a federal company against harmful, vexatious and unnecessary invasion by the states, it shall subject it to reasonable taxation and control by the states with respect to its purely local business.

"Corporations organized under this act should be prohibited from acquiring and holding stock in other corporations (except for special reasons, upon approval by the proper federal authority), thus avoiding the creation under national auspices of the holding company with subordinate corporations in different states, which has been such an effective agency in the creation of the great trusts and monopolies.

"If the prohibition of the anti-trust act against combinations in restraint of trade is to be effectively enforced, it is essential that the national government shall provide for the creation of national corporations to carry on a legitimate business throughout the United States. The conflicting laws of the different states of the Union with respect to foreign corporations makes it difficult, if not impossible, for one corporation to comply with their requirements so as to carry on business in a number of different states."

Federal Corporation Commission Proposed.

I do not set forth in detail the terms and sections of a statute which might supply the constructive legislation permitting and aiding the formation of combinations of capital into federal corporations. They should be subject to rigid rules as to their organization and procedure, including effective publicity, and to the closest supervision as to the issue of stock and bonds by an executive bureau or commission in the department of commerce and labor, to which in times of doubt they might well submit their proposed plans for future business. It must be distinctly understood that incorporation under a federal law could not exempt the company thus formed and its incorporators and managers from prosecution under the anti-trust law for subsequent ilegal conduct, but the publicity of its procedure and the opportunity for frequent consultation as to the legitimate purpose of its transactions would offer it as great security against successful prosecutions for violations of the law as would be practical or wise.

Such a bureau or commission might well be invested also with the duty already referred to, of aiding the courts in the dissolution and recreation of trusts within the law. It should be an executive tribunal of the dignity and power of the comptroller of the currency or the interstate commerce commission, which now exercise supervisory power over important classes of corporations under federal regulation.

The drafting of such a federal incorporation law would offer ample opportunity to prevent many manifest evils in corporate management today, including irresponsibility of control in the hands of the few who are not the real owners.

Incorporation Voluntary.

I recommend that the federal charters thus to be granted shall be voluntary, at least until experience justifies mandatory provisions. The benefit to be derived from the operation of great businesses under the protection of such a charter would attract all who are anxious to keep within the lines of the law. Other large combinations that fail to take advantage of the federal incorporation will not have a right to complain if their failure is ascribed to unwillingness to submit their transactions to the careful scrutiny, competent supervision and publicity attendant upon the enjoyment of such a charter.

Supplemental Legislation Needed.

The opportunity thus suggested for federal incorporation, it seems to me, is suitable constructive legislation needed to facilitate the squaring of great industrial enterprises to the rule of action laid down by the anti-trust law. This statute as construed by the Supreme court must continue to be the line of distinction for legitimate business. It must be enforced, unless we are to banish individualism from all business and reduce it to one common system of regulation or control of prices like that which now prevails with respect to public utilities, and which when applied to all business would be a long step toward state socialism.

A LONE STAR DIANA

Dauntless Girl Hunter of the Texas Border.

Miss Katie Sharp, a Daring Big Game Hunter, Splendid Horsewoman and a Dead Shot With a Rifle.

Houston, Tex.—One of the most daring and dauntless big game hunters in the upper Rio Grande border region of Texas is Miss Katie Sharp, of Sanderson. She is a splendid shot with rifle and revolver and is the equal of any cowboy horsewomanship. She has gone on many hunting expeditions into the Santa Rosa mountains of Mexico where bears, deer and other wild animals abound. She has in her home many trophies of the chase, among them being the skins of several large black bears that she killed.

On a bear hunting trip into Mexico, last winter, she had a narrow escape from being badly injured, or possibly killed, by a bear which she had wounded. She encountered the animal in a narrow canyon in the mountains and the two were within a dozen feet of each other before either was aware of the other's presence. Miss Sharp quickly brought the rifle that she carried to her shoulder and taking quick aim fired at the bear. The first shot went wild, but the second stopped the animal just as it was within almost reaching distance of Miss Sharp. With her hunting knife she put an end to the struggle of the beast.

This intrepid huntress knows no such thing as fear. She frequently goes out alone into remote localities of the border region and bags deer and game birds. She knows all of the trails leading through the hills and rough country that rise along the Rio Grande and is also familiar with every locality of the rugged Santa Rosa mountains. Frequently on her hunting excursions she has tried the nerve and endurance of seasoned and long experienced men at the game. She is well known all through that region and is popular among the ranch people as well as those of the towns. She is given the sobriquet of the Diana of the Border.

WIFE'S CURSE WAS ON HIM

Husband, Who Deserted Her, Stricken by Paralysis as Dying Woman Had Wished.

Cincinnati, O.—The wish of a dying woman that her husband might be paralyzed if he attended her funeral, came true. William Huesman of this city is the victim.

Although nearly seventy, and the father of several grown children, he had lived apart from his wife, Minnie Huesman, his junior by only a few years. As the years of their separation extended, Mrs. Huesman became each day more and more embittered against her husband. Time and again she declared that she hoped that when she died he might become paralyzed on the way to the cemetery if he tried to go to the funeral.

Immediately after her death the husband was notified and, forgetting the past, tried to atone by seeing that his wife received proper burial. He provided a coffin for the body and next day he was on his way to the cemetery when he suddenly collapsed on the street.

"Paralysis," said the hospital physician. Huesman is not expected to recover.

CHILD GETS LOST IN DRAIN

Confused in the Darkness Boy of Six Crawls 80 Feet From the Opening.

London, England.—While playing with some boys near his home at Shapperton-on-Thames Johnnie Wilson, aged six years, crawled into a drain pipe. He expected to come out at a joint ten feet away, but missed the place and becoming confused as to directions kept on crawling. As he did not return children gave an alarm and a searching party set to work at once. They dug to the drain pipe, ten feet from the opening. Johnnie was not there.

At some distance from the opening they dug another hole, ten feet in depth. Johnnie heard the picks and mistook the meaning of the noises and kept crawling still further from safety. Finally at 80 feet they made another hole in the drain and caught Johnnie by the feet just as he was crawling past.

The lad had been in the 12-inch pipe for five hours, but aside from being smeared with black mud he suffered no ill effects from the experience.

W. L. DOUGLAS' TRUST PLAN

Manufacturer Thinks Government Should Obtain Publicity by a License System.

Large business organizations have come to stay. We cannot go back to old conditions. We must meet world competition. Large concerns can produce goods at lower cost than small ones. Germany favors large corporations. The method of the present national administration is to dissolve the great organizations and make them smaller, which is a backward step. There should be no limit to a corporation doing a large and legitimate business, such as would be possible under the licensing plan which I favor, writes W. L. Douglas, former governor of Massachusetts, in the Boston Herald.

Prejudices against corporations merely because they are big, perhaps, must be done away with. They give labor better returns. They cheapen product and thus benefit the consumer. They give opportunities to small investors who get returns otherwise unattainable. They employ able young men who have no capital at all, but who receive handsome salaries for their ability and service.

In place of the Sherman law it is my opinion there should be a department at Washington to grant licenses to all manufacturers and corporations in this country who do an interstate commerce business.

The law should be made so clear, plain and definite that it could not be misunderstood. It should require all capital to be paid in full. Semi-yearly statements should be given to the public and certified by a public accountant. There should be a board of examiners in each state to look after these corporations just as our national banks are watched by the national government. They should have the right to enter the offices and examine the records of all the directorates of these companies.

Naive Optimists.

"Six months ago there was another outburst of optimism as naive as though the world were still living in the sentimental era of glass exhibitions Since then there has opened another era of political earthquakes and conflagrations, and the era of disturbance continues to extend. Before the Tripoli problem has been safely liquidated or the peace of the Balkans is assured, we have the outburst in China of an insurrection which may change the face of the far east and give an incalculable increase of force to all the impulses set moving by the triumph of Japan. All we can be certain of in the region of world politics is that nothing is certain. Do we need further lessons to convince us that the peace of civilization is founded upon the crust of a volcano?" asks the London Observer.

Didn't Go to Finish.

"I found 50 cents this morning," confided Jimmy.

"Found a whole half dollar!" cried his mother. "How fine! What did you do with it?"

"Pete Jones was along, so I gave him half."

"You dear, generous boy! Did you do that of your own accord?"

"Yessum—well, we decided that would be right."

"Jimmy! He didn't whip you and make you give up half?"

"No, mamma. If he'd licked me, he'd 'a' had it all. The scrap was a draw."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The AWAKING of the OLDER NATIONS

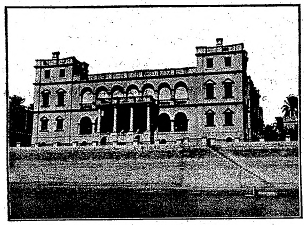
Bagdad, City of Romance, Now Transformed—The New Era in Turkey Is Making Over the Home of "The Arabian Nights" Tales

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Bagdad, Turkey.—All that is romantic and oriental is embodied in the namê Bagdad. Over this city once ruled Haroun er Raschid, the caliph of the immortal "Arabian Nights." Here Persia and India meet with Arabia and Syria and Turkey proper, while a handful of foreigners represent the western trade and ideas that are so rapidly conquering the East. A few of the old buildings, dating back to the time of the caliphs, remain, but they are rapidly making way for more modern structures. The narrow streets, and the changeless bazars are still here—but they are changing. It is now possible to ride in a carriage from one ênd of Bagdad to the other, if one knows the streets; and this would have been impossible in the days when Haroun and his grand vizier prowled about the narrow and tortuous and mysterious highways.

A new Haroun is on the scene, and making changes so rapidly that the Arabs who come to town after an interval of only a year, rub their eyes and cry in amazement, "Ma'sh Allah!" The most obvious of the transformations being wrought by Nazim Pasha, the new Vali, or governor, is the driving of a modern highway straight through the center of the city. The dust of demolition fills the air, for nothing stands before the march of progress. Legal technicalities may not preserve a man's home, if it is on the line of the new highways.

Nazim Pasha has autocratic authority. He refused to accept the post until he was given a free hand over all the affairs of the city and the desert round about. His word is law. He has control over the revenues and over the army. He was authorized to make his own terms with the Arabs and all the tribes have "come in" and promised to be good. I can testify to the quiet and good order which now prevail in this famously turbulent region. After traversing a considerable portion of the desert I can report that no violence was offered, nor did I hear aught else than that everything is quiet—though how long even the strong hand of Nazim Pasha can keep it so is a matter of conjecture, for the Arab is a restless and lawless person by nature.



The British Consulate at Bagdad.

Making an Army Overnight.

The rag-tag and bobtail which used to pass for an army in Bagdad has been caricatured times without number. The men were literally in rags. They went barefooted. They were mostly without weapons. Ill-fed, ill-paid, ill-treated, they made more trouble than they quelled. Now almost overnight, Nazim Pasha has changed all this. He has organized an entirely new army, with progressive Young Turk officers and foreign drill-masters. He has made in Bagdad the uniforms which all of them now wear, and he has equipped every man with a modern rifle. He is also taking the weapons out of the hands of the people generally, so that only the representatives of the law shall be armed The soldiers are becoming "smart" in appearance and discipline. Their setting-up exercises are as rigorous as those of the German army.

There is need. For no one knows when the fires that are forever smouldering in the desert may break forth into flame, and the revolt in the Yemen may spread any day to this region. As it is, some inter-tribal fighting has to be winked at. A despot must have at hand means to execute his decrees. The terror that now fills the lawless at mention of Nazim Pasha's name may not be allowed to diminish.

A benevolent despot is the new governor. He is resolved to bring in law and order, and to establish the western civilization. It used to be that robberies and attacks upon pedestrians were of nightly occurrence in the city. Last month there were only four cases of robbery and the culprits were arrested. When I spoke to Nazim Pasha of the regret that the world will feel over the loss of the ancient Bagdad, with its romantic memories, he asked me how I would like to see Philadelphia adhere to the customs of hundreds of years ago, all for the sake of being picturesque. There are few travelers that get to this out-of-the-way corner of the earth, but those that come a few years hence, on the Bagdad railway, will find the bazars gilded, the streets named and the houses numbered, and a policeman standing under the electric light at the corner to ask the business of every amateur Raschid.

The Persecuted Heiress.

This is still the East, and there are enough unusual incidents to be met with in the course of a week to satisfy an observer. Justice is still done on some other basis than that of the West. A certain Armenian maiden, fair of face, favored of fortune, and an orphan, has been experiencing Bagdad law of late. She wanted to be protected from her relatives, who were trying to steal her fortune. She took her case to the authorities and turned over the papers. The authorities in turn gave them to the girl's enemies. Likewise the machinery of the law was used to try to marry her to the Armenian secretary of a certain great man, presumably for the great man's purposes. The maiden fled to that haven of the distressed in the East, the British, and she was smuggled out of the country to India, where she now is, the Bagdad officials meanwhile making all possible effort to compel her return.

Another episode, of a pleasanter kind, came to my observation while here. I had brought down the Tigris river with me an Armenian peasant, who was glad to take service to a region where there might be a chance for work. He was an Armenian massacre orphan, of the 1896 crop, and his whole family, he believed, had been slain at that time. He had not been in Bagdad a week before he discovered that his older brother had escaped destruction as marvelously as himself and was living in the city, as confidential servant to a wealthy compatriot. This rich man was so affected by the strange reunion that he took my servant under his wing also, thus assuring his future. I learned the story when my servant appeared clad in full European raiment, a veritable "effendi."

American Strays in Bagdad.

There is no native-born American citizen in Bagdad, and only one naturalized, a dentist. The consulate is vacant, except for a very efficient vice-consul, Mr. James Levack, a Briton. But he is called to stand sponsor for various wanderers who claim the protection of the American flag. The latest is a man who is soldiering in a missionary hospital, claiming to be both the Messiah and an American citizen. The latter claim has been proved bogus, so the consulate is relieved of him.

Recently one of Sir William Willcocks' engineers telegraphed from a village in the desert that a party of Americans were destitute there, having been robbed by the Arabs. Relief was straightway sent and the people brought to this city. The party comprised a man, his wife and his grown-up daughter, from Oklahoma, who had set out to the Holy Land and the Far East to convert the heathen. They were of one of the peculiar sects that believe in going out on faith, and so the family had beaten its way from point to point. The story of their having been robbed by the Arabs proved to have been a pious fiction to secure relief. The consulate fed and sheltered the family for a time—and the man was fastidious as to food—and then sent them on to Bosra, where the missionaries sent them on to India. Thus, by being passed on from point to point, the beggars will really accomplish a journey around the world. Of course they attempted no mission work; like some more pretentious enterprises, they considered their own upkeep and comfort the principal charge upon what funds they could secure.

Various persons "working" their way around the world on a wager get to Bagdad. One Canadian undertook to go around the world on roller-skates, and he asked the consulates to sign his papers attesting his presence. But when it was suggested that he give a roller-skating exhibition, as a means of raising money, instead of begging it outright, he naively confessed that he had left his roller skates behind, several months before, but that he expected to get another pair before he reached Canada. A Frenchman was "walking" around the world, and he left the raft that was bearing him to Bagdad, a few miles above the city, that he might enter on foot; but he was never heard of again.

The troubles of the consuls are various. Their business is to answer all proper inquiries from enterprising nationals who would extend the country's trade into remote parts. As the "ultima thule" of civilization, Bagdad is chosen by many of these inquirers, whose knowledge is not always equal to their spirit of enterprise. One American manufacturer wanted to introduce the garter business into Bagdad; but the people do not use hose. Another was keen on making a market for American bathroom fixtures; but there are probably not a dozen modern bathrooms in all the Turkish empire, outside of Constantinople, with its few modern hotels. Still another wanted to sell sanitary appliances, which, it must be admitted, are sorely needed, but not wanted at all. Another wished to be in early on the toothpick market; but the natives have a natural toothpick, a thorn, which they might profitably export. Others wish to sell electrical appliances, when Bagdad is rejoicing over the introduction of oil lamps. In a word, the backwardness and barrenness of life in this part of the world is beyond the imagination of the westerner. Nor do they reckon the worth of the consul's time. On man wrote from America for postage stamps and a list of the edible fish in the Tigris river. Mr. Levack courteously sent him a few stamps—and then got an angry reply for not sending that list of fish!

For agricultural machinery; for a strong, simple oil-engine pump, to take the place of the antiquated water-lifts, for irrigation purposes; for a windmill that will work and stand rough usage; for tools and simple articles of household convenience, America may find a market here, in exchange for the oriental rugs, hides, wool and dates which Bagdad ships to America in large quantities.

Successive American consuls have resigned this post because unable to live on the salary, which is less than a fifth of what the British resident gets. The post is a hard one from the climatic standpoint. In summer the people live underground in "serdabs," which are nothing less than furnished cellars, where the punkah flaps to agitate the oppressive heat. The German invasion has made the little company of less than half a hundred Britons work hard for their not very princely livelihoods, so that there is comparatively little diversion to this exile.

One of the interesting places in Bagdad is the antiquated Jewish synagogue, which is so old that the rabbis do not know its age. It looks it. And it is not a magnificent ruin, but a squalid, dirty old place, littered with torn matting and rugs, with a more respectable court adjoining in which some of the rabbis live. The meanest of synagogues in America is finer than this. And it is probably destined to be succeeded by a better, for the chief rabbi told me with pride of the success of the young Jews who have gone to America, and of the increased prosperity that is coming to the Bagdad Jews. He says that he does not believe in a colonization of the Jews in Palestine or Mesopotamia; let them go to America or Great Britain, the real promised land. He also told me that two thousand of the young men of his community are learning to speak English, for that is to be the language of their new life. None the less, the Jews in France have helped to build two large schools for the boys and girls of their faith in this city, and the school buildings are the finest in Bagdad.

The Jews in Bagdad have been very poor, and a people suffering affliction. They have been in ignorance, in consequence, and even the rabbis are not very learned. I had a conference with several as to the identity of the Jews up and down Mesopotamia, who must number several thousand, if not millions. There are from sixty to a hundred thousand in Bagdad alone. The old men agreed that all the twelve tribes, from both the early captivities of the children of Israel, have remained to this day in these regions where they were once taken captive. There are also great numbers across the border in Persia. Thus the mystery of the "lost ten tribes" ceases to be a mystery; the Jews are still here, and now sharing in the new awakening of this oldest corner of the world.

Evening Things Up.

He was a sturdy little chap, just turned three, and his manners were so mature that the man on the porch next door stopped reading to listen to the very sophisticated play of the up-to-date young man and his five-year-old sister. They played at telephoning and going for automobile rides; they imitated the chug-chug of a motor boat and babbled freely of monoplanes and aircraft generally and the man, while interested, was disappointed too.

There are no more babies, he told himself, nothing but a lot of junior mechanicians. That young one ought to be talking of alleys and realers and kites and tops.

Just at this stage the offending one walked over and said: "Please, mister, put the 'lastic of my hat under my chin right. I want to dress up an' play I'm taking Hope to the theatre," and the man cheered up immediately and did as he was bidden, for a youth who took his sister out to spend the evening with his "'lastic" under his chin wasn't such a doddering old gentleman after all.

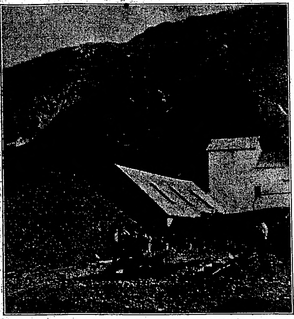
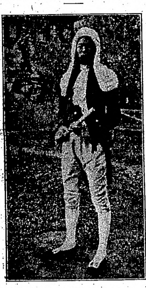
Newfoundland's Iron Mine



At Tilt Cove, Newfoundland, is the only iron mine that is operated on the island. These are put through a crusher, and the iron is then shipped to Sydney, where all of it is used in local industries.

CHINESE SPEAKER OF HOUSE



The "progressive" movement in China, which has culminated in the present uprising against the Manchus, has been in evidence for a long time in the University of Pao-Ting-Fu and other educational institutions. In the university the students instituted a parliament and conducted debates that have had not a little to do with the stirring up of the rebellion. Our illustration shows the speaker of this parliament in his official garb and wig.

BATHING IN GOLD COINS

A Parisian journalist who had speculated in railway shares won 200,000 francs as the result of a lucky venture. Drawing it in gold, he proceeded to a hotel, emptied the bags of gold in the bed and went to sleep literally in the sands of Pactolus. The man was so crazed by his good fortune that he found indescribable pleasure in revealing in a golden bath.

Paganini, the violinist, when he received the proceeds of his concerts (he insisted upon being paid in gold), used to wash his hands in sovereigns. A French novelist, Soulie, wrote a book called "The Memories of the Devil." It was successful; the publishers paid him for the first volume $10,000 in gold. The author carried the gold to his bedroom, poured it into a foot bath, and enjoyed for half an hour the excitement of moving his feet to and fro in a bath of gold coins, smoking meanwhile the biggest of Havanas.

A Chicago merchant of great wealth, believing certain symptoms indicated that he would become insane, consulted a specialist and under his advice became an inmate of a private asylum. For 12 years there his recreation was piling up gold coins and then knocking them over. At times he washed his hands in gold eagles and half eagles. At the end of the long seclusion he returned to his business and in 12 months confirmed the thoroughness of his recovery by amassing $500,000.

LAST OF MIAMI INDIANS

The last surviving member of the Miami tribe of Indians is Mrs. Charles E. Dagenett, wife of Charles E. Dagenett, supervisor of employment in the United States Indian service, with headquarters in Denver. Her father was one of the most valued aids of the government and during the twenty years that he served as chief of the Miami Indians he acted as ambassador and rendered invaluable assistance to Uncle Sam in many matters of great importance to the red men and the government. Mrs. Dagenett is a graduate of Carlisle university, having received her diploma with the class of 1899. Since leaving school she has been active in Indian affairs and for several years, since her husband received his appointment to the Indian service, has been his chief assistant in which capacity she is still serving. She is the only living daughter of the famous Chief Tosoyana of the Miami tribe of which Colonel Roosevelt has written a history.

ONE PIE FOR 70 GUESTS

Seventy guests banqueted on a single pie at Gorleston, England, and there was plenty to spare when they had finished. The pie had a three-inch crust and weighed a hundredweight and a half. It was made in three sections or water tight compartments and each hold had a substantial bulkhead of crust. Its interior was packed with six rabbits, six kidneys, 28 pounds of beefsteak and potatoes, turnips, carrots and sprouts. The sea pie, as it is called, is boiled, not baked, and its builder, Skipper Harman, made the cooking process an eight hours' watch. This three-decker provided a savory meal which more than satisfied the guests, and its wrecked and dismantled hull provided ten gallons of excellent soup that was greatly welcomed by the poor of Gorleston.

WAR FOUGHT BY BOYS

We forget that the Civil war was waged for the most part by mere boys, says the Chicago Post. Of the 2,278,588 who enlisted on the Union side, practically all were boys. The 118,000 of this number who were over twenty-one years of age form but a fractional part of the enormous total of 2,250,000. A million of this total were, at enlistment, between eighteen and twenty-one. About 300,000 were eighteen years old. About 600,000 were seventeen, and some 100,000 from fourteen to fifteen years old. Three hundred were thirteen, 225 were twelve, 38 were eleven, and there were 25 who were only ten years of age at the time of enlistment. The figures on the southern side would probably show a yet earlier average age. It is this fact that keeps the pension roll alive today. If the average soldier was twenty at enlistment, he would be today but seventy-one years old, and his wife would be yet younger.

MILES OF WILD RICE

"Imagine thousands, nay millions of acres south of the Daly river covered with rice," wrote the acting administrator of the northern territory of Australia recently to the acting minister of external affairs. "I have gone through miles and miles of such wild rice in a canoe at the close of the wet season."

Senator Findley saw the territory placed beyond need of financial assistance by the treatment and sale of this rice. A small sample was sent to the federal analyst, who reported that it is difficult and probably unprofitable to cultivate a field continuously in rice on a river and that at any rate a mill test to prove suitability for starch manufacture would require two tons of rice. Senator Findley is sending to the territory for several tons for further experiments. Great hopes are entertained that the northern territory will prove one of Australia's most fertile areas.

UNKISSED AT ONE HUNDRED

Miss Rachel Bell, who lives on the same plot of ground where she was born at Adamsville, O., celebrated her hundredth birthday the other day. She says that she expects to live at least ten years longer, and that there is nothing so sweet as life when one gets old. Miss Bell maintains that she has never been kissed, and that though she had many offers to marry when she was young, the man never came around whom she could marry and feel satisfied that she was doing the right thing. When she was born her father kept vigil all night and day outside their cabin, protecting the mother and children from a band of Indians who were then pillaging the hamlets near Zanesville.

Now the dog runs about as happily as ever, and even offers the leather paw in shaking hands with his friends.

Being a well equipped "residence," it is adaptable to many uses.

European nobleman tried to reduce his weight in order to win a wife and died of starvation. Moral: It is better to have men say "Isn't he fat?" than "Doesn't he look natural!"

Surely it ought not to be a repugnant task for every good citizen of the country to comply with the apple growers' modest demand and eat five apples a day until further notice.

Prof. Jenks of Minnesota would cure the divorce evil by letting wives control the family purse strings. This, added to the countless other sure cures and panaceas, makes one wonder why divorce should stick around at all.

A telephone conversation has been carried on successfully between London and Basel in Switzerland, 600 miles away, and it is expected that before long most of the large cities in Europe will be in telephone communication with the British capital. What good will it do, however, to connect a man in London with a man in Berlin if neither understands the other's language?

CONGRESS OPENS

LEADERS PREDICT THAT IT WILL BE BUSY AND INTERESTING.

POLITICS AND LAWS MIX

Proceedings May Make and Unmake Presidential Candidates—Trusts and Tariff Occupy Chief Place.

By GEORGE CLINTON.

Washington, D. C.—Congress has started once more to travel the path of a busy and interesting regular session.

The two words "busy" and "interesting" as a forecast of the proceedings are used on high authority. In the rush of the opening the comment of the leaders was brief.

It will be an interesting session.—Senator La Follette.

It will be a busy session.—Speaker Clark.

The lower house of congress today, for the first time in many years at a regular session, is in control of the Democrats. It may not be necessary to remind the country that the last session was a special one convened by the call of the president, and that its time was given up largely to the discussion of two subjects, the tariff and reciprocity, subjects so nearly akin as to be almost one flesh.

House and senate claimed the presence of nearly full membership when Speaker Clark and Vice-President Sherman gave the authoritative thumps of the gavel, and the authoritative words that consideration of legislation was in order.

This Session Is Critical.

The galleries were filled with sightseers, for an intense interest attaches to what is to be done at this session. It may be that presidential candidates will be made or unmade by the proceedings. A slip of the tongue of some party leader may do damage beyond repair to the party's prospects. Every man in house and senate will be on guard over his tongue, and every bit of proposed legislation will be studied thoroughly by the leaders of the party of the member proposing it, to decide not only on its probable effect on the country, but its effect on politics.

As for the Democratic leaders, they seem to be determined that if the tariff board's report on wool is in accordance with the information gained by members of the ways and means committee, which, of course, is dominated by the Democrats, legislation based on the board's report must be passed. The party leaders, however, seem to be determined that if the tariff board's report has in it a suspicion of leaning toward the side of duties which are too high, a bill cutting those duties shall be passed and sent over to the Republican senate for commendation or condemnation.

Trust Problem to the Fore.

No sooner had congress opened than the trust matter again put its interrogation to the lawmakers. Several bills have been drawn already which represent the varying views of what ought to be done to the Sherman law. This matter will be thrashed out thoroughly before June comes, and with the tariff it will occupy the chief place of interest and debate.

House and senate at the last session sanctioned a measure looking to the popular election of senators. There is a difference between the house and senate as to the exact form which the resolution on the subject should take and it was left in conference when the special session adjourned. The conference committee will meet at once and attempt to adjust the difficulty and to make it possible for the states to decide quickly whether or not the change in the form of election of the members of the upper house shall be made.

House Leaders Are Primed.

Representative Underwood, Democrat, of Alabama, the leader of the house Democracy and chairman of the committee on ways and means, is ready to combat on the tariff and the trust questions, and other questions for that matter, James R. Mann, the floor leader of the Republican minority. It will be Mr. Underwood's duty and perhaps delight to try to make capital for his party in the coming presidential campaign, and a like duty and delight will attach to Mr. Mann, who will employ his usual resourcefulness to do what he can to brighten the presidential prospects of his own party.

In the senate within a day or two the controversy will start anew over the election of a president pro tem. Senator Frye, of Maine, who held the office for many years, resigned it at a late day in the extraordinary session. Mr. Frye has since died.

SCORE INJURED IN WRECK.

Illinois Central Train Takes the Ditch in Kentucky.

Paducah, Kentucky. — Over a score of the passengers of Illinois Central passenger train No. 101 were injured, when spreading rails threw it into a ditch, 28 miles east of here. One life was taken by the same train a short time previously when Simon Stevens, mine boss at Central City, Ky., threw himself before the train as it passed the town.

RUSSIANS ENTER PERSIA

FORMER PROVINCIAL GOVERNOR IS ASSASSINATED.

Repeated Attempts Made to Assassinate Shuster—American Is Guarded.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 2.—Russia has ordered troops to Teheran to enforce her demand that W. Morgan Shuster, the energetic American treasurer general of Persia, be deposed. Unless Persia acquiesces at once, she must fight the czar's army, and in the latter event runs a grave chance of being gobbled up completely by Russia and England.

The decision to move troops to the Persian capital was reached, following the rejection by the Persian national assembly of England's suggestion that she accede to the demands of Russia. England's position indicates that she is giving her moral support to Russia. For several weeks Russia has been mobilizing Cossacks and infantry at Resht, a Persian city, 150 miles northwest of Teheran. Practically all the troops at Resht were ordered to the Persian capital. Russia has long looked with anxious eyes on a strip of Persian territory to the north, while England has been equally covetous of a strip of the shah's domain to the south. There is no doubt expressed here that England and Russia have reached a definite understanding regarding the partitioning of Persia, if the latter country does not expel Shuster at once.

Teheran, Persia, Dec. 2.—The national council has rejected the Russian ultimatum by a big majority. The foreign minister has resigned.

The Russian ultimatum, to the terms of which the Persian national council has refused to agree, called in the first place for the instant dismissal of W. Morgan Shuster, the American who has for several months occupied the post of Persian treasurer-general. A further demand was for a cash indemnity from Persia to cover the cost of the dispatch of Russian troops to that country.

Ala Ed Dowleh, former governor of the province of Fars, was assassinated as he was leaving his residence. Three men participated in the crime, and riddled their victim with seven revolver shots.

Repeated attempts have been made to assassinate Shuster, whose supporters assert Russia has placed a price on his head. Shuster is constantly under guard.

Taft Appealed To.

Washington.—President Taft was appealed to by the Persian-American Educational society to use the good offices of the United States government to prevent war between Russia and Persia. The society also addressed letters of appeal to the United States senate and house of representatives and to Andrew Carnegie asking the latter's help as a friend of world peace.

FIGHT OVER MRS. EDDY'S WILL.

Allege Trust Fund Interest Is Used Illegally.

Concord, N. H. — The allegation that the interest on a trust fund left by Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, founder of the Christian Science church, for the benefit of her grandchildren, is being used in whole or in part for the maintenance of litigation looking toward the setting aside of the residuary clause of Mrs. Eddy's will, was contained in a bill in equity filed in the probate court by General Frank S. Streeter, one of the trustees. The trustees assert that this alleged use of the money is in violation of the terms of the trust and they ask the court for instructions as to further payments under the deed.

The bill charges that the money in question is being used to assist Mrs. Eddy's son, George W. Glover, of Lead, S. D., and her adopted son, Dr. Ebenezer J. Foster Eddy, of Waterbury, Vt., in their efforts to have the courts declare invalid the residuary clauses of the will which left property valued at about $2,000,000 to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston.

TAFT ANNOUNCES

THE PRESIDENT DISCUSSES HIS ADMINISTRATION IN MAGAZINE ARTICLE.

TARIFF AIDS MONOPOLIES

And Holds Forth Temptation for Formation of Little Trusts.—Payne-Aldrich Act Called a Revenue Producer.

New York, N. Y. — President Taft has announced, through an article in The Outlook, his candidacy for a second Republican nomination. Mr. Taft says:

"I am very grateful for the honors the people have given me. I do not affect to deny the satisfaction I should feel if, after casting up the totals pro and con, and striking a balance, they should decide that my first term had been fruitful enough of good to warrant their enlisting me for another. Any man would be proud of such a verdict. But I have not been willing, nor shall I be, to purchase it at the sacrifice of my freedom to do my duty as I see it. My happiness is not dependent on holding any office; and I shall go back to private life with no heartburnings if the people, after an unprejudiced review of my administration, conclude that some one else can serve them to their greater advantage."

In a general discussion of his administration he states also:

"I should have changed the sentence (in his Winona speech) where I proclaim the Payne tariff act the best ever passed.

"My chief objection to a needlessly high tariff is that it nourishes monopoly.

"I fully realize, and I wish our people would, that the present prosperity of the treasury is due in no small measure to the existing tariff.

"I would not resort to the ordinary income tax except in an emergency like war."

As a calendar of "unfinished business" for his term, the president cites:

Reductions in the wool and cotton schedules and possibly the metal schedule.

Legislation to develop Alaska.

The ratifying of the peace treaties with France and Great Britain.

Under title of "President Taft's Own View," the article is a report of an authorized interview at Virginia Hot Springs by Francis E. Leupp. The interviewer has been for years one of the leading figures in Washington newspaper and magazine work, served as commissioner of Indian affairs, and is an old and intimate friend of Mr. Taft. Others who are close to the subject of the interview accept it as virtually Mr. Taft's own declaration.

PERSIANS APPEAL TO U. S.

Citizens of Teheran Ask American Minister to Assure Them Fair Play.

Teheran, Persia—Ten thousand persons carrying banners with the inscription, "Death or Independence," marched to the American legation and appealed to the minister to urge the United States government to see fair play in the dispute with Russia.

The English community here is aroused against Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary, and think that Shuster, the treasurer-general of Persia, out-played him by revoking the appointments of Englishmen to which Sir Edward objected. The British correspondents here are making it plain in the dispatches that they believe that the British foreign minister is ruining the prestige of his own countrymen.

Persian Cabinet Resigns.

Teheran.—The Persian cabinet resigned. A small body of Cossacks have arrived here to protect the Russian legation. Two hundred Cossacks have reached Khashin. The Russian troops at Resht have disarmed the local Persian militia and occupied the telegraph office. They are acting as though war had been declared.

Totals	100	46

Chicago, Ill. — The hunting season, which is closed, cost 100 lives and resulted in more or less severe injuries to 46 others. These figures are smaller than those for last year, when the dead numbered 100 and the injured 81.

The annual loss of life in the pursuit of game has attracted the attention of the authorities of the government and by direction of Secretary Wilson of the agricultural department the biological survey is studying the accidents this year, as well as statistics for the last five years.

The results of the investigation and suggestion for legislation will be embodied in a report to be published at the end of the year. With these statistics to work on, the federal government will try to induce the various states to enact laws which will decrease the annual slaughter of hunters.

This year's statistics prove that a companion is the most dangerous part of a hunting outfit. He has caused at least 25 per cent of the fatal accidents of the season, his carelessness being responsible for 24 deaths and the injury of 14 persons who were lucky enough to escape mortal hurts.

A well-known Chicago man was a victim of a companion. Charles G. McRoberts, law partner of Charles H. Aldrich and once a candidate for alderman from the Twenty-fifth ward, while hunting near Antioch, Ill., was accidentally shot by his guide.

O. T. Wilson, of Gold Hill, Ore., seems to have acquired the habit of mistaking men for deer and killing them. He killed his brother the other day, and several years ago he killed another man by mistake.

The coroner has called a jury to determine whether Wilson ought to be permitted to carry firearms.

While hunting rabbits near McLouth, Kan., John Clemm accidentally shot six young women who were standing on the front porch of his home. A rabbit ran around the house and Clemm fired at it with a shotgun. Missing the rabbit, the shot struck the women, all of whom were wounded in the lower limbs.

Twenty-nine of the dead were victims of their own carelessness, having shot themselves. Most of these accidents were caused by the victim pulling his gun, muzzle first, toward him while climbing a fence or leaving a boat or some other situation in which caution should have been exercised. Of the injured, thirteen shot themselves. Andrew Finsland, a well-known resident of Superior, Wis., is in danger of losing his mind as a result of shooting a deer. He wounded the animal, but it managed to escape. For four successive days he hunted for the carcass of the deer. He finally found it and brought it in. He was almost famished and became violently ill. He grew worse and had to be taken to a hospital, where he is in a serious condition, both mentally and physically. The almost unprecedented slaughter of deer—said to amount to 6,000 in Wisconsin alone—which has attended the favorable weather conditions in northern Wisconsin has led to renewed agitation for the revision of the game laws to prevent the killing of female deer, for a period of years at least, to shorten the open season to at least ten days of November, and perhaps to protect all deer and moose for a closed season of two years or more.

Cummins to Introduce Bill.

Washington, Dec. 2.—Senator Cummins, of Iowa, announced that he would introduce a bill providing for presidential primaries early in the coming session.

SUES REGISTER CO.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FILES AGAINST NATIONAL CONCERN AT DAYTON, O.

COMPETITION IS SAVAGE

Alleged Most of Products of Company's Rivals are in "Graveyard" in the National Factory.

Cincinnati, Ohio — Suit was filed in the United States circuit court here against the National Cash Register company, of Dayton, Ohio, charging that the company is in a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and that it be enjoined from further carrying on such illegal practices as are set forth in the petition.

The government does not seek to destroy the National Cash Register company as a corporation, nor to interfere with the legitimate business of the company, but asks that it be prohibited from selling cash registers and other registering devices in a manner that would prevent competition.

The suit was filed by United States District Attorney Sherman T. McPherson, who was assisted by Attorney O. E. Harrison, representing the interstate commerce commission. Those named as defendants are the Cash Register company and 28 officers, directors and sales agents of the company.

One of the main charges contained in the petition is that the company sold cash registers below the cost of production in various instances where competition was rife.

The individuals named as defendants are the following:

John A. Patterson, president of the company; E. A. Deeds, W. S. Dipus, Robert Patterson, F. S. Oswald, S. W. Davis, E. A. Bunstein, A. A. Thomas, T. J. Watson, Joseph Rogers, Alexander Harned, F. S. High, W. M. Cummings, George E. Morgan, W. C. Howell, C. H. Snyder, Walter Cool, E. A. Epperson, G. C. Edgerton, George C. Shaw, H. G. Carnell, M. J. Keefe, J. G. Laird, Pliny Ebes, A. A. Wentz, C. T. Wormsley, M. N. Jacobs and M. G. Lafley.

Competitors' Products "Graveyard."

Washington. — Attorney General Wickersham, in a statement on the equity suit against the National Cash Register company declared that the government did not seek a dissolution of the corporation, but "to compel fair competition and to restrain the acts of savagery heretofore employed and now being directed against the few remaining competitors." He said the defendant concern had succeeded in ruining and destroying more than 150 cash register companies, thereby controlling 95 per cent of the trade.

The attorney general declared it would be impossible to restore former conditions through a dissolution of the concern because "there was hardly a vestige left of any of the ruined companies outside of the 'graveyard' of the defendant company at Dayton." The "graveyard" is described in the petition as a room at the factory of the National Cash Register company at Dayton where were displayed registers of competing companies, which, it is charged, had been forced out of business by alleged illegal methods.

KANSAS FLOUR MILLS MERGED

Company With Capital of $9,000,000 Granted a Charter.

Topeka, Kansas—The Kansas Flour Milling company, with a capital stock of $9,000,000, was granted a charter by the state. The new company is a merger of five large milling concerns at Wellington, Great Bend, Arkansas City, Enterprise and Kansas City, Kas.

E. Z. Moses of Great Bend, one of the leading organizers of the new company, declared yesterday the organization is not in the nature of a trust and is not organized to control the prices of flour in any way.

"The proposition is simple," he said, "the milling industry of Kansas is one of the most important of any that we have. But owing to the fact that up to the present time all the mills have had limited capital and capacity they have not been able to pursue a progressive campaign for selling the Kansas product. Our company expects to create new demands and to successfully compete with the flour made in other sections of the United States."

M'NAMARAS ARE GUILTY

MAKE COMPLETE CONFESSION OF LOS ANGELES DYNAMITE OUTRAGES.

JAMES B. A MURDERER

For Causing the Deaths of Twenty-one Employes of the Times When He Dynamited the Plant, Oct. 1, 1911.

Los Angeles.—James B. McNamara pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree in Judge Walter Bordwell's court. His brother, John J. McNamara, secretary of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, entered a plea of guilty to having dynamited the Llewellyn Iron Works in Los Angeles on Christmas day, 1910.

James B. McNamara's confession clears up absolutely the tragedy of the explosion and fire which at 1 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 1, 1910, wrecked the plant of the Los Angeles Times at First and Broadway and caused the death of 21 persons. For nineteen of these deaths the McNamara brothers were indicted.

J. B. McNamara was on trial specifically for the murder of Charles J. Haggerty, a machinist whose body was found nearer than that of any other to the spot where the dynamite was supposed to have been placed.

It is expected District Attorney John D. Fredericks will ask for life imprisonment for James B. McNamara, the confessed murderer, and probably fourteen years for his brother. The men's lives are considered saved. The great contention that the Los Angeles Times was not dynamited is dead beyond resurrection or argument.

"He was counciled to confess because that was the best thing he could do, in the opinion of counsel," said Attorney Clarence S. Darrow, chief counsel. "I will say now that there was no other reason or motive in it. I've studied this case for months. It presented a stone wall."

Darrow's statement was made as looking squarely in the faces of the charges that the recent arrest of Burt H. Franklin, an investigator employed by the defense, and two others with him, might have precipitated a situation untenable save by confession of the prisoner.

Darrow also denied that external pressure was exerted from union labor socialist sources as General Harrison Gray Otis charged in a formal statement, or that the municipal election to be held next Tuesday in which Job Harriman, one of the defense's counsel, is candidate for mayor, carried any weight. It was learned that Harriman was not consulted at all in the deliberations.

A brotherly affection bordering on worship, it became known, brought about James McNamara's confession. A desire to save his brother from the necessity of confessing anything at all held back day after day the word that would end the trial.

Artie E. McManigal, the confessed dynamiter whose admissions are said to have been a big factor in the McNamaras pleading guilty, will go virtually free, if the plans of the state in his behalf do not go wrong.

The chief crime charged against the McNamaras and the one which finally led to their undoing was the destruction of the Los Angeles Times building. Organized labor opposed this paper because of its successful fight against the unions. There was much talk of a "gas explosion" at the time, and Socialist and labor union papers discussed the theory seriously, but men on the inside invariably smiled when they attributed the destruction of the Times to gas.

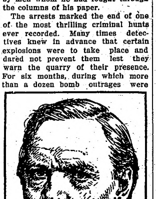
Shortly after the big presses in the basement had commenced rumbling on the morning of October 1, 1910, the Los Angeles Times building which was one of the landmarks of the southern California metropolis, was destroyed by an explosion which startled the city. Twenty-one lives were lost. The property loss was estimated at $500,000.

Twenty minutes after the explosion which shattered windows and broke glass in houses many blocks away, the seven-story brick and stone building was a mass of ruins, under which the score of victims lay, with the angry flames licking up every bit of inflammable material in sight, including several carloads of print paper stored in the basement. It was believed the explosion together with two other unsuccessful attempts, by which it was sought to destroy the homes of the owners of the Times, General Harrison Gray Otis, and Harry Zechandelaar, secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association, was the result of a conspiracy of certain union labor leaders who were known to be antagonistic to the Times and the merchants' organization.

For many years General Otis has been waging a relentless warfare against labor unions, commencing with his fight against the International Typographical union. He had enlisted the support of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, a powerful and influential body of Los Angeles business men, who stood by the Times publisher in his campaign against organized labor.

The feeling between the labor organizations and the Times was extremely bitter. General Otis openly and strongly attacked unionism on every possible occasion, and the unionists were equally bold in denouncing him and his allied forces. On several occasions the newspaper publisher's life has been threatened by men whom he had fought through the columns of his paper.

The arrests marked the end of one of the most thrilling criminal hunts ever recorded. Many times detectives knew in advance that certain explosions were to take place and dared not prevent them lest they warn the quarry of their presence. For six months, during which more than a dozen bomb outrages were staged by the "wrecking crew," its members are said never to have been out of sight of a detective. All this time the men were being sought by regular police in the cities in which they were operating, but never once, despite the omnipresence of posters describing their appearance accurately, were they molested by the authorities.



CLARENCE S. DARROW.

A few weeks before the Times building was destroyed an attempt was made to blow up a bridge at Peoria, Ill. This was in the latter part of September, 19.10. An error had been made in the adjustment of the machine and it failed to explode. It was found by a watchman and turned over to detectives employed by the Erectors' association—the national body of open-shop contractors, against whom the hand of the "wrecking crew" had been turned.

The contractors, who had been forced to stand helpless while a property loss running over $5,000,000 had been inflicted upon them, saw in the infernal machine their first clew, and soon a swarm of detectives went to work in Peoria. Some worked into the confidence of labor men and learned, it is said, that a Chicago man had "done the job."

Comparison of the machine found at Peoria and those picked up at Los Angeles convinced the detectives the dynamitings had been planned by the same person and carried out by his agent or agents. William J. Burns, head of the Burns Agency and the man who exposed the San Francisco graft ring, chanced to be in Los Angeles at the time of the explosion and was called into conference with Mayor Alexander, the chief of police, other city officials and representatives of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association.

He was offered a reward from the state, city and private interests which now totals $100,000, in the event that he undertook the case and his men ran down the criminals.

Going back to the Peoria plot, he traced McManigal to his Chicago home, and then placed a special squad of shadows on McManigal's trail.

A connection was soon established between McManigal and the McNamaras, and their connection with a number of additional dynamite cases established. Events came rapidly to a head, James B. McNamara and McManigal being arrested at Detroit on April 12, 1911, and his brother ten days later at Indianapolis. The latter was taken from an executive meeting of the Iron Workers' union, of which he was international secretary, and a search of the union headquarters revealed a mine of dynamite, bombs, etc., ready for use. The men were taken to Los Angeles, where they have since been in jail.

McManigal's confession and corroborative evidence connected the brothers with a series of over one hundred dynamite outrages, extending from May 31, 1906, until April 5, 1911, just a week before their arrest.

Airship May Have Escort.

Washington, D. C. — Dr. Paul F. Hans, president of the trans-Atlantic flight expedition, in charge of the proposed flight of the dirigible Suchard across the Atlantic ocean next March, called at the navy department and talked with Assistant Secretary Beekman Winthrop about the matter of having American warships meet the airship in mid-ocean to escort it to United States shores. As the flight is considered of international interest it is probable that the request will be granted.

SWOPE TESTIMONY IS BARRED.

Reference to Illness of Miss Margaret Ruled Out in Hyde Trial.

Kansas City, Mo. — All testimony regarding the illness of Miss Margaret Swope was barred from the trial of Dr. B. Clark Hyde, accused of killing Colonel Thomas H. Swope, by Judge Porterfield. In the former trial of the case an attempt was made to prove Dr. Hyde had poisoned Miss Swope with strychnine and injected typhoid germs into her arms.

WATER CURE AT "REF"

INTERESTING REVELATION OF ST. CLOUD INSTITUTION.

Claimed That Prisoners Have Been Threatened With Vigorous System When Noisy.

St. Paul. — A very unique way of quieting prisoners by turning a hose on them has been unearthed in the investigation of Superintendent Randall's conduct of the state reformatory at St. Cloud. The investigation was made by J. C. Matchitt, executive secretary of the board of visitors to state institutions.

It was charged that a hose was played on a boy until he begged for relief. According to Mr. Matchitt's report, Superintendent Randall could not remember the particular incident. Mr. Matchitt quotes Superintendent Randall as follows:

Believes He Did Use Hose.

"I do not remember it in connection with the incident you refer to, but I believe I did, on one occasion, turn the horse on an angry and noisy man to the extent that he became calm and good natured and the inmates in the adjoining cell house were enabled to sleep.

"Before the stream was applied the physician examined the man. The water was from an attic tank and was cold, and the treatment was effective in such a short time that it was not long continued. With my approval a similar measure has since been threatened, but a reasonable length of time having been given for reflection, it was not necessary to apply it."

Superintendent Exonerated.

In Mr. Matchitt's report Superintendent Randall is exonerated of the charges preferred against him by an inmate of the school, Frank Farrell. The charges were found in manuscript form in the cell of Farrell and were turned over to the board of visitors by Mr. Randall himself.

The charges were that political and outside influence is used in securing release of inmates; that there is no one to guard the interests of the prisoners; that their private affairs are made public property; that too many personal questions are asked them when they are admitted; that some officers were heartless and incompetent, and that inmates, when given hearings, are considered untruthful if they don't admit the charges made, and are punished if they do not plead guilty.

Farrell declared that he was sorry he had been mixed up in the affair. He said that his manuscript had been prepared from notes taken from two other inmates, John Smetzler and James A. Boland. No evidence to substantiate these charges could be found.

"The delay in the departure from the institution of paroled men is often caused by inability to find a suitable place for the man," says Mr. Matchitt. "The parole system is open to material improvement in that there should be a corps of parole officers."

MANKATO PUSHES GOOD ROADS

Project of a State Highway to the Twin Cities Presented to Towns.

Mankato.—A party of five good roads advocates from the Mankato Commercial club addressed meetings at Elysian and Waterville in the interest of the project started by the Madison Lake Commercial club to have the road from this city to the Twin Cities declared a state road and improved by grading and graveling so as to make it in good condition at all times, as is the portion of the road from this city as far east as Madison Lake.

The party consisted of President F. E. Crandall, George M. Palmer, chairman of the good roads commitee, John H. Hohmann, H. A. Patterson and County Auditor Edgar Weaver.

This was the first of a series of addresses to be made at towns along the route as far as Northfield, and it is hoped to awaken sufficient interest and enthusiasm to get the work done this winter.

BOOKS FOUND IN GOOD SHAPE.

Public Examiner Reports on Accounts of Two Schools.

St. Paul. — Public Examiner Fritz has filed reports with Governor Eberhart covering examinations made of the financial affairs of the Red Wing training school and the school for feeble minded and epileptics at Faribault. He finds the books in good shape.

In the case of the Faribault school, $600 was found which has been owing the institution by Carver county for the last four years. There is owing by the various counties for patients sent to the school nearly $7,000.

The cost of the superintendent's cottage at the Red Wing training schools, Mr. Fritz found on the ledger at $5,490.83 when in reality it cost $9,696.64. The difference, it is explained, was paid out of another fund.

CUSSICK GOES TO POOR HOUSE.

Formerly Drove Stage Between St. Paul and Duluth.

Duluth.—John Cussick, whose name is linked with that of early Minnesota in a singularly interesting manner, went to the St. Louis county poor farm. He worked on the old stage line between the Head of the Lakes and St. Paul in the later fifties, long before the first railroad arrived here. It is expected that pioneers of Duluth will interest themselves in the care of the aged pioneer.

REFORMATORY INVESTIGATED.

St. Cloud Inspected Following Sensational Article Written by Inmates.

St. Paul.—The state board of visitors has completed an investigation of conditions in the state reformatory at St. Cloud and its report will be in the hands of Governor Eberhart in a few days.

The investigation of the St. Cloud institution was brought about by Superintendent Randall following a discovery that three inmates were writing an article on conditions in the institution, supposedly for publication in some newspaper. Mr. Randall immediately turned the manuscript over to the state board of control and asked for an investigation.

The article, which was practically completed, was highly sensational and purported to describe the conditions in the reformatory.

The board of visitors spent several days at the institution and examined several witnesses, including the authors of the manuscript. One of the young men implicated denied that he had anything to do with the writing of the book.

Superintendent Randall has been at the head of the St. Cloud institution for several years. He was appointed by former Governor Lind.

PROGRESSIVES TO ORGANIZE.

Redwood County Republicans to Form League December 11.

Redwood Falls.—The Progressive Republicans of Redwood county are planning a big mass meeting to be held at Wabasso on Monday, Dec. 11, at which time a county organization will be perfected.

The object of the organization is purely for the purpose of promoting progressive principles and not for the purpose of boosting the political ambition of any person or persons.

About 100 blanks were sent out over the county for signatures of prominent Republicans who favor a Progressive league, and nearly 100 signatures have been received, a large percentage of the names being those of prominent farmers.

Nearly every precinct, out of forty in the county, will be represented.

Hon. James Peterson of Minneapolis has accepted an invitation to deliver an address at the Wabasso meeting.

POSTOFFICE FUNDS SHORT.

Assistant Postmaster at Belle Plaine Held to Federal Court.

Mankato.—George H. Nichols, assistant postmaster at Belle Plaine, was arraigned before Court Commissioner Taylor in this city on a warrant charging the embezzlement of $201.74 from government funds in the postoffice. He gave a bond for $500 for his appearance at the next term of the United States court at St. Paul, Dec. 5.

It appears that on Nov. 1 the defendant and his father, who is postmaster, went over the accounts of the postoffice and found everything apparently as it should be, with the accounts balanced, but the next day an inspector arrived and found the alleged deficit. The postmaster immediately made the amount good from his private funds. It is not thought the defendant had any intention of defrauding the government.

GOOD PRICE FOR STATE LAND.

Eastern Marshall County Soil Brings High Figures.

Warren.—In this city occurred the biggest sale of state land in the history of Marshall county. Twelve thousand acres were sold at from $8.50 to $15 per acre.

Most of the bidding on this land was done by farmers living in the vicinity of the land. Much of the land was sold to Iowa and Illinois farmers, who intend to move to this county and farm it.

At the Kittson county state land sale, held at Hallock, over 6,000 acres were sold at an average price of $12 an acre.

In all cases the land was sold at figures about 50 per cent higher than its appraised value. The land is located in the eastern part of Marshall county.

STATE'S BALANCE REDUCED.

Usual Overdraft Leaves $1,786,823.36 in Minnesota Treasury.

St. Paul. — Though the state's accounts show a balance of $2,270,949.42 in the various funds, the usual overdraft of the general revenue fund at this period, amounting to $484,126.06 this year, has reduced Minnesota's actual cash balance to $1,786,823.36, according to the monthly report given out by Walter J. Smith, state treasurer.

This overdraft, however, is gradually being offset by the payments of November taxes by the different counties, which are constantly being made in small amounts. The only one of the larger counties of the state to make payment so far is St. Louis, which recently sent in $200,000.

ST. CLOUD TO VOTE ON PLAN.

Commission Form of Government Seems Likely to Be Adopted.

St. Cloud.—A special election is to be held in this city for the purpose of voting upon a proposed new charter which embraces the commission form of government. Last fall a similar problem was faced by the voters, but at that time the matter was submitted as charter amendments. While the commission form received a majority of the votes, it failed to receive the 60 per cent demanded.

DETROIT HEARS EBERHAR

EXECUTIVES URGE RATIFICATION OF TREATIES.

Assume That If America Takes Lead in Peace Movement, Other Nations Will Follow.

Detroit, Mich. — "International conciliation and universal peace" was the subject of brief addresses by Governors Eberhart of Minnesota and Burke of North Dakota, members of the party of western governors now invading the East at the union nondenominational Thanksgiving exercises in this city. The other visiting governors spoke in the various churches throughout the city.

Governors Eberhart and Burke urged the ratification by the senate of the leading arbitration treaties.

"When the United States and England have accomplished this step, the other nations will do likewise," declared the chief executive of Minnesota. "We are now spending money on the army and navy that could be used for much more worthy causes, once the treaties are adopted," he concluded.

"It is the man with the gun that gets into trouble," declared Governor Burke, referring to 'war talk' and army and navy expenditures. "The man who looks for peace generally avoids trouble and to a large extent I predict it will be the same way with the nations."

The speaker expressed confidence in the final adoption of the pending treaties and ultimately a full realization of "peace on earth."

Both speakers were introduced by Governor Osborn of Michigan who accompanied the party here from Kalamazoo.

Party Guests of Toledo.

Toledo.—It was a round of entertainment, interspersed with speeches of thanks for their reception, that marked the stay of the governors of the Western states. The visitors were taken on an auto trip through the city, visiting the Yacht club, Country club and ending at the Toledo club, where a reception was held.

When the governors left the Toledo club, they went to the Commerce club, where a buffet luncheon was served. Here they were met by the Newsboys Cadets.

The governors, with the exception of Governor Eberhart of Minnesota, in their speeches at the Commerce club, dwelt upon the suffrage for women, advocating it strongly. At the conclusion, Frank Mulholland, vice president of the Conference club, asked for an expression on the subject from the four hundred business men present, and only three failed to raise their hands in approval.

While the governors were being entertained in the Commerce club, a party of business men from Cleveland arrived to escort them to that city.

LUMBERMAN'S WIFE DIES.

Mrs. Frederick Weyerhaeuser Succumbs After Several Weeks' Illness.

St. Paul. — Mrs. Frederick Weyerhaeuser, wife of the millionaire lumberman, who has been ill for several weeks at her residence. Mrs. Weyerhaeuser was born 73 years ago at Niedersaulheim, on the Rhine, in Germany, the same town in which Mr. Weyerhaeuser was born and raised. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Bloedel, and she came to this country with her father, as an infant.

Five years after Mr. Weyerhaeuser settled in this country he was married to her at Rock Island, Ill., Oct. 11, 1857.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Weyerhaeuser is survived by the following children: John P., St. Paul; Charles A., Little Falls, Minn.; Rudolph M., Cloquet, Minn.; Frederick E., St. Paul; Mrs. William Bancroft Hill, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Mrs. J. R. Jewett, Cambridge, Mass., and Mrs. S. S. Davis, Rock Island, Ill. There are eleven grand-children.

Wagonload of Timothy Brings $1,092.50

Sandstone.—A wagonload of timothy seed from the C. H. Cooper place was the most valuable load ever brought to this market. The net weight of the load was 4,370 pounds and at the market price of timothy seed was worth $1,092.50. It was threshed by Reese Workman from the hay of about ten acres. It passed over two scales for the purpose of verification. All of the land on which the timothy grew has been seeded upwards of ten years, the crop being cut each year and never turned under. Part of the land was never broken and the seed was planted on the top of the ground. Mr. Cooper figures that enough seed was lost in harvesting to reseed the ground from which it came. Mr. Cooper is an invalid and is unable to leave his chair, and his field work must of necessity be left to others. The seed represented only a small part of the returns from the farm.

Representative Block Gets Moose.

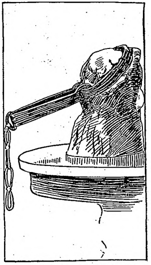
St. Cloud.—Former Representative H. C. Block of this city returned from a hunting trip in Beltrami county and brought home the biggest moose ever shipped to St. Cloud. The animal, which weighed 850 pounds dressed, stood seven feet high when standing. The bull moose was one of a herd of fourteen which had taken up winter quarters in a cedar thicket, and Mr. Block and his guide each secured one, the maximum allowed by law. The herd was tame until it had become scattered.

TRAP LOST FOR 20 YEARS

Recently Found by the Original Owner Firmly Imbedded in a Cypress "Knee."

Dexter, Mo.—When Oscar Trotter, a farmer and trapper living near here, lost a trap twenty years ago, he did not know it would be returned in a wooden box many years later. Mink, 'possum and raccoons were plentiful in the lowlands near Dexter in those days. At each trap some kind of a marker was placed which would show its location, but in this instance Trotter failed to mark the trap and it was lost.

Several days ago when he was clearing a piece of ground he recognized the old trap about four feet above the ground, where it had grown into a cypress "knee." The "knee" had grown directly beneath the trap and raised it and as it did so the trap had become firmly imbedded in the wood. The chain had been broken when the trap was raised. Trotter presented the curio to William Smith, a salesman, who had given the trap to him with others two years before it was lost. Smith gave it to F. A. Witte, a hardware merchant of St. Louis, who has it in his office.



Trap in Cypress "Knee."

HUSBAND'S CHARMER A MAN

Unique Defense Fails to Defeat Divorce Plea Because There Was Another.

Kansas City, Mo.—An unexpected denouement came in the divorce suit of Lillian Benner against Joseph G. Benner, on trial in the circuit court, when the wife learned that "Miss May Martin" of Leavenworth, whose loving letter to her husband she had intercepted, was a man.

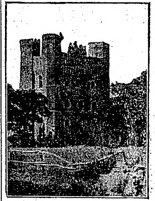
Mrs. Benner had named "Miss Martin" co-respondent in the suit. Benner admitted he had carried on a long correspondence with "Miss Martin" and had endeavored to meet her several times, but each time "Miss Martin" had some excuse. Finally, after Mrs. Benner had brought her suit, Benner went to Leavenworth and made a still hunt for his charmer. He didn't find any "her," but he did find a young man who had been having a lot of fun, not only with Benner but with several other men who supposed they were corresponding with a "perfect lady."

Benner's attorney contended that, since "Miss Martin" was a man, Mrs. Benner was not entitled to a divorce but that Benner was entitled to a decree on charges of misconduct he had made against Mrs. Benner. Mrs. Benner still had trumps, however, and introduced letters showing that Benner had written in endearing terms to a young lady who appeared as a witness for Mrs. Benner, who was given the decree.

CASTLE TO STAY IN ENGLAND

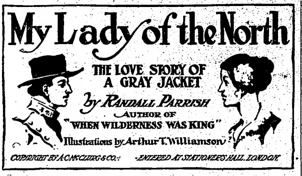
Report That Old Tattersall Structure Was to Be Brought to America Set at Rest.

New York.—Tattersall castle, which is near Lincoln, in England, was recently offered as a gift to the British nation. It was declined and afterward a report was circulated that the castle was to be brought to America and reerected on Long Island. But such reports were set at rest when Lord Curzon purchased it.



Tattersall Castle.

The castle is mainly of the Sixteenth century, but parts of it are older. Its famous fireplaces, built in 1426, were the models for the fireplaces in the house of parliament.



My Lady of the North

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan, recognizing Wayne, says she will save him.

CHAPTER XVII.—Continued.

"Colonel Curran is certainly to be congratulated upon having found so charming a guide, madam, and I can assure you I shall most gladly do my part toward the success of the expedition. The Major was expected back before this, I believe?"

"He left word that if he had not returned by twelve I was to wait for him no longer, as he should go directly to his quarters. I find the life of a soldier to be extremely uncertain."

"We are our country's servants, madam," he replied proudly, and then taking out a pad of blanks from his pocket, turned to me.

"May I ask your full name and rank, Colonel?"

"Patrick L. Curran, Colonel, Sixth Ohio Light Artillery."

He wrote it down rapidly, tore off the paper, and handed it to me.

"That will take you safely through our inner guard lines," he said gravely, "that being as far as my jurisdiction extends. Good-night, Colonel; good-night, Mrs. Brennan."

We bowed ceremoniously, and the next moment Mrs. Brennan and I were out upon the steps, breathing the cool night air. I glanced curiously at her face as the gleam of light fell upon it—how calm and reserved she appeared, and yet her eyes were aglow with intense excitement. At the foot of the steps she glanced up at the dark, projecting roof far above us.

"Do you suppose he can possibly be up there yet?" she asked, in a tone so low as to be inaudible to the ears of the sentry.

"Who? Bungay?" I questioned in surprise, for my thoughts were elsewhere. "Oh, he was like a cat, and there are trees at the rear. Probably he is safe long ago, or else a prisoner once more."

Beyond the gleam of the uncovered windows all was wrapped in complete darkness, save that here and there we could distinguish the dull red glare of camp-fires where the company cooks were yet at work, or some sentry post had been established. We turned sharply to the left, and proceeded down a comparatively smooth road, which seemed to me to possess a rock basis, it felt so hard. From the position of the stars I judged our course to be eastward, but the night was sufficiently obscured to shroud all objects more than a few yards distant. Except for the varied camp noises on either side of us the evening was oppressively still, and the air had the late chill of high altitudes. Mrs. Brennan pressed more closely to me as we passed beyond the narrow zone of light, and unconsciously we fell into step together.

A few hundred yards farther a fire burned redly against a pile of logs. The forms of several men lay outstretched beside it, while a sentry paced back and forth, in and out of the range of light. We were almost upon him before he noted our approach, and in his haste he swung his musket down from his shoulder until the point of its bayonet nearly touched my breast.

"Halt!" he cried sternly, peering at us in evident surprise. "Halt! this road is closed."

"Valley Forge," whispered the girl, and I noticed how white her face appeared in the flaming of the fire.

"The word is all right, Miss," returned the fellow, stoutly, yet without lowering his obstructing gun. "But we cannot pass any one out on the countersign alone. If you was going the other way it would answer."

"But we are returning from the officers' ball," she urged anxiously, "and are on our way to Major Brennan's quarters. We have passes."

As she drew the paper from out her glove one of the men at the fire sprang to his feet and strode across the narrow road toward us. He was smooth of face and boyish looking, but wore corporal's stripes.

"What is it, Mapes?" he asked sharply

Without waiting an answer he took the paper she held out and scanned it rapidly.

"This is all right," he said, handing it back, and lifting his cap in salute. "You may pass, madam. You must pardon us, but the orders are exceedingly strict to-night. Have you a pass also, Colonel?" I handed it to him, and after a single glance it was returned.

"Pass them, guard," he said curtly, standing aside.

Beyond the radiance of the fire she broke the silence.

"I shall only be able to go with you so far as the summit of the hill yonder, for our quarters are just to the night, and I could furnish no excuse for being found beyond that point," she said. "Do you know enough of the country to make the lines of your army?"

"If this is the Kendallville pike we are on," I answered, "I have a pretty clear conception of what lies ahead, but I should be very glad to know where I am to look for the outer picket."

"There is one post at the ford over the White Briar," she replied. "I chance to know this because Major Brennan selected the station, and remarked that the stream was so high and rapid as to be impassable at any other point for miles. But I regret this is as far as my information extends."

I started to say something—what I hardly know—when, almost without sound of warning, a little squad of horsemen swept over the brow of the hill in our front, their forms darkly outlined against the starlit sky, and rode down toward us at a sharp trot. I had barely time to swing my companion out of the track when they clattered by, their heads bent low to the wind, and seemingly oblivious to all save the movements of their leader.

"Sheridan!" I whispered, for even in that dimness I had not failed to recognize the short, erect figure which rode in front.

The woman shuddered, and drew closer within my protecting shadow. Then out of the darkness there burst a solitary rider, his horse limping as if crippled, and would have ridden us down, had I not flung up one hand and grasped his bridle-rein.

"Great Scott! what have we here?" he cried roughly, peering down at us. "By all the gods, a woman!"

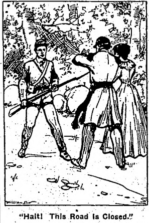
The hand upon my arm clutched me desperately, and my own heart seemed to choke back every utterance. The voice was Brennan's.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Reputation of a Woman.

Like a flash occurred to me the only possible means by which we might escape open discovery—an instant disclosure of my supposed rank, coupled with indignant protest. Already, believing me merely some private soldier straying out of bounds with a woman of the camp as companion, he had thrown himself from the saddle to investigate. Whatever was to be done must be accomplished quickly, or it would prove all too late. To think was to act. Stepping instantly in front of the shrinking girl and facing him, I said sternly:

"I do not know who you may chance to be, sir, nor greatly care, yet your words and actions imply an insult to this lady which I am little disposed to overlook. For your information permit me to state, I am Colonel Curran, Sixth Ohio Light Artillery, and am not accustomed to being halted on the road by every drunken fool who sports a uniform."



"Halt! This Road Is Closed."

He stopped short in complete surprise, staring at me through the darkness, and I doubted not was perfectly able to distinguish the glint of buttons and gleam of braid.

"Your pardon, sir," he ejaculated at last. "I mistook you for some runaway soldier. But I failed to catch your words; how did you name yourself?"

"Colonel Curran, of Major-General Halleck's staff."

"The hell you are! Curran had a full gray beard a month ago."

He took a step forward, and before I could recover from the first numbing shock of surprise was peering intently into my face.

"Damn it!" he cried, tugging viciously at a revolver in his belt, "I know that face! You are the measly Johnny Reb I brought in day before yesterday."

There came a quick flutter of drapery at my side, and she, pressing me firmly backward, faced him without a word.

The man's extended arm dropped to his side as though pierced by a bullet, and he took one step backward, shrinking as if his startled eyes beheld a ghost.

"Edith?" he cried, as though doubting his own vision, and the ring of agony in his voice was almost piteous. "Edith! My God! You here, at midnight, alone with this man?"

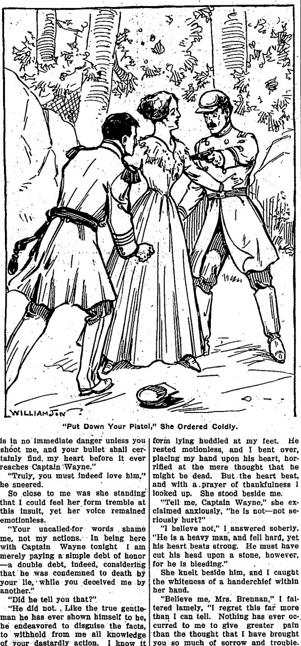
However the words, the tone, the gesture may have stung her, her face remained proudly calm, her voice cold and clear.

"I certainly am, Major Brennan," she answered, her eyes never once leaving his face. "And may I ask what reason you can have to object?"

"Reason?" His voice had grown hoarse with passion and surprise. "My God, how can you ask? How can you even face me? Why do you not sink down in shame? Alone here,"—he looked about him into the darkness—"at such an hour, in company with a Rebel, a sneaking, cowardly spy, already condemned to be shot. By Heaven! he shall never live to boast of it!"

He flung up his revolver barrel to prove the truth of his threat, but she stepped directly between us, and shielded me with her form.

"Put down your pistol," she ordered coldly. "I assure you my reputation is in no immediate danger unless you shoot me, and your bullet shall certainly find my heart before it ever reaches Captain Wayne."



"Put Down Your Pistol," She Ordered Coldly.

"Truly, you must indeed love him," he sneered.

So close to me was she standing that I could feel her form tremble at this insult, yet her voice remained emotionless.

"Your uncalled-for words shame me, not my actions. In being here with Captain Wayne tonight I am merely paying a simple debt of honor—a double debt, indeed, considering that he was condemned to death by your lie, while you deceived me by another."

"Did he tell you that?"

"He did not. Like the true gentleman he has ever shown himself to be, he endeavored to disguise the facts, to withhold from me all knowledge of your dastardly action. I know it by the infamous sentence pronounced against him and by your falsehood to me."

"Edith, you mistake," he urged anxiously. "I—I was told that he had been sent North."

She drew a deep breath, as though she could scarcely grasp the full audacity of his pretence to ignorance.

"You appeared to be fully informed but now as to his death sentence."

"Yes, I heard of it while away, and intended telling you as soon as I reached our quarters."

I could feel the scorn of his miserable deception as it curled her lip, and her figure seemed to straighten between us.

"Then," she said slowly, "you will doubtless agree that I have done no more than was right, and will therefore permit him this chance of escape from so unmerited a fate; for you know as well as I do that he has been wrongly condemned."

He stepped forward with a half-smothered oath, and rested one hand heavily upon her shoulder.

"I rather guess not, madam," he said. "Damn him! I will hang him now higher than Haman, just to show Queen Esther that it can be done. Out of the way, madam!"

Rendered desperate by her slight resistance and his own jealous hatred, he thrust the woman aside so rudely that she fell forward upon one knee. His revolver was yet in his right hand, gleaming in the starlight, but before he could raise or fire it I had grasped the steel barrel firmly, and the hammer came down noiselessly upon the flesh of my thumb. The next instant we were locked close together in fierce struggle for the mastery. He was the heavier, stronger man; I the younger and quicker. From the first every effort on both sides was put forth solely to gain command of the weapon—his to fire, mine to prevent, for I knew well at the sound of the discharge there would come a rush of blue-coats to his rescue. My first fierce onset had put him on the defensive; but as we tugged and strained his superiority in weight began to tell, and slowly he bore me backward, untill all the weight of my body rested upon my right leg. Then there occurred to me like a flash a wrestler's trick taught me years before by an old negro on my father's plantation. Instantly I appeared to yield to the force against which I contended with simulated weakness, sinking lower and lower, until, I doubt not, Brennan felt convinced I must go over backward. But as I thus sank, my left foot found steady support farther back, while my free hand sank slowly down his straining body until my groping fingers grasped firmly the broad belt about his waist. I yielded yet another inch, until he leaned so far over me as to be out of all balance, and then, with sudden straightening of my left leg, at the same time forcing my head beneath his chest in leverage, with one tremendous effort I flung him, head under, crashing down upon the hard road. Trembling like a reed from the exertion, I stood there looking down upon the dark form lying huddled at my feet. He rested motionless, and I bent over, placing my hand upon his heart, horrified at the mere thought that he might be dead. But the heart beat, and with a prayer of thankfulness I looked up. She stood beside me.

"Tell me, Captain Wayne," she exclaimed anxiously, "he is not—not seriously hurt?"

"I believe not," I answered soberly. "He is a heavy man, and fell hard, yet his heart beats strong. He must have cut his head upon a stone, however, for he is bleeding."

She knelt beside him, and I caught the whiteness of a handerchief within her hand.

"Believe me, Mrs. Brennan," I faltered lamely, "I regret this far more than I can tell. Nothing has ever occurred to me to give greater pain than the thought that I have brought you so much of sorrow and trouble. You will have faith in me?"

"Always, everywhere—whether it ever be our fate to meet again or not. But now you must go."

"Go? And leave you here alone? Are you not afraid?"

"Afraid?" she looked about her into the darkness. "Of what? Surely you do not mean of Frank—of Major Brennan? And as to my being alone, our quarters are within a scant hundred yards from here, and a single cry will bring me aid in plenty. Hush! what was that?"

It was the shuffling tread of many feet, the sturdy tramp of a body of infantry on the march.

"Go!" she cried hurriedly. "If you would truly serve me, if you care at all for me, do not longer delay and be discovered here. It is the grand rounds. I beg of you, go!"

I grasped her outstretched hand, pressed my lips hotly upon it, and sped with noiseless footsteps down the black, deserted road.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Cavalry Outpost.

I lingered merely long enough to feel assured as to her safety, creeping closer until I heard her simple story of the Major's fall from his horse, and then watched through the night shadows while the little squad bore his unconscious form over the crest of the low hill toward their quarters. Then I turned my face eastward and tramped resolutely on. I was, first of all, a soldier, and nothing short of death or capture should prevent me reaching Lee with my message. Let what would happen, all else could wait!

The gleam of the stars fell upon the double row of buttons down the breast of the coat I wore, and I stopped suddenly with an exlamation of disgust. Nothing could be gained by longer masquerade, and I felt inexpressible shame at being thus attired. Neither pass nor uniform would suffice to get me safe through those outer picket lines, and if I should fall in the attempt, or be again made prisoner, I vastly preferred meeting my fate clad in the faded gray of my own regiment. With odd sense of relief I hastily stripped off the gorgeous trappings, flung them in the ditch beside the road, and pressed on, feeling like a new man.

There was small need for caution here, and for more than an hour I tramped steadily along, never meeting a person or being startled by a suspicious sound. Then, as I rounded a low eminence I perceived before me the dark outlines of trees which marked the course of the White Briar, while directly in my front, and half obscured by thick leaves of the underbrush, blazed the red glare of a fire. I knew the stream well, its steep banks of percipitate rock, its rapid, swirling current which, I was well aware, I was not a sufficiently expert swimmer to cross. Once upon the other bank I should be comparatively safe, but to pass that picket post and attain the ford was certain to require all the good fortune I could ever hope for.

But despair was never for long my comrade, and I had learned how determination opens doors to the courageous—it is ever he who tries that enters in. It took me ten minutes, possibly, creeping much of the way like a wild animal over the rocks, but at the end of that time I had attained a position well within the dense thicket, and could observe clearly the ground before me and some of the obstacles to be overcome.

As I supposed, it was a cavalry outpost; I could distinguish the crossed sabers on the caps of the men, although it was some time before I was able to determine positively where their horses were picketed. There must have been all of twenty in the party, and I could distinguish the lieutenant in command, a middle-aged man with light-colored chin beard, seated by himself against the wall of a small shanty of logs, a pipe in his mouth and an open book upon his knee. His men were gathered close about the blazing fire, for the night air was decidedly chill as it swept down the valley; a number were sleeping, a few at cards, while a little group, sitting with their backs toward me, yet almost within reach of my hand, were idly smoking and discussing the floating rumors of the camp. I managed to make out dimly the figure of a man on horseback beyond the range of flame, and apparently upon the very bank of the stream, when some words spoken by an old gray-beared sergeant interested me.

"Bob," he said to the soldier lounging next him, "whut wus it thet staff officer sed ter ther leftenant? I didn't just git ther straight of it."

The man, a debonair youg fellow, stroked his little black mustaches reflectively.

"Ther cove sed as how Cole's division wud be along here afore daylight, an' thet our fellers wud likely be sent out ahead of 'em."

"Whar be they a goin'?"

"The leftenant asked him, an' the cove sed as it wus a gineral advance to meet ol' Hancock at Minersville."

"Thet's good 'nough, lads," chimed in the sergeant, slapping his knee. "It means a dance down the valley after Early. I'm a guessin' we'll have a bang-up ol' fight 'fore three days more."

"Pervidin' allers thet ther Johnnies don't skedaddle fust," commented another, tartly. "Whut in thunder is ther matter with them hosses?" he asked suddenly, rising and peering over into the bushes beyond the hut, where a noise of squealing and kicking had arisen.

"Oh, the bay filly is probably over the rope agin," returned the sergeant, lazily. "Sit down, Sims, an' be easy; you're not on hoss guard ter-night."

"I know thet," growled the soldier, doubtfully, "but thet thar kid is no good, an' I don't want my hoss all banged up just as we're goin' on campaign. 'Tain't no sorter way ter hitch 'em anyhow, to a picket rope; ruins more hosses than ther Rebs dew."

Standard of Colors.

The call for international standards of all kinds is becoming every day more insistent with the progressive unification of the industries of the world. The latest demand of this kind is for an international standard of colors.

Chemists, manufacturers of dyestuffs and pigments, and many others would benefit by such a standard. It is suggested that when once the desired color scheme has been decided upon, the best method of perpetuating the standards, and rendering them available for comparison everywhere, would be by means of colored glasses with which a tintometer could be constructed. A tentative instrument of this kind, based on an arbitrary color scheme, has been made.—Youth's Companion.

BIG MISTAKES IN CLEANING

Misguided Housewives Scrub and Clean and Then Spoil Work With Dirty Dish Towels.

Undoubtedly there are women who will clean out the cracks in the back door steps with a wooden skewer and yet will wash dishes with a rag composed of many fragments and squeeze it out of the dishwater to lie in a wad until needed again. A physician once told a housewife that her kitchen floor should be wiped free of dust every day and thereafter she washed it with a generous amount of water, keeping it continually damp and a menace to health.

A good many misguided housekeepers scrub and beat the beauty out of their household belongings and in fighting the dust germ after this manner, they substitute the continued dampness which is a fine culture for molds and mildews. They scour and wash utensils and set them to air, after the fashion of long ago at isolated farm houses, not realizing that the air in town and city is laden with dust that includes much more than particles of Mother Earth. They sterilize fruit jars covers and then carefully wipe them with a dish towel thus adding more germs than were there before sterlizing.

WHERE MEN COOKS EXCEL

Their Methods Surpass Those of Most Women in Economy of Motion.

I have had occasion to watch many men cooks and have often noted that their methods surpass those of most women cooks in economy of motion. This is apparent in cutting celery or rhubarb—a man's knives, by the way, are always sharp. A man lays on the board as many pieces as his knife will strike, and slices through them all in a twinkling. Men cooks have a deft way of chopping food. Anything not committed to the chopping machine (they never use a chopping tray), they place on their board, and, holding the palm of the left hand lightly over the end of the blade, they work the knife like a lever. Pitchers are held in high esteem with them, too. Try mixing pancakes in a pitcher of the bellboy shape—one that an eggbeater fits in nicely. And how much easier to pour directly from this pitcher onto the griddle, instead of ladling the batter out of a bowl.—Good Housekeeping.

German Coffee Cake.

When making bread reserve a cup of sponge, and one cup of milk, previously boiled and cooled (or luke warm water will do), add one-third cup sugar, salt-spoon of salt and one heaping teaspoon of either butter, cottolene or good clear drippings (beef, never mutton). Stir in enough flour to knead a good firm loaf, not too stiff; then roll out an inch thick; let it raise, and when light dot bits of butter over the surface and sprinkle generously a mixture of sugar and cinnamon. The addition of blanched almonds, chopped fine, is an improvement, and if you sprinkle a few drops of water or milk over the top the sugar will candy and taste better, at least to the children. Bake till a golden brown. You can also bake this in a loaf, adding raisins, or wtihout raisins you can make zwieback of it by cutting in slices and toasting in a slow oven.

Rolled Oat Cakes.

One cup of rolled oats, 1½ cups of white flour, one-half cup of light brown sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-third cup of sour milk, one-half teaspoon soda, one handful of raisins and dates chopped fine. Break the oat flakes up fine with the hands, add the flour sifted with the soda, rub or cut the butter in as for pie crust. At the beginning of operations put the sour milk and sugar together and when other work is done add these. Roll thin, sand with granulated sugar, then cut out. This will make three or four dozen cookies 1½ inches across. It makes a much easier dough to handle than one with egg, so can be rolled thin with ease.

Apricot Tapioca.

Soak one cupful of fine tapioca for two hours in sufficient cold water to cover. Drain, put into a double boiler with one-quarter of a cupful of sugar and the syrup drained from a can of apricots, adding boiling water sufficient to give three cupfuls of liquid. Add one-half of a teaspoonful of salt and cook until transparent. Cut each piece of apricot into three and put in layers in a pudding dish with the cooked tapioca. Bake for half an hour in a moderate oven and serve with cream.

Frying Veal.

When frying veal, either steak or chops, first dip the meat in a little sweet milk. Then place in a frying pan containing hot butter or a mixture of hot butter and lard. Fry over a good fire and see the results. The milk causes the meat to brown beautifully and imparts to it a delicious flavor and unusual tenderness. Veal fried in this way browns quickly and the juice of the meat is retained, which is not the case when frying is continued for a long time.

Watch Heat of Oven.

A slow oven is one which will slightly yellow a piece of paper after three minutes. But a gas oven often grows fast before one knows it, and no two ovens are exactly the same, hence the need of great care.

No Soap There.

It was a modern version of that ancient saw that shoemakers' children go barefoot. A ten-year-old boy had presented himself at the settlement playground coated with many layers or city soil. The teacher lost no time in administering a reproof.

"Gee, how can I help it," sniffled the boy, "when me mother's a washwoman and takes all the soap away wid 'er?"

WORKS WITHOUT FAITH

Faith Came After the Works Had Laid the Foundation.

A Bay State belle talks thus about coffee:

"While a coffee drinker I was a sufferer from indigestion and intensely painful nervous headaches, from childhood.

"Seven years ago my health gave out entirely. I grew so weak that the exertion of walking, if only a few feet, made it necessary for me to lie down. My friends thought I was marked for consumption—weak, thin and pale.

"I realized the danger I was in and tried faithfully to get relief from medicines, till, at last, after having employed all kinds of drugs, the doctor acknowledged that he did not believe it was in his power to cure me.

"While in this condition a friend induced me to quit coffee and try Postum, and I did so without the least hope that it would do me any good. I did not like it at first, but when it was properly made I found it was a most delicious and refreshing beverage. I am especially fond of it served at dinner ice-cold, with cream.

"In a month's time I began to improve, and in a few weeks my indigestion ceased to trouble me, and my headache stopped entirely. I am so perfectly well now that I do not look like the same person, and I have so gained in flesh that I am 15 pounds heavier than ever before.

"This is what Postum has done for me. I still use it and shall always do so." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

FASHIONS OF ORIENT

FABRICS AND COLORS OF EAST PREVAIL IN LONDON.

Turbaned Women Swathed in Their Evening Gowns Seen at the Opera—Craze Reaches Motor Garments.

A London correspondent writes: The opening event of the autumn season of opera at Covent Garden brought out the latest fashions in evening gowns and hair adornments. Everywhere one saw the influence of "Sumurun" and "Kismet," those eastern successes which have obsessed play-going London for the last few months.

Oriental fabrics and colors prevailed and most of the frocks showed draped folds of silk or velvet with Persian embroideries and barbaric jewels. Apparently every English woman this winter is going to be Oriental and swathe herself in her evening gown. Corsets are abandoned, for it is the stayless, lithe figure which is best suited to eastern draperies.

As for hair ornaments, they range in style from huge turbans to small fillets of dull gold. Mrs. Brown Potter wore the most conspicuous headgear in the opera house. It was a turban of shot blue and silver gauze, in the folds of which nestled a large stone which shone with blue and green light.

Some women wore Oriental scarfs in green and gold or black and silver wound round their heads and fastened at the back with jeweled ornaments. Others had threaded pearls through the curls and puffs of their coiffures; and still others had twisted chains around their heads, bringing the ends down under their chins, making a necket of a new description rather like a chin strap.

Another novelty was the necklace of the same material as the gown. A narrow strip of satin or chiffon formed the chain and attached to that was a pendant of ornament made of the same stuff. A particularly pretty necklace of this sort, which was worn with a pale-blue and mauve gown, had two narrow strips, one of pink, one mauve, twisted together to form the necklace, while a little flat band of pink and mauve roses made an ornament which fastened on the front of the corsage.

The eastern craze has even reached motor garments, and its latest evidence is in the Ali Baba motor cap. This is made of velvet or Persian silk, folded round and round with the characteristic back tilt much exaggerated. A little real lace frill is fastened at the back and falls over the hair and the nape of the neck.

LATEST IN VELVET SHOES

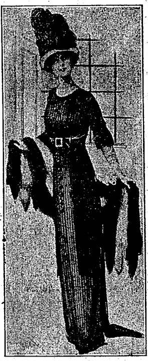
Louis XIV. and Louis XV. Lead the Way in This Season's Styles.

In house and evening shoes there are the most exquisite things.

Louis XIV. and Louis XV. models lead the way, with heels so high that it is dangerous to make a brusque movement. They must be in exactly the same material as the dress with which they are worn, and they must have exquisite buckles or buttons in fine silver, paste or enamel, with one's monogram, as one likes.

A violet velvet frock trimmed with fur and lace would have violet velvet shoes and real lace stockings like the lace on the frock, and so on through all one's wardrobe. Naturally, women with small incomes cannot do this sort of thing to any extent, but they can follow modestly, and it is quite well worth while to give some attention to the detail of having the right shoes and stockings for each gown.

SMART VISITING GOWN



This is built in the new finely striped velveteen, having a gray ground and black stripe and trimmed with black silk braid and fringe. The helmet hat is of gray satin, with black ostrich plumes.

Her Gloves.

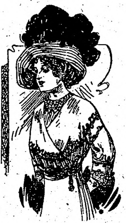
For tailored suit wear, for mornings, shopping occasions and general work, the always popular capeskin in the pretty autumn tans will be the glove she will adopt.

For the afternoons, however, and the evening, she will divide her choice—for the soft, velvet-like suedes will be almost as fashionable as the smooth-finished and fine French kidskins. Plain white, of course, will be very greatly worn, but pale tans—biscuit, champagne, delicate mode, pearl gray and the creamy yellows will also come in for a due share of attention.

In Two Tones.

Silk stockings woven in two tones are considered very smart, as for instance, gray and pink or blue or green. Frequently these are embroidered; in fact, embroidered silk stockings in plain colors are coming back into special favor and fashion.

FOR SILK OR WOOL



This pretty model can be made of almost any material. It is crossed in front and fastened with a motif of passementerie. It is trimmed with a beautiful soutache embroidery, as are also the kimono sleeves and the plastrons.

The little guimpe and the cuffs are of lace.

The Black Gown.

The woman who wears black will delight in the new crepes de chine and crepe meteors, which seem lovelier than ever this season. The crepes de chine may be had with either the dull or satin finish. They are fashionable and well liked for whole gowns.

HELPFUL HINTS ON BEAUTY

Proper Care of the Ears Important to Woman Who Cares for Her Looks.

If only from the beauty-point of view alone the ears should be well looked after. A dull sense of hearing will actually alter the expression of the face, and the outward condition of the ears themselves is important to the woman who cares for her looks.

When an insect gets into one's ear it is almost impossible to prevent wild alarm, but this is really uncalled for. The bitter wax in the ear usually sends the insect out again. A little tepid water may be dropped into the ear while the head is held sidewise, and the insect will wash harmlessly out when the head is turned again.

If the ears are too pale circulation can be encouraged by frequent gentle pinchings and pullings.

If, on the other hand, the ears are too red they must not be handled. Dusting with French chalk will reduce the redness and give them a more refined appearance.

But the time to cultivate beautiful ears is in childhood. If the ears stand out too far from the head tie bandages over the ears at night or use tape caps, which hold the ears back against the skull, yet permit the hair the ventilation it requires.

Footwear Extravagance.

You cannot economize on your feet this season when they are so much in evidence, therefore every woman will have to take up the two subjects together—the kind of suit she buys and the kind of shoes she will get to go with the suit.

Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me promptly and I owe my life to them."

CUTICURA OINTMENT HEALED BAD SORE ON LIMB

"Some time ago I was coming up some steps when the board crushed under me like an egg shell, and my right limb went through to the knee, and scraped he flesh off the bone just inside and below the knee. I neglected it for a day or two, then it began to hurt me pretty badly. I put balsam fir on to draw out the poison, but when I had used it a week, it hurt so badly that I changed to —— ointment. That made it smart and burn so badly that I couldn't use it any more, and that was the fourth week after I was hurt.

"Then I began to use Cuticura Ointment for the sore. It stopped hurting immediately and began healing right away. It was a bad-looking sore before Cuticura Ointment healed it, and I suffered so I couldn't sleep from two days after I fell until I began using Cuticura Ointment.

"Cuticura Soap is the best soap I ever saw. I have used all kinds of soap for washing my face, and always it would leave my face smarting. I had to keep a lotion to stop the smart, no matter how expensive a soap I used. I find at last in Cuticura Soap a soap that will clean my face and leave no smarting, and I do not have to use any lotion or anything else to ease it. I believe Cuticura Soap is the best soap made." (Signed) Mrs. M. E. Fairchild, 805 Lafayette St., Wichita, Kan., May 8, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 22 K, Boston.

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

A Case Where Two Infallibles Held Conflicting Opinions.

The fallibility of expert testimony, which under stress of clever cross examination tends to the too decided statement, is amusingly revealed in "Science and the Criminal," a book by C. Ainsworth Mitchell, the head of the inspection bureau of Scotland Yard.

Nethercliffe, who was the chief handwriting expert in the days when the witty Lord Brampton was at the bar, had such faith in his methods that finally he came to believe that he could not make a mistake.

In a case in which he was under cross examination by Lord Brampton, then Mr. Hawkins, Nethercliffe had claimed that his system gave infallible results and had further stated that his son, whom he had trained, made use of the same system.

"Then," said the wily advocate, "your son, working on your system, is as good as you are?"

"Yes," replied the father, with some pride in his voice, "he is."

"That is to say, he, too, is infallible?"

"Yes," again replied the witness.

"Well, now, Mr. Nethercliffe, was there ever a case in which you and your son appeared on opposite sides?"

Nethercliffe tried to evade the question, which, he complained, was an unfair one, but on being pressed was forced to admit that on a certain occasion he had given evidence on one side and his son upon the other. Swift came the unanswerable retort:

"How comes it, then, that two infallibles appeared on opposite sides?"

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured.
MRS. C. C. GOKEY, Northfield, Vt.

If you have any of the symptoms Mrs. Gokey mentions, it is your duty to protect yourself.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy.

is what you need. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your money is returned. Ask your druggist.

Birth Rate Increases

Of 43,950 Births Last Year Northern Minnesota Took Lead.

The stork made more quiet trips to the northern part of the state in 1909, than it made to St. Paul or Minneapolis, proportinate to the population, and in some towns it almost doubled the number. This is shown by the report of the state board of health, just issued. There were 43,950 babies delivered by his majesty the stork in 1909, a smaller number according to population than during any year since 1901.

The birth rate based on the state as a whole in 1909, was 21.5 to the 1,000 population.

An Interesting Meeting

The farmers institute held here Monday brought into town a large number of farmers and the meeting was one of the most successful ones ever held here, in point of attendance.

Unfortunately, however, many of the farmers who brought in grain, etc., to market were unable to get through early enough to attend the morning meeting and a large number who had to wait their turn at the elevator, were forced to miss the meeting altogether. Many interesting topics were discussed and much interest was manifested in the lectures by who attended the meeting.

The institute was in charge of E. W. Smith, T. V. Staples, C. O. Carlson and Mrs. M. F. Nugget, who have had charge of similar meetings in this part of the state this fall.

Among the things discussed were dairying, swine raising, poultry, corn, clover, potatoes, gardening, horticulture which were accompanied by illustrations, working models, and charts

Mr. Carlson, who is well known throughout Minnesota as one of the most successful farmers in the state delivered a very instructive lecture along the lines of dairying, etc., and gave many pointers on the success of dairying that should be of a great deal of benefit to those who will follow his example.

E. W. Smith, an eminent authority on horticulture gave several interesting speeches as did also T. V. Staples.

Mrs. Nugget's speech, on the woman's duties on the farm also proved interesting and instructive.

No Extra Session

Gordon Figured On Doing a Great stunt While the Main Push Was Gone.

Minneapolis, Dec. 13.—Attorney General Simpson put a wet blanket on the extra session proposition of Lieutenant Governor Gorden today. The attorney general replying to Gordon's letter asking whether he should act as governor in the absence of Governor Eberhart, from the state, says he may if an emergency seems to require it. However, if Gordon should call an extra session, the governor could revoke the call as soon as he returns and the governor's word would be final.

As the governor in Pittsburg today declared once more there will be no extra session, all such possibility is removed, and it is not likely that the lieutenant governor will take any action in face of the opinion.

The whole state has been set in a turmoil by the lieutenant governor's action yesterday and members of the legislature by scores, wrote, wired and telephoned today to learn what was doing. The outcome makes a political comedy out of what threatened serious results, and the hand of Gordon's astute press agent is seen in the incident.

Secures Band Leader.

Ben Lonson, a rising young musician of Thief River Falls, who is at present director of the Liberty and High School bands at that place has been secured as a director of the Plummer band. Mr. Lonson was in town last Monday evening sizing up his material and expressed himself as well pleased with the material available for a band here and that by sticking together and putting in a lot of practice the boys will be able to brag of a good little band in a short time.

Rehersals will be held every Friday evening, commencing with next Friday. New march books have been ordered and a few instruments, all of which will be here at that time.

Barber Shop Sold.

R. E. Agnew, who recently came here from Mahnomen to assume charge of the local barber shop, disposed of his interests the first of the week to Horace Demarius, of Red Lake Falls, and leaves tonight for his home at Mahnomen. The barber shop, under the management of Mr. Demarius, will be opened to the public Monday.

Mr. Demarius is said to be a first-class barber, and will undoubtedly keep up the high standard established by his predecessors.

Soo "Local" Delayed.

The northbound Soo "local" No. 111 was delayed a few hours at Glenwood Wednesday night and passed thru here about 1:30 Thursday morning instead of at 7:30 the evening previous. The delay was due to a wreck on the main line caused by spreading rails.

The Gayety theater, Minneapolis, has come to attract to its musical burlesque shows the best patronage of this city, when people here go to Minneapolis and include the theater in their day's or evening's program. The best and cleanest comedy, the latest songs of the American theaters, and the finest productions of the musical burlesque stage are to be seen only at the Gayety, where two preformances are given daily, afternoon and evening. For most trains out of Minneapolis, the matinee closes in ample time to premit attendance at the entire preformance. Musical comedy equal to and frequently better than that presented in the high priced theaters is given at the Gayety at popular prices.

Things Queer and Curious

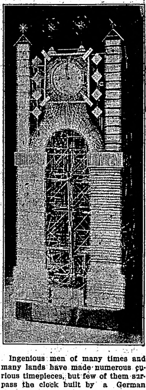
Turkey's Mid-Europe Remnant

The only remnant of Turkey left in, one may say, mid-Europe is the island of Ada Kaleh, on the Danube. It still belongs to Turkey, but is under the protection of Austria, and is an important point, which, in eventualities, would command the navigation of the river. The island was once a strong fortress, and is still garrisoned by a detachment of Austro-Hungarian soldiers, who have "look-outs" at each point of vantage. From the gate of the strongly fortified bastion one can see the citadel, with its bazaars and primitive cafes flanking the narrow streets. The mosque is richly draped with valuable carpets, but otherwise is a very plain building. The sultan, to keep the island inhabited by Turkish people, sends as a gift each year a shipload of coffee, tobacco, sugar, sweets, and various other commodities and they have the privilege of selling their coffee and sugar at Orsova, a few miles distant on the Hungarian shore, duty free to the extent of one pound in weight.

LIGHTING BY SUGAR

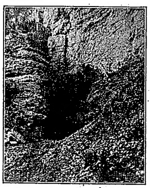
The suggestion has been put forward that there is every possibility that, in the near future, sugar will play an important part in the provision of a new method of artificial lighting. Experiments have shown that when disks of loaf sugar are placed on a lathe and rapidly rotated while a hammer plays lightly against them, there is an almost continuous radiation of artificial light. At present the practical value of the discovery is nil, but it is quite within the bounds of possibility that discoveries will soon be made that will render its practical application a certainty. The cause of the phenomena is not at present correctly understood, but it is probably due to some change in the formation of the sugar crystals. Cases where the act of crystallization is accompanied by flashes of light are not unknown and probably this is due to some similar cause. At any rate, this appears to be the only feasible explanation, as it has been proved that the light is not caused by the heating of the sugar during the experiment.

CLOCK MADE ALL OF STRAW



Ingenious men of many times and many lands have made numerous curious timepieces, but few of them surpass the clock built by a German shoemaker. It is made wholly of straw, several thousand pieces being used in its construction, and its total weight is seven ounces. There are eight pendulums and the mechanism is wound up by the pressing of a button, when it runs for five hours.

IOWA'S STRANGE ICE CAVE



The ice cave at Decorah, Iowa, is one of nature's wonders. The only other caves of a similar character of note are one located in Kentucky and another in Russia. Scientists have advanced several theories as to the formation of ice in the Decorah cave during the summer time. It is a known fact, however, that ice forms in the summer and disappears in winter. That the amount of moisture in the ground has its bearing has also been proved by the disappearance of ice in times of continued extreme drouth. When this condition arises, though the ice may disappear, the cave will be cool and damp. When conditions are normal ice begins forming in the spring and increases to the thickness of three to four inches. The cave is located in the side of a bluff on the north side of the city and fully 100 feet above the Upper Iowa river. Its location is picturesque and the citizens of Decorah have constructed a fine drive that extends for a half mile along the face of the bluff. At one time a speculative citizen thought to make money out of the cave by closing the entrance with a door and charging admission. The door stopped the circulation of air, the ice melted, and the speculator had his expense for nothing.

LUMINOUS TREES

There is a remarkable tree or shrub in a small gulch near some springs in western America. It is about six or seven feet in height, with a trunk, which, at its base, is three times the size of a man's wrist. It is remarkably characteristic as to its foliage, which, at certain seasons of the year, is so luminous that it can be distinguished on the darkest night for a distance of more than a mile, while in its immediate vicinity it emits sufficient light to enable a person to read the finest print. The luminous property is due to parasites.

BAY OF FUNDY "BORE"

The Bay of Fundy "bore," or tidal wave, is a tidal phenomenon well worthy of note, as it is the longest in the world. It is caused by the sea forcing the water up the funnel-shaped bay and into the Petitcodiac river, where the water assumes the form of a white crested wave, or "bore." It occurs every time the tide comes in, and is from three to eight feet in height. The "bore" is seen to best advantage at the time of full moon, and is a very interesting sight.

DINNER TASTERS OF PARIS

Paris has a corps of professional dinner tasters, whose function it is to test and pass judgment upon all food prepared for banquets and similar occasions of state. When they "O. K." a dish it may be set before a king.

OLDEST CHAIR IN AMERICA

Hanover, Pa., lost the oldest and what is believed to be the most remarkable piece of furniture in America when the famous Bingley armchair, which has seen five centuries, was expressed to Hagerstown, Md., the home of Joseph Parker Bingley, who inherited it by the will of his father, the late John Jackson Bingley of Hanover. Kept as an heirloom, the ancient chair has been passed down from father to son for many generations. J. Edward Bingley of Baltimore, Md., is heir apparent to the coveted relic.

The chair is a massive piece of work, made in Yorkshire, England, in 1430. It represents the type of architecture popular in those days. English oak, inlaid with various kinds of wood, was used in its construction. The back is handsomely carved and at the top figures of birds are engraved. The joints are mortised and held together with wooden pegs.

Sixty-two years before Columbus discovered America this chair was built, and it remained in the town of Bingley, named from the ancestors of the present owner, during the reign of twenty English monarchs, from Henry VI. to Victoria. After a brief stay at Leeds, it was taken to Manchester.

In 1856 the chair was brought to this country on the ship Mary Hale and was landed at Baltimore. In the Civil war the chair was in Richmond, Va., where the owner temporarily left it in the care of a friend while he escaped to the north. Subsequently it was sent to Watertown, N. Y., and in 1894 was brought to Hanover.

FEEDING THE RATS

A Calcutta correspondent reports a "truly horrible incident" which befell an English lady. Her "butler" was in the habit of calling loudly beneath her window every evening about 7. His cry suggested that he was calling either the cattle or the chickens home; but though she had neither, the lady for some time took no notice, until one evening, having the curiosity to look, she was horrified to see the butler, like a dusky pied piper, surrounded by a troop of rats. There were quite 50 of them, from the big bandicoots to small muskrats, all being fed on the remains of her soup, meat and other bits. In a plague country this was an amusement that was speedily ended.

ROPES OF HUMAN HAIR

We are constantly getting some of our cherished ideas shattered by research. One of the stories which was not always accepted as an axiom relates to the ladies of Carthage, who, we were taught, cut off their hair, offered their tresses in the temples of the gods and then turned them into ropes for the warships when their country was threatened. The news now comes from Antwerp, through a French source, that a manufacturer in that city has turned his attention to this method of rope making. He asserts that human hair possesses great durability, a strand can lift just three-quarters of a ton, and another advantage is that such a rope does not stretch. The Amsterdam manufacturer's idea is to use his hair ropes for aeroplanes in place of wire stays.

Bones Evicted From Graves

It is the custom among the less wealthy classes in Greece to bury a body for three years only. At the end of that period the bones are exhumed, that room may be made in the grave for other bodies. The boxes and bundles of human bones, here shown awaiting removal by relatives or friends of the deceased, are seen outside the charnel-house of the cemetery at Athens.

The AWAKING of the OLDER NATIONS

Old Egypt Takes on Old World's New Ways—Playground of Five Continents Is Now Finding a New National Life of Its Own.

By WILLIAIM T. ELLIS.

Cairo, Egypt.—This old nation is in a new and ever-newer Egypt. The whole world's playground, because of the charm and mystery of its past, it yet has nothing more alluring to show the thoughtful traveler than its own transformation. The emergence of Egypt, within a generation, from a land of bloodshed, injustice, poverty and misery, into a well kept, prosperous and improving land is one of the great achievements of the present generation.

Still there is unrest, of which civilization has not yet heard the last. Of the complaints of the nationalists, and the answer of the defenders of the British regime, more will be said in the next article. This one can treat only of the awaking of this ancient people into surprising modernity. That it carefully retains some of the bizarre and Oriental effects, so that the unsophisticated tourist in Cairo thinks himself in the simon-pure east, is merely good business policy. The astute Oriental fully understands the commercial value of the impression of picturesqueness which he makes on the visitor. No other city on earth is more cleverly staged, for purposes of revenue, than this same Cairo. Even the swaggering Bedouin, ppsing in front of the hotels, knows that his picturesqueness enhances his wage-earning capacity as a guide. The bazars of "old Cairo" never lose sight for a moment of the gullibility of the traveler, who sees no incongruity in being addressed in the English tongue in this, to him, wierdly remote spot.

Some Changeless Things in Old Egypt.

Antiquities and Orientalism are the most marketable assets of Cairo. Truly there is something awesome about the persistence which a discerning person may perceive here. Out at Sakkara one looks upon pictures in the tombs, painted three, four or five thousand years ago, of farmers plowing, with a bent stick, drawn by humped buffaloes. Then he goes out into the neighboring fields and perceives that identical picture in real life. The plow is the same, the animals are the same, the very physiognomy of the farmers are the same. So with the men carrying water in skins. One could imagine that the very pictures from the tombs had stepped down and come to life. The shadduf, along the river and canals, whereby the animals—sometimes camels, sometimes donkeys, sometimes bullocks, sometimes cows—draw up the water for irrigation purposes, has been drawn with fidelity to present day life by artists who have been mummies for thrice the length of time that Great Britain has been a nation.

In even larger aspects the survival of ancient Egypt is noticeable. In many essentials this nation, with the oldest recorded history, has remained the same. It is still a rainless land, and, as of yore, it is still dependent upon the Nile for its life. Even as anciently, it is threatened by the environing and encroaching desert. The Coptic fellaheen of today are the sons of the ancient Egyptians of five or six thousand years ago. In physiognomy and habits the type remains unchanged; though the new education which has lately come in will probably alter the latter within a generation or two. The philosopher who, in the presence of these strange survivals asks himself whether the Egyptian fellah will be working his shadduf and plowing with his bent stick, centuries after Great Britain has ceased to exist as a nation, will probably have to return a negative answer. In present day world phenomena nothing is more remarkable than the final overthrow of usages and institutions which have lasted from the beginning of recorded history.

A High Type of Oriental.

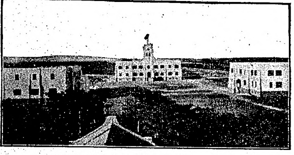
Tall, handsome, stately, the Egyptian is the best looking type of man in the east. Both the Copt and the Arab have a free, self-confident and swinging carriage. They are quick of wit and self resourceful. Like all sun-warmed peoples, they are of an affectionate and passionate disposition, and little given to orderliness and method. They would rather wear fine clothes than practice the homely virtures of thrift. Poetical, philosophical and courteous, they have a real intellectual future before them.

For this nation of the wondrous past, with memories of world dominion smouldering in its breast, is far from being a spent race. The future undoubtedly holds for it a destiny even as did the past. For Egypt has suddenly awakened from its fruitless reverie upon the glories that are gone to ambitions for the future that is ahead. The contact with the west has stirred into flame its latent powers. The magical learning of the west, after which all the older nations are thirsting, has made its appeal to Egypt also. The young men and women are breaking with the deadly conservatism of the past, and seeking the new life and power that the western school books hold.

Riots at the Oldest University.

El Azhar university at Cairo, has a history of about 1,000 years. In that time its character has changed very little, though it has grown to such proportions that if it is not the oldest, it is surely the largest university in the world, with about 12,000 students. Its recent history quite typifies the change that has come over Egypt. The title "university" is a misnomer, for El Azhar is really only a theological school, holding its sessions on the floor of a huge mosque, or group of mosque buildings. Garfield's definition of a satisfactory college as a log with Mark Hopkins on one end and a student on the other is nearly realized at El Azhar, for the students simply sit on the floor, with a teacher in the center. Any place will do for a class room, though certain pillars are associated with certain classes. If a visitor threads his way among these groups, as I have done, he is likely to be hissed, in token of the students' hatred of all Christians. The books studied consist almost exclusively of six works dealing with the Koran and the life of Mohammed. Of course the study is entirely in the Arabic language; and the students come from all parts of the Moslem world. No fees are paid by the students, but, on the contrary, they are paid for attending. Of course, none of the modern sciences have had a place in the curriculum. Twelve years is a common period for students to spend at El Azhar, and some have been in attendance for 20 and 30 years. All live in the mosque.

Within the past six months the history of the venerable school has been stormy. There have been riots, with violence to the professors and destruction of property. The university has been closed, and the students have made demonstrations before the palace of the khedive. Both professors and students have been on strike, and now, after revolutionary overturns, the whole establishment has been put on a new basis. The story of the riots, in their successive phases, is too long to be told here. It began with the demand of two-thirds of the teachers, who were receiving only a pound and a half a month wages, to be raised nearer the level of the other third, who were getting twenty and thirty pounds. The students thought the time opportunue to demand an increase in the food which they got from the state, and also for a stated payment in cash every month. They also demanded a modernization of the institution.



The Assuit College of the American Mission, Egypt.

All this means that old El Azhar is disintegrating. The Khedive is said to desire a reduction of the students to two or three thousand, as the present lot are a heavy expense to the state, and are really useless. It is from the village and mission schools that the new life of Egypt is coming. So El Azhar has been graded and reorganized from top to bottom, and the students will henceforth have to learn such revolutionary teachings as that the world is round, and that there is a history and geography entirely untouched by the career, and teachings of the Prophet.

America's Unique Place in Egypt.

In sharp contrast to El Azhar are the schools, little and big, scattered over Egypt, which are commonly known as American schools, or, more specifically, as American mission schools. These are a feature of the work of the United Presbyterian church's mission in Egypt, which has almost a monopoly of the mission work in this country. In the educational department they have upwards of 20,000 students, and these are scattered through all grades of schools, from village day schools to the really remarkable college at Assuit. All sorts of observers, from Lord Cromer and Mr. Roosevelt to everyday officials and travelers, have credited these schools with being potent factors—perhaps the most potent—in the real awakening of Egypt.

It is an open secret that the British government in Egypt frequently consults with the American missionaries upon governmental policies, for it is freely admitted that they know more about the real situation than anybody else. They are closest to the people, and the officials really lean upon them for help. In no other nation known to me is the standing of the missionaries so high as it is here. It is a curious instance of the interrelationship of nations that the members of one of the smallest American religious denominations should be a potent force in the national affairs of one of the oldest nations, and that half a world away.

Old and New Cairo.

This is a land of paradoxes. Here, at the cross-roads of the earth, is the world's popular playground. The very greatness and mummies of the ancient pharaohs, before whom the whole world trembled, is but a diversion and a spectacle for tourists and globe-trotters. And old Cairo is one of the newest and best governed cities on earth. Most American municipalities could take lessons from what the British have done here. It is as safe as New York, or safer; and as clean, or cleaner. It is thoroughly well policed and managed. Traffic is quietly and carefully regulated. All public servants, of whatever department, are in uniform. The city has literally all the modern conveniences—sewage, water, gas, electric light, street cars, telephones, excellent paving and street cleaning, and the whole managed with British thoroughness and precision.

The order of London is here, but none of London's somberness. The sidewalk cafes seem more numerous than in Paris, and the streets are full of all manner of costumes, from the veiled women of Cairo to the swaggering Macedonian, with his huge sash and pistol, or the white robed Moor or the globe-trotter in helmet or Tyrolese hat. A veritable panorama of the nations passes daily in front of the big hotels. Small wonder that the tourist, fascinated by the strangeness and colorfulness of it all, thinks himself in the veritable east.

The barbarism which underlies mornized Cairo creeps out after nightfall, and one who strolls up the side streets and alleys may see the dignified young Egyptian put aside his college education, and forget his Parisian clothes, and do the sinuous Oriental dances, common to all barbaric people, to the accompaniment of a tom-tom and other primitive musical instruments. Painted houris sit at doorways and windows, but there is less open vice on the streets of Cairo than on the streets of New York. That some of the worst phases of the life of old Cairo persists under the surface is party due to the patronage of the tourists.

At the Cross-Roads of the World.

The meeting and mingling of the east and the west at Cairo, which even the most casual tourist observes, is but typical of the political conditions which obtain here. Egypt is the meeting place of Africa and Asia, and within a few hours sail of Europe. It was in the battle ground of all the world conquerors in the pre-Christian centuries. Egypt itself was once the most powerful, as well as the most highly civilized nation on earth. Its dominion extended clear to the Tigris river, and the Hebrews were not the only people who felt its oppressive power.

Today the greatest waterway that the hand of man has fashioned or controlled runs through Egypt, the Suez canal. So crowded is it with profitable tonnage that the British are seriously considering the creation of a new and exclusively British canal to compete with it. For this, be it ever remembered, is the one best route to India, which is the most precious and jealously guarded jewel in the crown of British empire.

Although touched in every way by the influences of new life—railways, steamships, literature, newspapers, schools, travel and free speech, Egypt remains in some respects the most reactionary country on the globe. It is intensely Moslem, and it witnesses outbreaks of fanaticism which show that almost anything is possible at any moment in Egypt. When the sacred carpet for Mecca left Alexandria last year there was an unprovoked and unexpected attack upon inoffensive Europeans, merely because they were Christians. It is known that the Sennoussi movement, which has its headquarters and stores of arms at Jerabub, an oasis in the desert, is powerfully represented in Cairo, and has its teachers in El Azhar, to inflame the fanaticism of the students against the Christians. For the old, old Moslem dream of world conquest has never been given up, and the signs are that its point of outbreak will be this same new-old city of Cairo.

The Water Telescope.

The fishermen of Norway sometimes employ a rude sort of water telescope of their own invention. A tube is procured, made of tin and funnel shaped, about three and one-half feet long and nine inches in diameter at the broadest end. It is made wide enough at the top to take in the observer's eyes, and the inside is painted black. At the bottom or wide end a clear, thick piece of glass is inserted, with a little lead in the form of a ring to weight the tube. When the instrument is immersed in clear water it is said that the observer can see down an astonishing number of fathoms.—Harper's Weekly.

Was It Coming or Going?

The train was reported forty minutes late, and after the time had elapsed a would-be passenger inquired: "How late is that train?"

"Oh, about an hour late."

The hour passed and the query was repeated.

"Well, they'll be about an hour and twenty minutes late here."

Patience reigned until the query was justly renewed, and the railroad man replied: "Well, sir, I think that train will be near two hours late."

Whereupon the passenger said: "Say, mister, will you kindly tell me which way that train is going?"

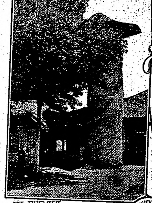
Christmas in Foreign Lands

By John Foster Frazer

AFTER all, there is no place like home in which to celebrate Christmas. Even when the day does not come up to the old-fashioned pictorial representation of snow on the ground and red-breasted robins on the boughs, but is instead green and sunshiny, Christmas at home has an appropriateness and fits the scene in a way it cannot do in other lands.

It is rather hard to imagine appropriateness about Christmas under a blazing sky, and the eating of plum pudding when the thermometer is 90 degrees in the shade. How out of place the picturesque characters from Dickens' novels—muffled and cheery and full of boisterous mirth—would have been if they could have been conveyed on the magic carpet to gorgeous Cairo! Wealthy people, and, in these days of cheap travel, those who are not wealthy, now seek sunshine in the months which are considered dreary; so each Christmastide crowds of British people betake themselves to the City of the Caliphs, proceed up the Nile, and, even on Christmas night, toast the old folks at home in the magnificent hotel at Khartoum.

MAKING CHRISTMAS DAY CALLS SHANGHI, CHINA



IN PERSIA

CHURCH OF NATIVITY BETHLEHEM CHRISTMAS MORNING

THE CITADEL CAIRO, EGYPT

CHRISTMAS PARTY AT THE PYRAMIDS

CHRISTMAS SPORTS IN THE ALPS

Our grandfathers and grandmothers, who regarded Christmas as a time of waits and holly berries and taking baskets of provisions to poor folks, then attending the festooned and decorated church for morning service, and afterwards, with lights up and curtains drawn, proceeded to consume slabs of turkey and roast beef, chunks of plum pudding and innumerable mince pies, with the object of bringing happy months, would twirl in their graves if they could see the manner in which thousands of their descendants celebrate the day in Cairo.

I have known snow in Cairo, but the occasions are as rare as blue moons. As a rule, the morning comes with blazing sunshine, with not a cloud in the sky, and the atmosphere not only warm but sultry. It is not the occasion for topcoats or mufflers or fur capes. The men are in flannels and the women are in white finery. Possibly some attend the English church, with the hope of being reminded what day it is; but the majority go off upon excursions, wandering through the quaint, bedizened and scented bazars, where the Mohammedan salesmen, with little concern about the Christian festival, ply their trade of selling antiques, radiant robes and hand-made Oriental carpets. The majority, on pleasure bent, go off to the Pyramids, and, under the sweltering sun, climb to the summit of the great burial pile of the Cheops, and then, likely enough, mounted on donkeys, scamper across the hot sands to the Sphinx, in the shadow of which they proceed to picnic.

It is late afternoon, and the big sun is setting over the Libyan desert, and the bells in the mosques are tinkling for the faithful Mohammedans to come and pray, when most of our fellow country people return to their hotels. There is no old-style Christmas dinner. The fare is French; the music is probably Austrian. Somehow, the occasion, delicious and happy though it be, does not fit the picture. The moon rises and the evening is fragrant, whilst parties sit out upon the balconies before the dancing begins. And then thoughts inevitably wander to what the folks at home are doing.

Even with ourselves, particularly in London, a great change is coming over the celebration of Christmas. People with families, especially those with young children, do keep up something of the tradition. But amongst those who are grown up the tendency is to spend Christmas night at one of the great caravansaries of pleasure—a fashionable West End restaurant or a hotel, where in the entrance hall there is generally a magnificent Christmas tree, and the dinner is lavish, the music ravishing, and everything is bright and noisy, and the air is rippled with the laughter of pretty women.

The old-time Christmas is voted dull; besides, taking one's Christmas dinner at a hotel is reckoned much cheaper than having it at home. Within short memory a great change has come over our manner of spending Christmas. Thousands of people go to the big hotels on the south coast. The hydropathic establishments in the provinces are invariably crowded. Thousands upon thousands of men and women—chiefly those who are still in blithe manhood and womanhood—take themselves to Switzerland. For a week before Christmas the London stations which are jumping-off places for the continent are as busy as in summer holiday time dispatching Britons to the Alps.

Christmas in Switzerland! Why, a dozen years ago the majority of British people would have shuddered at the idea. Switzerland in dead of winter, with heaped-up snow and storms and bitter cold, was not to be thought of. Great has been the alteration. Though there is plenty of snow the atmosphere is dry and the sun shines brightly. The air is invigorating. There is sufficient of skating to be obtained, exciting races on toboggans to be secured, and, for those bent on adventure, there is the most exciting pastime of ski-ing.

Many of the high-placed villages in the mountains of Switzerland become colonies of British people. These do the proper thing by going to the little church on Christmas morning. But they come back in a hurry, and are soon in their sweaters and have donned their heavy boots, or have affixed their skates and are off for pleasure long before luncheon time. The dining rooms are decorated for the great event of the evening—the Christmas dinner. Curious it is to think that these bunches of happy folk, who a week ago were scattered in all parts of the British Isles, now congregate in the well-lighted rooms of a Swiss hotel, and are eating their Christmas dinner 600 or 700 miles away from home. Maybe there is a carnival on the ice at night. The air is dead still. The moon is like a great lantern in the heavens. Fancy dresses are the proper thing. Every one carries a multi-colored Chinese lantern swinging at the end of a cane. The local Swiss band plays popular airs. There is the swish and rumble of innumerable skates over the crisp and well-swept ice.

Think of the manner in which the day is spent in the distant treaty ports of the Far East. There comes back to my memory a Christmas day I once spent in Shanghai. In that great commercial Chinese city is a considerable gathering of British people, chiefly engaged in trade, kindly, hospitable, giving the hand of friendship to the traveler and seeing that he has a good time with the rest. There are Christmas morning calls to be made. Callers travel from house to house in jinrickshaws hauled by bronze-skinned Chinese coolies. Maybe there are steeplechase races on the outskirts of the town, and the entire British colony to go off to see their countrymen, adepts in horsemanship, scamper for the prizes. Then come luncheon parties, to be followed at night by the customary Christmas gathering. One might almost forget that one was thousands of miles away from home, except maybe for the fact that the servants are slit-eyed Chinamen.

Another Christmas day comes to memory as I write. It was in Teheran, the capital of Persia. There, of course, is the British legation; but most of the British residents, fifty or sixty in number, are engaged in connection with the telegraph service. Teheran is a great transmission station on the telegraph route between England and India. On Christmas morning there is generally a football match on the Miadan, a big open space where most of the Persian military displays take place. In the afternoon there is polo. The Persians stand round with wide-eyed wonder, quite incapable of understanding why it is that English people are putting themselves to such exertions in the search of what they consider pleasure. The Persian does not appreciate the western habit of violent exercise. He regards those who take part in it as rather mad.

It is the practice of most British ministers to give a dinner party on Christmas night to the leading British and American residents in the fine legation dining room. The two flags, the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes, are hung above the chair. When the dinner is over there follows the usual and appropriate speech making. Then comes the dance. That the company is in a distant foreign land is forgotten. Something of the flavor of Christmas tide at home is with the assembly. Laughter and merriment reign unbounded.

And is it not well at Christmastide to think of those of our own race and land who are in far corners of the world? I do not only mean those who are in the great cities of Canada or Australia or South Africa or even in the semi-British towns in India. Rather I have in mind lands where are few British men and women, some traders, some missionaries, but all cut off by enormous distances from what is called the civilized world, whom it takes six weeks or two months for a letter to reach, and whose Christmas day is inclined to bring sad thoughts, not only because of the lonely lives they are leading, but by reason of the recollection of the other and more happy Christmas days they spent before they left the home-land.

Dotted about the world, in Africa, in lonely Indian stations, in the far northwest of Canada, out on the deserts of Australia, these people will be eating their Christmas dinners on the same day as ourselves. So, in the flush of happiness which comes to most of us, it is not a bad thing to let the thoughts wander to fellow Britons so far off that sometimes they are inclined to be forgotten.

Also there are others. I remember a Christmas day I spent on a tramp-ship, a commodious, roomy old boat, but slow in pace, plowing her way through a storm in the Bay of Biscay. We ought to have been home before Christmas, but the weather had buffeted us and we were nearly a week behind our time. Christmas morning came drearily as the old vessel bumped her way over the angry waters. We had no Christmas cheer, no turkey, no plum pudding, no wine, but we had tinned rabbit and some bottles of stout on board. While the ship pitched and rolled the captain and his men and myself gulped our poor Christmas cheer and toasted each other in stout. Then the men went out to their work in the gale. I stood on the bridge together with the officer in charge while the wind howled and the sleet slashed and we pressed on slowly into the gloom. Not a very merry Christmas! But still the kind of Christmas that will be spent by many thousands of good British sailors in far seas.

For a contrast where better could you go to spend Christmas day than in Jerusalem and attend service at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Jerusalem is not quite the same as it was in Biblical times, though a good deal of it has not altered through many generations. It seems out of place to go to Jerusalem by railway and, outside the station, to be met by a horde of shrieking cab drivers seeking the job of conveying you to one of the big hotels.

Christmas day this year is on a Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, when thousands of Jews, conscious of what the day means to Christians, will lament that the Messiah they expect has not come.

Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, all jostle in the narrow streets of Jerusalem. On Christmas Eve the Mohammedans who, curiously enough, have charge of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, to prevent quarrelsome Christians doing injury to one another, will be keeping the Mohammedan Sabbath, and from the minarets of the mosques will sound the muezzin of the Mullahs crying: "There is only one God, and Allah is his prophet; come all ye faithful and pray." Then, as the sun begins to drop on Christmas Eve, you may go to all that remains of the old walls of Jerusalem, and come across crowds of Jews, hooded women and men ringleted, many of them from distant shores, kissing the stones which once surrounded the city of their forefathers.

On Christmas morning, with the slouching Turkish soldiers at the door of the church, many Christians will enter to attend service, crouch through the low and narrow doorway, and have the privilege of kissing the stone on which tradition says the body of Christ was laid after the Crucifixion. See that group of tourists mounted on shaggy and ill-fed ponies! They are full of light-heartedness as they scamper along the rugged paths beyond the gates of Jerusalem. They are off to Bethlehem to visit the Church of the Nativity—dark and solemn and rather eerie with many subdued lights.

Christmas day brings many and varied recollections to the man who has wandered much about this old world.

CONCOCTIONS OF RICE

MANY WAYS IN WHICH EDIBLE MAY BE PREPARED.

One of the Healthiest and Not Altogether Properly Appreciated Articles of Food—Chocolate Pudding Will Be Found Delicious.

Persons who have lived in Mexico, says the New York Sun, have acquired a taste for rice polenta, which calls for a cupful of rice, a tablespoonful each of butter, vinegar and molasses, a tablespoonful of mustard, a teaspoonful of onion juice, salt and pepper. Boil the rice until tender and drain. Then rub it through a sieve and mix with the other ingredients. Cook all together about ten minutes and serve as a vegetable.

For Spanish rice, brown half a cupful of rice in hot fat, add an onion chopped fine, a tomato and a mashed clove or garlic. Cover with hot water, season with salt and pepper and cook in the rice until it is tender, adding water as it is needed, but not stirring.

For rice tortillas, mix a cupful of flour, a cupful of rice, half a cupful of milk, a tablespoonful of butter and a little salt. Knead mixture thoroughly, break off pieces and pat into cakes until each cake is large and very thin. Bake on a griddle until brown.

To make cheese cakes, bring half a cupful of milk and two tablespoonfuls of butter to a simmer, and then stir in a tablespoonful of flour mixed with three tablespoonfuls of boiled rice. When the milk is all taken up gradually four eggs thoroughly beaten and a cupful of grated cheese. Season highly with salt, pepper and cayenne, take from the fire, make into cakes and fry in hot fat.

Minced ham and boiled rice mixed together and filled into individual baking dishes with an egg on the top make an excellent luncheon dish. Fill the little dishes about half full of the rice and ham mixture and put them into the oven until they are heated through. Then remove, drop an egg into each with bits of butter, salt and pepper over the top, and bake until the white is set.

Cakes made of corn meal and cold boiled rice make a variation in the breakfast breads. Use a cupful of rice to two cupfuls of the meal and mix in a tablespoonful of flour, a teaspoonful of salt, a well-beaten egg, two cupfuls of milk, a tablespoonful of butter and two heaping tablespoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in gem tins for 20 minutes.

For rice pudding without eggs turn half a pound of well-washed rice into a buttered pan with three cupfuls of cold milk. Sweeten and flavor to taste, grate a little nutmeg over the top and scatter a few bits of butter, and bake for three hours at least in a very slow oven.

For rice chocolate pudding, soak half an ounce of gelatine in a cupful of cold milk and meantime grate three ounces of chocolate into a pint of scalding hot milk. Turn the chocolate and milk over the gelatine, and when the gelatine is dissolved stir in a cupful of sugar, the whites of four eggs and a teaspoonful of vanilla. When the mixture is very cold whip it to a froth, turn it over cold boiled rice and serve very cold.

Penochi.

Two cups brown sugar, one cup of white sugar, two-thirds cup of milk, piece of butter about as large as an English walnut. Cook until it forms a waxy ball when dropped in cold water. Have half cup walnuts and three or four figs put through chopper ready to add when needed. Just before taking sugar, etc., from stove add a small pinch of cream tartar, as that tends to make penochi creamy. Take from stove and stir until it begins to grain under the spoon. Then add vanilla, nuts and figs and pour into buttered platter. Cut into squares when cool.

Plum Pudding.

Two pints of bread crumbs, three tablespoons of baking powder, mixed with three pints of sweet milk. Cream one-quarter of a cup of butter, with a teacup of sugar; add half teaspoon each of salt, ground cloves, grated nutmeg and lemon extract and six well beaten eggs. Stir all into the milk and crumbs; add one pint of stoned raisins, pint of currants, cup of suet and a cup of citron cut fine. Mix well and steam four hours.

Spice Box.

A box, omitting lid, about length of kitchen table and eight inches square, lined all (except one long side, next to where lid would fasten) with white oilcloth; makes a handy place if hung on nail, above table, for spices, baking powder, etc. Cover top with colored oilcloth, allowing enough to hang over for curtain and cover ends. Brass screw eyes on each end are ready to hang kettle holders.

Kitchen Aprons.

Kitchen aprons of the same material as your wash dresses always look neater than those made of some other stuff, says a contributor to the Ladies Home Journal. Remember this the next time you have a wash dress made. Even a white dress looks prettier with a big white apron to match.

Sweet Pickle for Hams.

One gallon of water, 1½ pounds rock salt, ½ pound sugar, ½ ounce saltpeter. Boil, skim and cool.

RULES FOR MAKING GOOD TEA

Follow These and a Delightful and Exhilarating Beverage Will Be the Result.

A good cup of tea is something too infrequently met with when one considers the prevalent use of tea as a beverage. The fault often lies less in the tea than in the manner of its making. Here are some of the rules which, if observed, will prove the quality of the product:

Don't use water that has been boiled a long time in brewing tea.

Don't use water which has not yet reached the boiling point.

Don't allow the tea to brew for more than five minutes.

Don't make tea in a cold teapot. Rinse with hot water before placing the leaves in the pot.

Don't pour a second water over the leaves when the first brew is exhausted.

Don't allow tea to grow damp in the caddy.

Don't buy too cheap a quality of tea and expect good results.

Here is the Japanese method of making a delightfully refreshing beverage: Heat the earthen or china teapot thoroughly with boiling water, then empty out the water and put in the tea, pour in freshly boiled water, let it stand for five minutes and serve.

A teapot never touches the stove. A tiny tea cozy of Japanese paper is put over the teapot the moment the water is poured on and a delicious cup of tea is thus secured without having extracted the injurious ingredient—the tannin.

Always use a porcelain or earthware teapot. Tea experts tell us that the fragrant leaf should never touch metal.

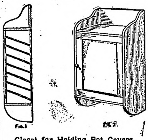
ALL MADE FROM CORN FLOUR

Expert Has Demonstrated the Possibilities of This Material, So Much Cheaper Than Wheat.

Mrs. S. T. Rorer, well known as a cooking authority, gave a series of practical illustrations with corn recipes some time ago. To persons who think only of yellow and white mush, Johnny cake, "pone" and Indian pudding as possible from corn flour, it may be a revelation to read merely a list of the dishes which Mrs. Rorer prepared. She made corn bread, with yeast, southern rice bread, Louisiana corn bread, Adirondack corn bread, Victoria corn gems, mush gems, hoe cakes, corn dodgers, waffles, plain boiled hominy, blanc mange, cream of cornstarch pudding, strawberry starch with meringue, Heaton pudding, strawberry float, vanilla souffles, hominy flourendine, cornstarch cakes, plunkets, pilau, chicken and hominy, fried cream, mush croquettes, cream pie and Boston brown bread.

"And in all these recipes," declared Mrs. Rorer, "I have not used one ounce of wheat flour. Corn flour has been used every time."

POT-COVER CLOSET.



Closet for Holding Pot Covers.

The sides of the cover closet are cut as shown in Fig. 1 and shelves are nailed between them at a slight angle. No dimensions are given, as the space and the sizes of the covers are not always the same. The back is covered with thin boards placed vertically. The front can be covered with a curtain or a paneled door as shown.—Gilbert A. Wehr, Baltimore, Md., in Popular Mechanics.

Cheese and Coffee.

Place on the table a plate of crisp cheese wafers. With them serve a tart jelly or thin preserve, such as gooseberry or crab apple. The preserve known as bar le duc is suitable for this purpose, and the taste of the cheese and wafers is greatly improved in combination with the fruit.

Strong, fragrant coffee is served with this simple desert.

Aniseed Cookies.

Rub to a cream one-half cupful of butter and a cupful of powdered sugar and when light stir in the well beaten yolks of three eggs. Add the stiffened whites alternately with a pound of flour, or enough to make a stiff dough, and stir into the flour a teaspoonful of aniseed. Roll thin and cut into rounds and bake.

Beefsteak Dumplings.

Line a deep dish with pie crust, cut up two pounds of stewing beef in small pieces, add salt, pepper, chopped onion, water, one-half teaspoonful poultry dressing and a little butter. Put top crust on and steam for three hours.

Shoe Scratches.

Scratches on your shoes should be rubbed gently with a little vaseline before polishing them. The marks will scarcely be noticeable then, while it puts the leather into better condition.

MAINE WRECK NO SIDESHOW

PROJECT TO AUTHORIZE SALE OF HULL FOR EXHIBITION PURPOSE MEETS DEFEAT.

CITIES TO GET SOUVENIRS

Urgent Deficiency Bill, Providing $250,000 to Complete Work of Raising Ship, Passes the House.

Washington, D. C. — Efforts to authorize the sale of the hull of the battleship Maine to private parties who desire to exhibit it at various ports of the United States, and charge admission fee to visitors, were defeated in the house of representatives. The urgent deficiency bill, carrying an appropriation of $250,000 to complete the work of raising the Maine, after a hard fight, passed the house without change.

It was admitted in the debate that offers approaching $1,000,000 have been received from exhibition interests for the rear portion of the hull, which can be fitted with a bulkhead and towed from Havana to the United States. This sum would more than cover the $900,000, the cost of clearing the wreck out of Havana harbor. Chairman Fitzgerald of the appropriations committee said the government would tow the rear part of the hull into the ocean and sink it with full honors.

Representative Sisson of Mississippi attempted to procure an amendment authorizing the war department to invite bids from private parties for the rear portion of the hull, to be used for exhibition purposes. He said General Bixby, in charge of the work at Havana, stated that several tentative offers had been received from the United States, some of them approaching $1,000,000. Mr. Sisson said he did not consider it as opposed to the desires of the American people to provide for a public exhibition of the wreck of the Maine under private auspices.

Sisson Has No Objection.

"I would have no objection to having it towed up the Mississippi river and exhibited to my children," declared Mr. Sisson.

The bill as passed would permit the secretary of the navy to give a portion of the wreck to the city of Havana for a public monument, a request for it having been made by the president of Cuba, and would authorize the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy to grant other portions as souvenirs to cities and patriotic societies or survivors of the vessel.

A request for an additional $50,000 for the expenses of the house of representatives and an attempt on the part of the "economy committee" of the house to cut in two the mileage of senators and representatives threw the house into a debate on expenses that is considered prophetic of the sessions that are to come.

Republicans again charged the democrats with having lost track of their economy program. The reply from the democratic side was by introduction of a resolution by Representative Palmer of Pennsylvania, leader of the economy board, to cut the annual mileage allowance from 20 cents per mile to 10 cents per mile. The democratic forces split on the proposition and the plan was voted down 56 to 138.

Exactly $80,000,000 is proposed to be appropriated by congress during the next five years for good roads under a bill introduced by Representative Prouty of Iowa, who advocates national and state co-operation in road construction and maintenance. He proposed that congress appropriate and apportion among the various states $5,000,000 in 1912, $10,000,000 in 1913, $15,000,000 in 1914, $20,000,000 in 1915 and $30,000,000 in 1916. The federal expenditures on each road is limited to one-half the total cost.

Predicts No Building Bill.

Democratic Leader Underwood of the house predicted that the caucus of the house Democrats would not authorize a public building bill at this session, notwithstanding the public building committee's recommendation for it.

Mr. Underwood said the matter undoubtedly would be considered in caucus. To give everyone a fair show, an appropriation of from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 he said, would be necessary and the Democratic leaders do not want such a bill to clash with their economy program.

Sugar Raise to Be Probed.

An investigation to determine why the price of sugar was increased several cents a pound last summer was begun by the house committee appointed to investigate sugar conditions. Letters were sent to all the cane sugar and beet sugar refineries in the United States requiring sworn statements showing:

The actual cost of refining each year for the past five years.

The actual cost of each consignment of raw sugar purchased this year.

The amount of raw sugar on hand July 1, 1911, and its actual cost.

The amount of raw sugar contracted for but not delivered July 1, 1911, with actual dates of delivery.

The number of pounds of refined sugar in stock or owned by the refiners July 1.

The beet sugar companies also are required to state the number of tons of beets sliced, the cost of making sugar and the price paid for the beets.

Many members of the special investigating committee, of which Representative Hardwick of Georgia is chairman, have expressed the belief that all stocks of raw sugar were contracted for prior to July 1, and that the sharp rise in price during the summer resulted in large profits for the refiners.

For Government-Owned Road.

Washington.—A bill providing for the construction of a government-owned road in Alaska was introduced in the house by Representative Anderson of Minnesota. Mr. Anderson's proposal is for the construction of a railroad connecting Seward on Resurrection Bay to the Matanuska coal fields as recommended by Secretary of Interior Fisher, and will doubtless be recommended by President Taft in his forthcoming "Alaska message" to congress. The Anderson bill provides for a bond issue to cover cost of construction to bear 3 per cent interest for 30 years.

Washington, D. C. — The Sulzer joint resolution for the termination of the treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia, because of the latter's discrimination against Jewish American citizens, passed the house 300 to 1. The one negative vote was cast by Representative Malby of New York. A practically identical resolution by Senator Culberson of Texas is pending in the senate. Favorable action of both houses would be necessary to make either resolution effective.

Both the Sulzer and Culberson resolutions would direct the president to give Russia immediately the year's notice necessary for the complete abrogation of the treaty that has been in force nearly 70 years.

An attempt led by Representative Olmstead of Pennsylvania to modify the Sulzer resolution so as to avoid making the direct charge that Russia has violated the treaty in refusing to recognize the passports of American nent Republicans declared that the house should not go on record as charging a violation of the treaty, but should adopt language stating that Russia had so construed the treaty that the United States could no longer be a party to it.

The resolution passed by the house declares that "the government of the United States will not be a party to any treaty which discriminates, or which by one of the parties thereto is so construed as to discriminate between American citizens on the ground of race or religion," and it adds:

"The government of Russia has violated the treaty between the United States and Russia, concluded at St. Petersburg Dec. 18, 1832, refusing to honor American passports duly issued to American citizens, on account of race and religion; and in the judgment of the congress the said treaty, for the reasons aforesaid, ought to be terminated at the earliest possible time."

Washington, D. C. — The Sherwood service pension bill, which would add upwards of $40,000,000 to the government annual expenditure by granting increased pensions to civil and Mexican war veterans on the basis of length of service, was passed by the house despite the determined opposition of many Democratic leaders.

Secretary of the Interior Fisher estimated that the bill would add $75,000,000 to the pension roll if the 4,000 veterans eligible take advantage of the increase.

The Republicans who voted with the 84 Democrats against the bill were Gardner, Gillette and McCall of Massachusetts, Hill of Connecticut, Kent of California, McCreary of Pennsylvania, Payne of New York, and Utter of Rhode Island. Speaker Clark voted with the majority of his party for the bill and Democratic Leader Underwood and Fitzgerald of New York, chairman of the appropriations committee voted against it.

The bill now goes to the senate Senate leaders, however, will proceed slowly in the consideration and many Democrats voted for the measure in the belief that the senate would not pass it.

The Sherwood bill would establish the following basis of pensions.

For service for 90 days to six months $15 per month, from six to nine months, $20 per month, from nine months to one year $25 per month, more than one year $30 per month.

BOYCOTT ON BEEF

EUROPEAN NATIONS AND JAPAN LIKELY TO FOLLOW ENGLAND'S INITIATIVE.

CONSUMER TO BENEFIT

Means Partial Solution of the "High Cost of Living" Problem.—Farmers and Stock Raisers Will Be Principal Losers.

Chicago, Ill. — "The high cost of living" question is to find a partial solution in the exclusion of the "beef trust" from competing for English army contracts and the anticipated boycotting of products of the United States trust by the general public of that isle.

If the packers fear that Russia, Germany, Italy, France and Japan will follow the precedent established by England is founded upon fact, meat and meat by-products will take a decided slump and the workingman will be the triumphant winner, with the stock raisers of the country—not the packers—holding the small end of the horn.

The law of supply and demand is the basis for the prediction of the packers and board of trade men. They declare that if the American exportation of meat and by-products is cut off and the packers are forced to cater to the domestic trade alone, the price of meat can only be held up by a terrific display of "physical force."

To stem the slump would be as futile, they say, as for one man to attempt to dam the Mississippi river at its mouth.

The United States produces more meat than is now used by the citizens. The workingman has been forced to cut down the ration to his family because of the excessive price. To rid themselves of this enormous surplus, the packers have built up a great market abroad. England, Russia, Japan and Germany have been the largest buyers. Little beef, other than the canned variety, has been exported. The great export business has been in pork, bacon, hams, lard and oleomargarine.

Of recent years Australia has entered the field as a big producer of sheep. In the past year Ireland raised three times as many hogs as in any year previous and Denmark, a third more. Argentine and other South American countries have become the cattle producers. The unlimited ranges and therefore cheap method of feeding has placed them in a position where they have given the Chicago packers, who practically control the United States meat export trade, a hard battle for supremacy.

The stock raisers and farmers will be the real losers if a slump in the domestic market takes place. For several years they have been enjoying a season of unrivaled prosperity. Cattle, hogs and sheep have brought prices in the market which have made even the most optimistic hold their breaths. Added to this has been the extremely liberal profit margin added to the meat products by the packers.

The packers make no secret about who will get the first slashing if the foreign trade is cut off and a slump in the domestic trade market results. They insist that their business is being conducted on a far smaller margin of profit at present than any other industry. If a slump comes the stock raisers and farmers must take the brunt they assert.

RUSSIA SENDS THREAT.

Washington, D. C. — What in diplomatic language is interpreted here as practically a threat by Russia to sever all friendly relations with the United States in the event that congress goes ahead with its plan to abrogate the treaty of 1832 with that country, has been made to President Taft and Secretary of State Knox by the Russian ambassador, George Bakhmeteff.

Mr. Bakhmeteff protested against the Sulzer resolution for the abrogation of the treaty on the ground that its final adoption would be inconsistent with the long friendship that has existed between the United States and Russia. While neither the president nor Secretary Knox was alarmed over the turn of affairs, it was said at the White House that a determined effort would be made by senate leaders to modify the Sulzer resolution.

Briceville, Tennessee. — Twenty-one more bodies were found today in the Cross Mountain mine. This brings the death list to eighty-four. ALFRED VANDERBILT WEDS

LATEST CHAPTER IN THE McKIM SCANDAL.

Chief Heir of Cornelius Marries Former Baltimore Woman in London.

London, England.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, formerly Miss Margaret Emerson of Baltimore, were married at Reigate, the bands having been announced in the customary manner. The couple have gone on a motor wedding trip.

For several years past the names of Alfred G. Vandervilt, the chief heir of Cornelius Vanderbilt's millions and Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim have been closely associated. At various times it was reported they were soon to be married. Mr. Vandervilt, who is accounted the richest of the younger set of millionaries, was born in 1877. He married Miss Ellen French on Jan. 11, 1901. His wife obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce on May 25, 1908, their son, William Henry Vanderbilt, remaining in the mother's care. The decree was made final three months later. It was said at the time that Mr. Vanderbilt settled $1,500,000 on his former wife.

The name of Mme. Ruiz, the divorced wife of Antonio Ruiz, a former member of the Cuban legation at Washington, came up in the trial of suit. Mrs. Ruiz committed suicide in London on May 16, 1909, the manner of her death being suppressed for a considerable time.

Mrs. McKim is the daughter of Isaac Emerson of Baltimore and divorced wife of Dr. Smith Hollins McKim of New York and Baltimore. Mrs. McKim obtained a divorce from her husband, who threatened various suits before the courts, but early in February, 1910, an agreement was signed bringing to an end all pending or possible litigation involving Dr. McKim, his father-in-law, Mr. Emerson, McKim's former wife and Alfred C. Vanderbilt. It was stated that Dr. McKim, in consideration of this release, was to receive a large sum of money.

INDIAN POPULATION 265,683.

Report for U. S. Shows Increase of 12 Per Cent From 1900 to 1910.

Washington, D. C. — A preliminary statement, giving for continental United States the distribution of the Indian population by states and territories, as shown by the returns of the thirteenth decennial census, taken as of April 15, 1910, was issued by Director Durand of the bureau of the census department of commerce and labor.

In 1910 the Indian population of continental United States was 265,683, as compared with 237,196 in 1900, 248,253 in 1890. According to these figures, there was an increase in the Indian population from 1900 to 1910 of 28,487, or 12 per cent, as compared with a decrease from 1890 to 1900 of 11,057, or 4.5 per cent.

In the west north central division of the United States, the Indian population in 1910 was distributed as follows: Minnesota, 9,053; Iowa, 471; Missouri, 313; North Dakota, 6,486; South Dakota, 19,137; Nebraska, 3,502; Kansas 2,444.

MOTHER HELD FOR POISONING

Mrs. Carrie B. Sparling Arrested on Charge of Poisoning Son.

Bad Axe, Michigan — Mrs. Carrie B. Sparling, wife of the late John Wesley Sparling and mother of Cyril, Albert and Peter Starling, all of whom are dead, was arrested, charged with the death of her son Cyril.

Dr. Robert A. McGregor was held to the circuit court charged with the murder of Cyril Sparling. Miss Marguerite Gibbs, the nurse who also attended the youth, waived preliminary examination and was bound over on a charge of accessory after the fact. Prosecutor Boomhower is quoted in an interview as saying that the case against the nurse will be nolled after she has given the prosecution a full statement.

Mrs. Sparling's arrest resulted partly from the testimony of Sheriff McAuley at the McGregor examination. The sheriff testified that Mr. McGregor said to him: "If you fellows will take up Albert Sparling and find poison in him I know of a man who can make Mrs. Sparling confess."

Later a chemist reported that he had found arsenic in Albert Sparling's viscera. The bodies of the father and third son are to be exhumed soon.

Odessa, Minnesota. — Ten to twelve persons were killed and as many more injured, some of them seriously, near this station about 5 a. m. when a fast silk train on the Milwaukee road crashed into the Columbian, one of the crack trains of that railway system, also running east.

The sleeping car of the Columbian, which had been attached at Aberdeen and was of lighter construction than the other cars of through coast trains, was telescoped by the engine of the silk train at one end and by the heavy dining car at the other end. Only two cars were hurled from the track, the sleeper and the diner.

Ten Dead Taken Out.

Ten bodies have been taken from the wreckage, and all but one identified. There is some reason to believe other bodies are still under the debris, and men are at work in the ruins. All of the injured will recover. All the bodies of the dead and most of the injured were placed on a train and taken to Ortonville, where good hospital facilities would be obtained.

Relief From Milbank.

The news of the disaster was flashed to Milbank, a freight division headquarters of the road, and to Ortonville. Two of Ortonville's surgeons, Drs. Bert Karn and Charles Bolsta, were hurried to the scene in automobiles and did heroic work in succoring the injured and giving first aid. Section crews were sent on the relief special from Milbank.

Engineer Sorby and Fireman Sandell of the second section jumped when the collision was seen to be inevitable. Sandell's ankle was broken.

The accident occurred a short distance from the signal tower at Odessa. The first section of the train had been stopped by the towerman because of a freight train in the block ahead of it. The second section, which closely followed the first, is what is known as a "silk" train, carrying merchandise.

The railway officials attribute the accident to the failure of the operator to set the signals against the second section. They also believe that the brakeman of the first section failed to run back to flag the second section. Because of the darkness the engineer of the second section did not see the rear light of the train in front in time to avert a collision.

The wreck tore down the telegraph wires and there was some delay in getting word of the disaster to the headquarters of the road.

The operator at the Odessa station says he left the station and block open for the train to go through and went off duty. When the train reached the station the block was closed and the engineer applied the air. The second section was following so closely and at such high speed that there was no time to warn it of the danger.

Worst Since Rio Disaster.

The wreck is said to be the worst the Milwaukee road has had for twenty-seven years, or since that near Rio, Wis., in 1884, when a train southbound from Minneapolis to Milwaukee, left the rails. The wooden cars then in use, took fire from the heating stoves and thirteen persons were burned to death. The entire train was consumed by the fire.

Mrs. J. F. Richard and her daughter Vessie were wife and daughter of the superintendent of the Trans-Missouri division of the Milwaukee road with headquarters at Mobridge, on the Missouri river, west of Aberdeen.

DEAD MAN AT THROTTLE.

Iowa Accident Similar to the Disaster at Odessa, Minn.

Oskaloosa, Iowa. — With Engineer Peter Goulden of Des Moines dead at the throttle, Burlington freight No. 90, from Des Moines, dashed into the rear end of the Oskaloosa-Tracey passenger train at Tracey while traveling at sixty miles an hour. The passenger coaches were empty and no one was killed. Golden had succumbed to heart failure and the fireman did not discover it until too late.

LAND SHOW ON

MAYOR KELLER SPEAKS IN BEHALF OF CITY AND RALPH W. WHEELOCK FOR STATE.

GOVS. WIRE GREETINGS

Charles Patterson Recites Organization, Ideals and Purposes of the Exhibition—Great Collection of Exhibits.

St. Paul.—With speeches by Mayor Herbert P. Keller for St. Paul, Ralph W. Wheelock, representing Governor Eberhart, for the state, and with greetings read from President Lewis Penwell of the Northwest Development League, and each of the governors of the states represented who are now on the tour of the Western Governors' Special, the Northwestern Land Products Show was officially opened.

Charles Patterson, of St. Paul, chairman of the executive committee of the league, presided at the opening. In his introductory address he retold the history of the organization, its purposes and ideals, and its relation to the growth of the northwest.

Mayor Herbert P. Keller, speaking in behalf of the city of St. Paul, congratulated the Northwest Development League for the movement it had begun.

Wheelock Speaks for Governor.

Ralph W. Wheelock, representing Governor Eberhart, extended the congratulations and good wishes of the state to the show.

Besides the telegrams from Governors Eberhart, of Minnesota, Norris, of Montana, Burke, of North Dakota, Vessey, of South Dakota, Howley, of Idaho, Carey, of Wyoming, Oddie, of Nevada and West of Oregon, greetings were read from Colvin B. Brown, of the Panama-Pacific exposition, former Governor Brady, and others of the Governors' Special.

The concert of the St. Paul quartet attracted a good share of the attention of the visitors at the show, and they shared honors in popularity with the Minnesota State band. The members of the quartet were dressed as farmers and carried cabbages, carrots, alfalfa and other farm products. They sang popular selections at intervals throughout the evening show.

Films Draw Large Crowds.

In the lecture hall the illustrated lectures and moving pictures of life in the northwest drew a large crowd, and the hall was well filled all evening. John F. Fox, of the Northern Pacific, presented views in Yellowstone National park, while C. C. Morrison gave an interesting stereopticon talk on the Glacier National park on the line of the Great Northern.

The Minnesota State band, under the direction of A. L. Snyder, entertained the large crowds, both afternoon andevening, with its concerts in the band stand in the left balcony. A large group of people were gathered in the balcony about the band stand, and every number on the program was applauded enthusiastically. Its programs, of the more standard as well as the popular music, are so made up as to please music lovers of the most varying tastes.

The first day was Children's day and St. Paul school children were guests of the show. Various other days will be devoted to special interests.

The immense auditorium building is filled with thousands of exhibits by the various northwestern states and many exhibits have been installed by the boosting organizations of different counties. Every branch of agricultural activity in the northwest is amply represented.

WORK FOR BETTER ROADS.

Farmers Join Towns People to Aid Twin City State Highway.

Northfield.—A monster good roads meeting was held in this city to consider the matter of a Twin City to Mankato state road. Action has been stimulated by the fact that in the next few days the National Automobile association will designate an official route from the Twin Cities to the southwest. One of two routes will be selected, either through Shakopee and Le Sueur Center, or through Farmington, Northfield, Faribault and Mankato. The latter towns hope to be able, by quick action, to have the latter route selected.

The plan is to interest the farmers and obtain their help in hauling gravel to improve the roads during the winter months. Many farmers have expressed their willingness to co-operate. Many of them are attending the meeting.

The meeting was addressed by special speakers from Madison Lake, Faribault and Mankato, among them George M. Palmer and J. M. Barcley, known all over the state as good roads enthusiasts.

"MONEY TRUST" ASSAILED.

Lindbergh Urges Committee To Investigate Charges.

Washington, D. C. — A plea for the creation of a special committee of five to investigate the so-called "money trust" was made before the house rules committee by Representative Lindbergh of Minnesota. Mr. Lindbergh's contention is that a syndicate of bankers and allied capital controlling the reserve funds in American banks dominate the financial world.

DR. MAYO OPERATED ON

MINNESOTA SURGEON YIELDS TO ATTACK OF APPENDICITIS.

Treatment Declared Successful—Cornelius Vanderbilt in a Like Case.

New York, N. Y. — Dr. Charles H. Mayo of Rochester, Minn., was operated on here for acute appendicitis. The operation was performed in Presbyterian Blake hospital and was entirely successful. Just a few hours before, Cornelius Vanderbilt had been operated on for appendicitis and in his case, too, the report issued was very satisfactory.

Dr. Mayo is a brother of Dr. William J. Mayo, the two conducting the world famous hospital in Rochester, which has been the Mecca for years for all the most difficult cases demanding surgical treatment in the Western hemisphere. The two surgeons have become known as "the surgeons' surgeons," because their colleagues in the profession, from various parts of the continent, have been wont to come to Rochester when in need of care themselves.

Dr. Mayo had been attending the annual meeting of the Southern Surgical association in Washington, when stricken. Mrs. Charles Mayo was in Chicago expecting to meet her husband there on his way back, but she left immediately for New York.

STATE HIGHWAYS PLANNED.

Winona County Board Ready to Open Bids on January 6.

Winona.—Bids will be opened by the county board on January 5 for the construction of three state highways in Winona county under the provisions of the Elwell law passed by the last legislature. The surveys, inspections by viewers and all the necessary preliminary work and red tape is now completed, and it is anticipated that if the figures submitted are reasonable, the county board on January 5 will promptly award the contracts for the construction of these three macadam roads. Ordinarily interested property holders bear the quarter of expense not borne by state and county, but this has all been provided for by private subscription in Winona.

The three roads to be constructed embrace about twenty miles in all, and extend from Winona down the river through Homer to La Moille, from Winona over the Stockton hill to Stockton and then south from there to Almon; from the end of the present macadam in East Burns valley up the valley to the ridge.

TWO BANKERS INDICTED.

Mo and West of Cobden State Bank Under Grand Jury Charge.

New Ulm.—Three indictments have been returned against Rollin M. West, former cashier of the State Bank of Cobden. The first charges him with embezzling $12,271.04, and another with appropriating $1,525 of the bank's money. The third charges embezzling $678.64 of the funds of the village of Cobden, he having held the position of treasurer. All indictments accuse him of grand larceny in the first degree.

Hans Mo, president of the bank at Cobden, was also indicted, and was arrested and released on bail. C. W. Hagen, vice president of the Cobden bank, has been subpenaed to appear before the grand jury. Mr. Mo is one of the best known bankers in Minnesota, and in addition to his interests at Cobden, is president of the State bank of Sleepy Eye, of which Hagen is cashier. The indictment of Mo was returned in connection with the alleged defalcation of the cashier of the bank of Cobden.

$12,000 COWS YIELD $500,000.

Rice County Creameries Market 1,614,430 Pounds of Butter.

Faribault.—The farmers in Rice county the past year have received nearly $50,000 for milk and cream paid to them by the thirteen creameries in the county. The number of patrons of the creameries is 1,271, and the number of cows furnishing milk was about 12,000. The number of pounds of butter made was 1,614,439; and the average price paid for butter-fat 32.01 cents a pound.

RICE COUNTY FAIR ASSURED.

Society Is Authorized to Incorporate and Grounds Are Leased.

Faribault.—The Rice County Agricultural and Amusement society held a meeting for the purpose of completing the organization. A committee was appointed to incorporate the society. Ground within a block of the business section has been leased for ten years. A race track will be built and building erected for the housing of a first-class county fair.

Would Cut Woolen Prices.

Omaha, Neb. — The establishment by the National Wool Growers' association of a factory for the manufacture of woolen goods, so as to give consumers better goods at lower prices, was the proposition of Magnus Brown, president of the Minnesota wool growers' association in an address before the annual convention of the National Wool Growers' association. Mr. Brown declared that the impression that prevails that the high cost of clothing is due to the duty on wool, is erroneous.

STATE FAIR LOST $17,801

SIMPSON'S FIRST YEAR NOT A SUCCESS.

Secretary's Report Shows Decrease of $120,693 From 1910 Receipts.

The Minnesota State fair for 1911 lost $17,801.38, according to the annual report filed by Secretary John C. Simpson with Governor Eberhart. The loss is attributed by the fair management to the continued rain and cold weather. There was a decrease of $120,693.67 from the 1910 receipts. The receipts this year were $168,167.33, and the expenses $185,968.71.

The Minnesota Agricultural society, which condits the fair, paid out $32,882.58 for permanent improvements, and $25,253.65 for the maintenance of the fair grounds. For other expenses $19,454.90 was paid. Of that amount $8,622.30 was paid on claims incurred in former years, and $7,500 for money borrowed.

The buildings belonging to the society were valued by the appraisement committee at $736,140, and the land at $928,000. In making the report the committee said: "The general fine condition of repair in which we found the buildings has materially assisted us in arriving at our conclusions as to the value of the structures."

The members of the committee were Chester R. Smith, John M. Carlson and John J. Watson. The report is dated Nov. 30, 1911, and covers all receipts and disbursements since Dec. 11, 1910. Lat year's report showed that the fair had made a profit of $86,000, but there were outstanding accounts that had not been taken into consideration.

It has been conceded by authorities that the exhibits at the fair this year were finer and larger than ever and the poor showing made in the matter of attendance is attributed to the poor weather during the entire week.

STATE SUES FOR IRON ORE.

Attorney General Takes Steps to Determine Procedure.

St. Paul.—Attorney General George T. Simpson has written the brief to be filed in district court at Duluth, laying claim to the iron ore underlying Longyear lake in St. Louis county, approximately valued at $50,000.

This, however, is only a preliminary step toward laying claim to more than 25,000,000 tons of iron ore underlying Embarrass river in a more remote section of the state. The principle involved in both cases will be the same. Should the state win the Longyear suit, a precedent will be established.

The suits hinge on the question of riparian rights. The state contends that the title of up-land owners extends only to high water mark with certain ri appurtenant to the upland which do ot include the right to mine in or otherwise sever the bottom of the lake. It insists that it owns the bottom of the lake including the iron ore therein, and that it is entitled to an accounting for all the iron ore which has been taken from it.

Riparian rights, Mr. Simpson contends, give owners of lands adjacent to navigable waters right of access or egress, but do not confer title to land or ores beneath them.

The suit is brought against Eliza Korrer and Annie L. Korrer, who own what is known as lot 5, section 21, township 58 north, range 20 west. The owners leased the mineral rights to a mining company.

GLEE CLUB ARRANGES TOUR.

Carleton College Singers May Include Minneapolis in Itineary.

Northfield. — Carleton College Glee club promises to be better than ever before. The usual two-weeks' jaunt has been planned to include a trip into Wisconsin besides a long swing along the Iron Range. The parts are well balanced and the director, S. Howard Brown, of Minneapolis, is pleased with the showing made. The two additional months of practice secured by the early start last fall will be of great help.

The first stop will be made at Austin and from there the club will go to Winona. Leaving Winona for Duluth, several cities along the Mississippi will be visited and a few stops will be made in Wisconsin. After the Duluth concert the principal range towns will be visited. Concerts in Hutchinson and Glencoe will probably end the tour, with a possible appearance in Minneapolis.

"Death Valley," At Minneapolis.

"Through Death Valley," a melodrama of the west, with a troupe of full-blooded Sioux Indians, a duel to the death between a half-breed and an Indian, a real rainstorm and the struggle of a bound rattlesnake as some of its particular features, is announced for presentation at the Bijou, Minneapolis, as the attraction Christmas week.

GEARLDS IS BOUND OVER.

Blackduck Arson Trial Postponed Till February.

Bemidji. — All efforts to discredit the state's Blackduck arson case testimony by forcing Attorney General Simpson to appear as a witness to be followed later on the stand by E. E. McDonald, special prosecutor, and Sheriff Hazen, failed, Municipal Judge H. A. Simons binding Edward Gearlds over to await the action of the February grand jury. He was released on $5,000 bond.

HOUSE OF SILENCE

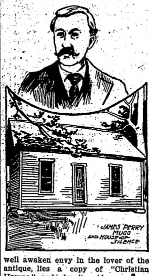
Kept As a Memorial to Dead Wife.

Hoosier Home In Which Nothing Has Been Touched Since the Death Angel's Visit Three Decades Ago.

Center, Ind.—The story, however strange, is now so old that the people in and about this village have long ceased to discuss it. Occasionally an elder of the neighborhood, in driving with a stranger along the narrow highway, will point out the "House of Silence" and in a matter-of-fact way relate its half forgotten history—the home that for 30 years or more to all the world, save alone its master, who lives elsewhere, has been as close locked as the tomb that for as many years has held its one-time mistress. And so it will remain they say until James Perry Mugg is laid beside the wife of his youth, whose simplest thing touched by her vanquished hand he treasures as never miser treasured hoarded gold.

Without the old house is not unlike scores of the humble structures one will see in a day's drive in the country, with weatherboarded front and window lighting either cramped room, the paint rain-washed and sun-burned from every board these many years. But about all is the sear of decay. The plank step at the doorway crumbles under the lightest footfall. The time-stained blinds are close-drawn, shutting out every ray of light. The swallows and the wasps have nested in the eaves and in the window ledges and spiders draw their feathery films over the unwashed panes. Nearer the highway the bluegrass lawn has been close cropped by the grazing cattle, but about the house the weeds grow rank and wild. At the rear is a detached shed, mounted by a dinner bell in which the sparrows have found a home.

Within not one thing has been changed since the call of the death angel three decades ago. On an old fashioned dressing case such as might well awaken envy in the lover of the antique, lies a copy of "Christian Hymns," and by its side an open Bible, used, doubtless, in the sad rites. Hung over the back of a mohair cushioned chair a shawl of some fine fabric is fast falling to pieces. On the table by the side of the shaded lamp sits a work-basket, with the spools of cotton, its needles and skeins of yarn. On a wall shelf the dishes are arranged just as they were left after the final meal. By a peg on the wall a sunbonnet had hung, but the strings have rotted away and it has fallen to the floor. A broom stands in the corner, having swept the now faded rag carpet the last time when hands now folded upon a pulseless bosom were vigorous and strong. And by the table with its shaded lamp, its work-basket and a few simple books, is a child's rush-bottomed rocking chair. How it links the dead past with the living present! Out with the threshers in one of the fields of the 60 odd acres which James Perry Mugg holds here, is a stalwart young man, singing as he thrusts the yellow sheaves into the greedy maw of the noisy machine. It was he who sat in the rush-bottomed chair and heard the stories of the dust-covered books from his mother's lips.



JAMES PERRY MUGG AND HOUSE OF SILENCE

Says Crows Are Good to Eat.

Topeka, Kan.—Prof. L. L. Dyche has eaten crow, but unlike a few of our politicians he considers it "first-class eating." The professor avers that "the flesh of the young crow is as good as that of the guinea hen. It is a little dark, but it has a good flavor and is fine of texture." He is also fond of the young red-tailed hawk which, cooked right, he declares, could not be distinguished from chicken.

Hog in Well Lives 52 Days.

Henryetta, Okla.—A hog that had been at the bottom of a dry well for 52 days was found alive by John B. Jordan, farmer. When the animal was pulled out by Jordan and four neighbors it was only a skeleton. It walked a quarter of a mile to the barn.

Man Decapitated by a Car.

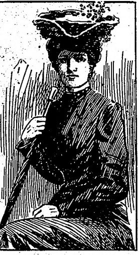
Spokane, Wash.—Robert Cool, a retired Illinois farmer aged seventy-four, slipped on the snow in crossing a Great Northern track and was decapitated by an empty mail car which was being switched. His body was crushed beneath the wheels.

DUCHESS GOES TO THE FRONT

Aristocratic Woman Disregards Irate King and Relatives Who Object to Her Decision.

Rome, Italy.—Disregarding the commands of Italy's king and the fervid objections of all her royal relatives, the duchess of Aosta has left her home and her life of luxury for Tripoli. There with several other women of noble blood who have answered the call of compassion she will nurse the sick and wounded, whether they be sons of Italy or Turks.

While it is not to be presumed that this aristocratic woman will suffer extreme discomfort or be in any real danger the fact that she is willing to do her share of the work at the front places her in the ranks of genuine nobility. While engaged in her labor of mercy the duchess will drop her title and will be known simply as nurse No. 3 of the Naples Red Cross. She stuck to her decision to go to the front, once her mind was made up, in the teeth of general disapproval and coldness on the part of the aristocrats who make up her social circle.



The Duchess of Aosta.

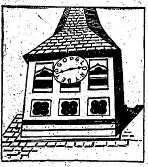
It is said that for a frail little woman, to whom illness is no stranger and whose general attitude seems one of sweet and gentle acquiescence, the duchess has an underlying determination which would do credit to an iron-willed man accustomed to battling his way through life. More than once has his majesty, the king, come up against this phase of her disposition and in the end has been forced to yield with what grace he could summon. The duchess was, before her marriage to the duke of Aosta, Princess Elena d'Orleans, daughter of the late Count de Paris.

CLOCK MADE FROM OLD JUNK

British Villager Constructs Timepiece Which Is the Most Remarkable in the World.

London.—It was proposed to celebrate King George's coronation by providing a clock for Wootton Rivers church, but lack of funds forbade. Then a villager, Mr. Spratt, stepped into the breach and offered to make a clock free of charge if some one would undertake the heavier work and the villagers would give him all the scrapped iron, steel, brass and lead they could find. He was taken at his word and was as good as his word, and this resulted in the clock illustrated, which was dedicated the other day.

To the making of the timepiece went parts of agricultural machinery, fire irons, bedsteads, old bicycles, brass weights and perambulators, disused milk separators (for the two big wheels) and a governor ball from a steam engine (which acts as hammer) to strike the hours on the largest bell of a peal of five. One of the three dials has the words "Glory Be to God" instead of the customary numerals.



Made From Old Junk.

Women Smokers Barred.

Chicago.—Women may have a legal right to smoke, but they will not be permitted to do so publicly in Chicago hotels. Managers of the largest hotels have declared that if a woman attempted to smoke in a public dining room or cafe the waiter would ask her to stop. Failing to do so, she would be asked to leave.

Needle in Foot Twenty Years.

Warrensburg, Mo.—An operation removed a portion of a needle a quarter of an inch long from the foot of Miss Mattie Johnston, a milliner. The needle has been in her foot for twenty ears.

NEW AND OLD DISHES

FOR THE FAMILY DINNER OR DELECTATION OF GUESTS.

Lemon Sponge a Special Delicacy With Which to Finish a Meal—Cookies Made With Sour Cream—Beaten Steak.

For a lemon sponge mix a cupful of sugar with the juice of four lemons. Beat the yolks of four eggs and add them to the mixture. Thin out with one cupful and a half of water and cook until it begins to grow thick. Then add enough melted gelatine to stiffen it when it becomes cold. Strain the mixture into a mold, and just as it begins to stiffen fold in the whites of four eggs beaten to a stiff froth. If English gelatine is used four good tablespoonfuls will usually be enough.

Delicious cookies are made with sour cream. Beat half a liberal cupful of butter with two cupfuls of sugar. Add two eggs and a cupful of sour cream. Flavor with half a grated nutmeg and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Add a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a spoonful of water and half a teaspoonful of salt. Stir in enough sifted flour to make a dough that can be rolled out. Let it stand a few minutes, then lightly flour the molding board, dip out a big lump of the dough and turn it into cookies, using as little flour as possible for rolling. After this batch is cut into cookies dip out some more, and so on until all is used. In this way not so much flour is likely to be needed, as when the whole mass is turned out at once on the board, and, of course, the less flour uesd in rolling out the cookies the better they are.

For southern beaten steak, a cheap but juicy piece of meat is used. Cut the meat into small steaks the size of the hand. Season each piece highly with salt and pepper. Then pound each piece until it is almost literally a rag. Roll up each and dip in cornmeal. Fry in very hot suet and serve at once for breakfast, with coffee and rolls or corn pone.

For another "breakfast steak" pound a piece of round steak until the toughest fibers are broken, then rub it with lemon juice and double it over. Pound it again and sprinkle with salt. Fold it over again, pound a third time if desired, and fold yet again. It should now be about an inch and a quarter in thickness. Press it a little to make it adhere and have the edges of uniform thickness. Rub with a little flour, broil like any other steak and spread with butter.

Finnan Haddie.

Baked—Wash the fish, put flesh side down in dripping pan covered with cold water, let stand on back of range ten minutes. Drain and rinse with cold water. Place on platter, cover with milk and bake 20 minutes.

Croquettes—Prepare fish as for baked finnan haddie. Take the fish, moisten with thick white sauce. Shape in croquettes, dip in crumbs, egg and crumbs, and fry in deep fat.

In Chafing Dish—Soak fish over night, then boil one hour and a half, pick and bone it and put in chafing dish cream sauce made as follows: Tablespoon butter, two tablespoons flour melted together; add hot milk, about one pint and a half (to make the right consistency), pour over the fish and heat thoroughly in chafing dish about twenty minutes.

Turkey Stew.

Cut the turkey from the bones and divide it into neat pieces. Heat the gravy left over, diluting it with hot water or with weak stock if the supply is too small. Season with salt, pepper, Worcestershire sauce or catsup, and put the meat into the gravy when this is boiling hot. When the meat has simmered in it for ten minutes add a tablespoonful of cranberry or currant jelly, thicken with a little browned flour and serve either on toast or fried bread, with triangles of this arranged around the edge of the dish.

Lemon Pudding.

Soak for half an hour a pint of bread crumbs in one quart of milk, then add the grated rinds of two lemons, one cup of sugar, yolks of two eggs and pinch of salt and tablespoon of butter. Bake until done and cool just a little, and frost with the whites of two eggs (beaten to a stiff froth first) then add one cup of sugar and juice of one lemon. Beat all together. Spread on pudding, set in oven and brown just a little.

Stewed Ox Tail.

Wash the tail in cold water, and cut in joints, dividing the large top joints. Put into a saucepan with one sliced carrot and a medium-size onion cut up, cover with water, and stew very gently for two hours; skim as much fat as possible from the top, then thicken the gravy with flour, mixed with a little ketchup or Harvey's sauce.

To Mend Linen.

Fit the worn part securely in an ordinary embroidery hoop. Take off the foot of the sewing machine. Use a fine thread and stitch back and forth, moving the frame so that the stitching will be at right angles.—Suburban Life.

Flowers Painted.

Not only can faded flowers be touched up with water colors, but new ones can be made to match when it is impossible to get the exact shade you wish in the shops.

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff atacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan, recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay: they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early.

CHAPTER XXI.—Continued.

With the ardor of young manhood I looked forward to the coming battle, when I knew the mighty armies of North and South would once again contest for the fertile Shenandoah. It was to be American pitted against American, a struggle ever worthy of the gods. Slowly I rode back down the files of my men, marking their alignment and accoutrements with practised eye, smiling grimly as I noted their eager faces, war-worn and bronzed by exposure, yet reanimated by hope of active service. As I watched them thus, I thought again of those many other faces who once rode as these men did now, but who had died for duty even as these also might yet be called upon to die. One hundred and three strong, gay in bright new uniforms, with unstained banner kissing the breeze above our proud young heads, we rode hopefully forth from Charlottesville scarce three years before, untried, undisciplined, unknown, to place our lives willingly upon the scared altar of our native State. What speechless years of horror those had been; what history we had written with our naked steel; what scenes of suffering and death lay along that bloody path we travelled! To-day, down the same red road, our eyes still set grimly to the northward, our flag a torn and ragged remnant, barely forty men wore the "D" between the crossed sabres on their slouched brown hats, in spite of all recruiting. The cheer in my heart was for the living; the tear in my eye was for the dead.

"Colgate," I said gravely, as I ranged up beside him at the rear of the troop, "the men look exceedingly well, and do not appear to have suffered greatly because of short rations."

"Oh, the lads are always in fine fettle when they expect a fight," he answered, his own eyes dancing as he swept them over that straight line of backs in his front. "They'll scrap the better for being a bit hungry,—it makes them savage. Beats all, Captain, what foolish notions some of those people on the other side have of us Southerners. They seem to think we are entirely different from themselves; yet I reckon it would puzzle any recruiting officer up yonder to show a finer lot of fighting men than those fellows ahead there."

I rode slowly forward to my own position at the head of the troop. As I swung my horse into our accustomed position I was too deeply buried in reflection to be clearly conscious of much that was occurring about me. Suddenly, however, I became aware that some one, nearly obscured by the enveloping cloud of dust, was riding without the column, in an independence of military discipline not to be permitted. In the state of mind I was then in this discovery strangely irritated me.

"Sergeant," I questioned sharply, of the raw-boned trooper at the end of the first platoon, "what fellow is that riding out yonder?"

"It's ther pesky little cuss as come in with ye yesterday, sir," he returned with a grin. "He's confiscated a muel somewhar an' says he's a goin' back hum 'long o' we uns."

Curious to learn how Jed had emerged from his arduous adventures, I spurred my horse alongside of him. The little man, bending forward dubiously, as if fearful of accident, was riding bareback on a gaunt, long-legged mule, which, judging from all outward appearances, must have been some discarded asset of the quartermaster's department.

"Going home, Jed?" I asked, as he glanced up and saw me.

"Jist as durn quick as I kin git thar," he returned emphatically. "By gum, Cap, I ain't bin 'way from Mariar long as this afore in twelve year. Reckon she thinks I've skedaddled fer good this time, an' 'ill be a takin' up with some other male critter lest I git back thar mighty sudden. Women's odd, Cap, durn nigh as ornary 'bout some things as a muel."

He eyed his mount critically.

"Durned if ever I thought I'd git astraddle o' any four-legged critter agin," he said, rubbing himself as if in sudden and painful recollection of the past. "But I sorter picked up this yere muel down et ther corral, an' he's tew durn wore out a totin' things fer you uns ter ever move offen a walk. I sorter reckon it's a heap easier a sittin' yere than ter take it afut all ther way ter ther mountings."

It was long after dark the second day when, thoroughly wearied, we turned into an old tobacco field and made camp for the night. To right and left of our position glowed the cheery fires, telling where Early's command bivouacked in line of battle. From the low range of hills in front of where we rested one could look across an intervening valley, and see far off to the northward the dim flames which marked the position of the enemy. Down in the mysterious darkness between, divided only by a swift and narrow stream, were the blue and gray pickets. The opposing forces were sleeping on their arms, making ready for the death grip on the morrow.

As I lay there thinking, wondering what might be my fate before another nightfall, seeing constantly in my half-dreams the fair face of a woman, which made me more of a coward than I had ever felt myself before, I was partially aroused by the droning tones of a voice close at hand. Lifting myself on one elbow I glanced curiously around to see where it originated, what was occurring. Clustered about a roaring fire of rails were a dozen troopers, and in the midst of them, occupying the post of honor upon an empty powder keg, was Bungay, enthusiastically reciting Scott. I caught a line or two:

"'At once there rose so wild a yell
Within that dark and narrow dell,
As all the fiends from heaven that fell
Had pealed the battle-cry of hell.'" and then the drowsy gods pressed down my heavy eyelids, and I fell asleep.

CHAPTER XXII.

The Battle in the Shenandoah.

To me it has always seemed remarkable that after all my other battle experiences—Antietam, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, ay! even including that first fierce baptism of fire at Manassas—no action in which I ever participated should remain so clearly photographed upon memory as this last desperate struggle for supremacy in the Shenandoah. Every minute detail of the conflict, at least so far as I chanced to be a personal participant, rises before me as I write, and I doubt not I could trace to-day each step taken upon that stricken field.

The reveille had not sounded when I first awoke and, rolling from my blanket, looked about me. Already a faint, dim line of gray, heralding the dawn, was growing clearly defined in the east, and making manifest those heavy fog-banks which, hanging dank and low, obscured the valley. The tired men of my troop were yet lying upon the ground, wrapped tightly in their blankets, oblivious of the deadly work before them; but I could hear the horses already moving uneasily at their picket-ropes, and observed here and there the chilled figure of a sentry leaning upon his gun, oddly distorted in form by the enveloping mist.

Directly in advance of where we rested, a long hill sloped gently upward for perhaps a hundred yards, its crest topped with a thick growth of young oak-trees, yet seemingly devoid of underbrush. No troops were camped in our immediate front, and feeling curious to ascertain something of our formation, as well as to examine the lay of the land between us and the position occupied by the enemy, I walked slowly forward, unhindered, until I attained the crest. The fog yet held the secrets of the valley safely locked within its brown hand, and I could penetrate none of its mysteries. It was like gazing down from some headland into a silent, unvexed sea. But directly across from where I stood, apparently along the summit of another chain of low hills similar to those we occupied, I could perceive the flames of numerous camp-fires leaping up into sudden radiance, while against the brightening sky a great flag lazily flapped its folds to the freshening breeze. Evidently our opponents were first astir, and the headquarters of some division of the enemy must be across yonder. As I gazed, other fires burst forth to left and right, as far as the unaided eye could carry through the gloom, and I was thus enabled to trace distinctly those advanced lines opposing us. Experience told me their position must be a strong one, and their force heavy.

As I turned to mark our own formation, the roll of drums rang out, while the quickening notes of the reveille sounded down the long lines of slumbering men. Life returned, as if by magic, to those motionless forms, and almost in a moment all below me became astir, and I could clearly distinguish the various branches of the service, as they stretched away commingled upon either hand. We were evidently stationed close to the centre of our own position. The intervening ground sloped so gently forward, while the hill crest was so thickly crowned with trees, it looked an ideal position from which to advance in line of attack. Upon my right there appeared a break in the solidity of our line, but even as I noted it, wondering at the oversight, the dense front of an infantry column debouched from a ravine and, marching steadily forward, filled the gap. I could distinctly mark the wearied manner in which the men composing it flung themselves prostrate on the hard ground the moment they were halted—doubtless all through the long hours of the black night they had been toiling on to be in time.

Aides were galloping furiously now among the scattered commands. The obscuring fog slowly rose from off the face of the valley, but all the central portion remained veiled from view. Suddenly, as I watched, the brown cloud beneath me was rent asunder here and there by little spits of fire, and it was curious to observe how those quick spiteful darts of flame swept the full length of my vista. I could distinguish no reports,—it was too far away,—but realized that the opposing pickets had caught sight of each other through the gloom. Then a big gun boomed almost directly opposite me, its flame seeming like a red-hot knife rending the mist. This had barely vanished when a sudden cheer rang out upon my left, and I turned in time to behold a thin, scattered line of gray-clad infantrymen swarm down the steep slope into the valley. With hats drawn low, and guns advanced, they plunged at a run into the mist and disappeared. Our skirmishers had gone in; the ball had opened.

I had tarried long enough; any moment now might bring "boots and saddles," and if I possessed the slightest desire for a breakfast to fight on, it behooved me to get back within our lines. The memory of that animated scene in front still fresh upon me, how quiet and commonplace everything appeared down there in the hills.

"What has become of Bungay?" I questioned of Colgate, who was lying upon his back with eyes fastened on a floating cloud.

"Do you mean the little mountaineer who came in with us last night?"

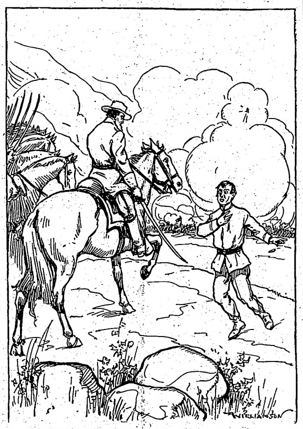
I nodded.

"Oh, his mule bolted at the first shot over yonder, and the little fellow is after it. He's down the field there somewhere."

How time dragged! The battery to left of us went into action, and began firing rapidly; we could mark the black figures of the cannoneers at the nearer guns, outlined against the sky over the crest, as they moved quickly back and forth. Twice they bore motionless bodies to the rear, and laid them down tenderly beyond the fierce zone of fire. Then the heavier pieces of artillery farther down the line burst into thunder, and we silently watched a large force of infantry move slowly past us up the long slope until they halted in line of battle just behind its summit, the advanced files lying flat upon their faces and peering over. But no orders came for us.

Nearly noon by the red sun hiding behind the drifting powder cloud. The ever-deepening roar of ceaseless contest had moved westward down the valley, when an aide wheeled his smoking horse in front of the Colonel, spoke a dozen hasty words, pointed impetuously to the left, and dashed off down the line. The men leaped to their feet in eager expectancy, and as the "Fall in, fall in there, lads," echoed joyously from lip to lip, the kindling eyes and rapid movements voiced unmistakably the soldier spirit. We moved westward down the long, bare slope in the sunshine, through a half-dozen deserted, desolate fields, and along a narrow, rocky defile leading into a deep revine. At the mouth of the ravine we came forth into the broad valley, and halted. Just in front of us, scarcely a half-mile distant, were the fighting lines, partially enveloped in dense smoke, out from which broke patches of blue or gray, as charge succeeded charge, or the wind swept aside the fog of battle. The firing was one continuous crash, while plunging bullets, overreaching their mark, began to chug into our own ranks, dealing death impartially to horse and man. The captain of the troop next mine wheeled suddenly, a look of surprise upon his face, and fell backward into the arms of one of his men; with an intense scream of agony, almost human, the horse of my first sergeant reared and came over, crushing the rider before he could loosen foot from stirrup; the Lieutenant-Colonel rode slowly past us to the rear, his face deathly white, one arm, dripping blood, dangling helpless at his side. This was the hardest work of war, that silent agony which tried men in helpless bondage to unyielding discipline. I glanced anxiously along the front of my troop, but they required no word from me; with tightly set lips, and pale, stern faces, they held their line steady as granite, closing up silently the ragged gaps torn by plunging balls.

"Captain," said Colgate, riding to where I sat my horse, "you will see that the paper I gave you reaches home safe if I fail to come out of this?"



On Foot and Dying He Reached Our Front.

I reached over and gripped his hand hard.

"It will be the first thing I shall remember, Jack," I answered earnestly. "But we may have it easy enough after all—it seems to be an infantry affair."

He shook his head gravely.

"No," he said, pointing forward, "they will need us now."

As he spoke it seemed as though the sharp firing upon both sides suddenly ceased by mutual consent. The terrible roar of small arms, which had mingled with the continuous thunder of great guns, died away into an intermittent rattling of musketry, and as the heavy smoke slowly drifted upward in a great white cloud, we could plainly distinguish the advancing Federal lines, three ranks deep, stretching to left and right in one vast, impenetrable blue wall, sweeping toward us upon a run. Where but a brief moment before the plain appeared deserted, it was now fairly alive with soldiery, the sun gleaming on fixed bayonets, and faces aglow with the ardor of surprise. Some one had blundered! The thin, unsupported line of gray infantry directly in our front closed up their shattered ranks hastily in desperate effort to stay the rush. We could see them jamming their muskets for volley fire, and then, with clash and clatter that drowned all other sounds, a battery of six black guns came flying madly past us, every horse on the run, lashed into frenzy by his wild rider. With carriage and caisson leaping at every jump, the half-naked, smoke-begrimed cannoneers clinging to their seats like monkeys, they dashed recklessly forward, swung about into position, and almost before the muzzles had been well pointed, were hurling canister into that blue, victorious advance. How those gallant fellows worked! their guns leaping into air at each discharge, their movements clockwork! Tense, eager, expectant, every hand among us hard gripped on sabre hilt, we waited that word which surely could not be delayed, while from end to end, down the full length of our straining line, rang out the yell of exultant pride.

"Steady, men; steady there, lads!" called the old Colonel, sternly, his own eyes filled with tears. "Our turn will come."

Torn, rent, shattered, bleeding, treading upon the dead and mangled in rows, those iron men in blue came on. They were as demons laughing at death. No rain of lead, no hail of canister, no certainty of destruction could check now the fierce impetus of that forward rush. God knows it was magnificent; the supreme effort of men intoxicated with the enthusiasm of war! Even where we were we could see and feel the giant power in those grim ranks of steel—the tattered flags, the stern, set faces, the deep-toned chorus of "Glory, glory, hallelujah," that echoed to their tread. Those men meant to win or die, and they rolled on as Cromwell's Ironsides at Marston Moor. Twice they staggered, when the mad volleys ploughed ragged red lanes through them, but only to rally and press sternly on. They struck that crouching gray line of infantry, fairly buried it with their dense blue folds, and, with one fierce hurrah of triumph, closed down upon the guns. Even as they blotted them from sight, an aide, hatless and bleeding, his horse wounded and staggering from weakness, tore down toward us along the crest. A hundred feet away his mount fell headlong, but on foot and dying he reached our front.

"Colonel Carter," he panted, pressing one hand upon his breast to keep back the welling blood, "charge, and hold that battery until we can bring infantry to your support."

No man among us doubted the full meaning of it—we were to save the army! The very horses seemed to feel a sense of relief, hands clinched more tightly on taut reins to hold them in check; under the old battered hats the eyes of the troopers gleamed hungrily.

"Virginians!" and the old Colonel's voice rang like a clarion down the breathless line, "there is where you die! Follow me!"

Slowly, like some mighty mountain torrent gaining force, we rode forth at a walk, each trooper lined to precision of review, yet instinctively taking distance for sword play. Halfway down the slight slope our line broke into a sharp trot, then, as the thrilling notes of the charge sounded above us, we swept forward in wild, impetuous tumult.

Who can tell the story of those seconds that so swiftly followed? Surely not one who saw but the vivid flash of steel, the agonized faces, the flame of belching fire. I recall the frenzied leap of my horse as we struck the line ere it could form into square; the blows dealt savagely to right and left; the blaze of a volley scorching our faces; the look of the big infantryman I rode down; the sudden thrust that saved me from a levelled gun; the quick swerving of our horses as they came in contact with the cannon; the shouts of rage; the blows; the screams of pain; the white face of Colgate as he reeled and fell. These are all in my memory, blurred, commingled, indistinct, yet distressful as any nightmare. In some way, how I know not, I realized that we had hurled them back, shattered them by our first fierce blow; that the guns were once again ours; that fifty dismounted troopers were tugging desperately at their wheels. Then that dense blue mass surged forward once again, engulfed us in its deadly folds, and with steel and bullet, sword and clubbed musket, ploughed through our broken ranks, rending us in twain, fairly smothering us by sheer force of numbers. I saw the old Colonel plunge head-down into the ruck beneath the horses' feet; the Major riding stone dead in his saddle, a ghastly red stain in the centre of his forehead; then Hunter, of E, went down screaming, and I knew I was the senior captain left. About me scarce a hundred men battled like demons for their lives in the midst of the guns. Even as I glanced aside at them, shielding my head with uplifted sabre from the blows rained upon me, the color-sergeant flung up his hand, and grasped his saddle pommel to keep from falling. Out of his opening fingers I snatched the splintered staff, lifted it high up, until the rent folds of the old flag caught the dull glow of the sunlight.

"—th Virginia!" I shouted. "Rally on the colors!"

I could see them coming—all that was left of them—fighting their way through the press, cleaving the mass with their blows as the prow of a ship cut the sea. With one vicious jab of the spur I led them, a thin wedge of tempered gray steel, battering, gouging, rending a passage into that solid blue wall. Inch by inch, foot by foot, yard by yard, slashing madly with our broken sabres, battling as men crazed with lust of blood, our very horses fighting for us with teeth and hoofs, we ploughed a lane of death through a dozen files. Then the vast mass closed in upon us, roiled completely over us. There was a flash, a vision of frenzied faces, and I knew no more.

An Inspiration.

"Professor McMuddle is very ingenious in twisting things around to illustrate his theories, is he not?"

"Yes, I believe he proposes to take the fact of the champagne troubles in France nearly overturning the government, to illustrate the curse of drink."

A FEDERAL HEALTH BOARD.

It is gratifying to note that the bill for the creation of a federal health board will not be allowed to pass without a protest. Reports of organized resistance come from all parts of the country, and it may be that the opposition will soon be sufficiently solidified to defeat a project that promises infinite mischief for the community, and suffering and injustice for the individual.

The proposal is based upon those specious claims that are notoriously hard to controvert. If a federal health board were to confine its activities to the promulgation of salutary advice upon hygienic matters, to the abatement of quackery, and to the purity of drugs, it might be possible to say much in its favor, although it would still be difficult to say that such an organization is needed. But we know that it will attempt to do far more than this, seeing that its adherents have loudly proclaimed their intentions. Indeed, there is no secrecy about them. It is confidently expected that the board will consist of advocates of one school of medicine only and that the methods of that school will be not only recommended, but enforced upon the nation. Indeed a board that was in any way representative of the medical profession as a whole would be stultified by its own disagreements. Outside the domain of simple hygiene, for which we need no federal board at all, there is no single point of medical practice upon which allopaths, homeopaths, eclectics and osteopaths could be in unison. Any board that could be devised by the wit of man must be composed of representatives of one school only, and this means that all other schools are branded as of an inferior caste, even though nothing worse happened to them. And something worse would happen to them. If we are to establish a school of medicine, if we are to assert that the government of the United States favors one variety of practice more than others, why not establish also a sect of religion and bestow special authorities upon Baptists, Methodists and Episcopalians? An established school of religious conjecture seems somewhat less objectionable than an established sect of pseudo-scientific conjecture.

Those who suppose that a federal board of health would have no concern with individual rights are likely to find themselves undeceived. It is for the purpose of interfering with individual rights that the proposal has been made. We need no special knowledge of conditions to be aware that what may be called unorthodox methods of healing have made sad inroads into the orthodox. Homeopathy claims a vast number of adherents who are just as well educated and just as intelligent as those who adhere to the older school. Osteopathy, eclecticism, and half a dozen other methods of practice are certainly not losing ground. Beyond them is the vast and increasing army of those who may be classed under the general and vague name of mental healers. Those who are addicted to any of these forms of unorthodoxy need have no doubt as to the purposes of the federal health board. Those purposes are to make it difficult for them to follow their particular fads and fancies, to lead them, and if necessary to drive them, from medical unorthodoxy to medical orthodoxy.

Now the Argonaut holds no brief for any of the excesses and the superstitions connected with the care of the body in which this age is so rife. But it does feel concerned for the preservation of human liberty and for the rights of the individual to doctor himself in any way he pleases so long as he does not indubitably threaten the health of the community. He may take large doses or small ones, or no doses at all; he may be massaged, anointed with oil, or prayed over, just as the whim of the moment may dictate, and probably it makes no particle of difference which he does. But he has the right to choose, just as he chooses the color of his necktie or the character of his underclothing. It is not a matter in which any wise government will seek to interfere. This is precisely the liberty that the health board intends to take from him. Orthodox medicine, conscious of its losses, is trying to buttress itself by federal statute, to exalt allopathy to the status of a privileged caste, and to create an established school of medicine just as some other countries have allowed themselves to create an established school of religion. It is for the common sense of the community to rebuke that effort and to repel an unwarranted invasion upon elementary human rights.—San Francisco Argonaut.

COSTS LESS THAN 55 CENTS A BUSHEL TO RAISE WHEAT IN CANADA.

A FREQUENT QUESTION ANSWERED.

Western Canada probably suffered less from weather conditions during the year of 1911 than did almost any other portion of the country. Seeding was most successful and the growing conditions up to July were never better. Crops of all kinds showed wonderful growth at that time and were universally good, but there was not the usually excellent ripening weather in August and the effects of this were felt. Many fields that late in July promised 40 and 50 bushels yield of wheat were reduced to 25 and 30 bushels, while some of course gave the full expectancy and others somewhat less. The quality was also lowered. In face of these conditions, it is found that during the months of September and October, the total amount of contract wheat marketed and inspected was about 20 million bushels, which realized a total of 18½ million dollars, the average price for this wheat being 97¾ cents; that below contract for the two months was a little over 15 million bushels, which at an average price of 89½ cents per bushel realized a little over eleven million dollars, or a grand total for all wheat of 35 million bushels, which realized a total of a little over thirty-one million dollars.

On the first of November, there was in the hands of the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta for sale and seed about 130 million bushels of wheat, from which fact some idea may be had of the value of the wheat crop of 1911.

A careful canvass made by the Winnipeg Free Press made of a number of men farming in a large way indicates that even with the extreme expense of harvesting the crop, which has been caused by the bad weather and difficulty in threshing, wheat has been produced and put on the market for less than 55 cts. a bushel. The average freight rate is not over 13 cts. per bushel. This would make the cost of production and freight 68 cts. and would leave the farmer an actual margin on his low-grade wheat of 17½ cts. and for his high-grade wheat of 19½ cts.; and though this is not as large a profit as the farmer has every right to expect, it is a profit not to be despised, and which should leave a very fair amount of money to his credit when all the expenses of the year have been paid, unless the value of low-grade wheat sinks very much below its present level.

Modern Methods.

Moliere had written many plays to ridicule doctors and medicine. Louis XIV. heard that the author had, however, a doctor at his service since he became famous and well to do, so the king one day called upon Moliere and said to him:

"I have heard, Moliere, that you have a physician. What is he doing to you?"

"Sire," answered the author of the Malade Imaginaire, "we chat together, he writes prescriptions for me, I don't take them, and I am cured!"—Life.

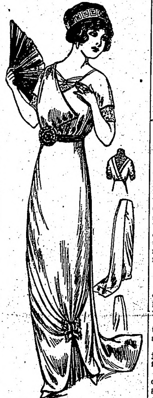
INSIST UPON BEAUTY

WHY WOMEN RIGHTLY CLING TO PREVAILING STYLES.

Graceful Lines of Present Fashions Are Not Lightly to Be Given Up—Really a Debt Is Owing to the Harem Skirt.

Up to this moment the air has been filled with rumors of radical changes in dress, yet so far we are still slim sylphs, still graceful, still young. In fact, the makers themselves have temporarily given up the fight for decided changes, and are bending all their efforts toward making the styles we have more beautiful. Manufacturers, too, are helping on the good work, and from whizzing looms come velvets, silks, gauzes, tulles that look as if they had been spun by the fairies. Indeed, since the days of the French Louis fabrics have never been more sumptuous than now and, besides, they comport with the great requirement of the hour—youthfulness. Frail gauzes are exquisitely traced over with cut velvet, veilings are threaded over with tinsel, laces for everything but the street get-up are as fine as cobwebs. No material can be stiff, for effects are still clinging; the contour of the body, which the great artists declare to be the most divine of God's creations, must be revealed. What is the result of all this beauty? For the first time in her life woman resents the talk of new styles; with all her strength she is holding on to the effects that banish middle age, take a dozen years from the really aged and make the genuinely young seem like daughters of the gods. The fashions of 1830 may return after awhile, but they will be so altered, so cunningly considerate of looks, that we will not recognize them. We have acquired the habit of beauty in dress and it will be a hard one to break.



The illustration presents an evening gown with some of the season's most important and most charming points, and, as may be seen, the style has been largely influenced by the harem skirt. The material of this stunning costume is satin charmeuse in a shade of blue so faint as to seem almost white. The bodice is veiled over with dawn pink chiffon, the same also covering the front breadths of the skirt. The train, oddly enough, is of the uncovered blue charmeuse. The harem feature comes in with the slashing of the skirt, which is caught at this point with a large gold butterfly; in the opening hangs a deep fringe of black chenille, the same note being repeated in velvet for the belt and chou. The little modestie at the front of the bodice is of plain white tulle caught together with a gilt bauble, and the undersleeve bands are of gilt embroidered tulle.

Plain ivory white or satin, or the same material in a delicate color, with the bodice edges and the skirt ornament of gilt, would be as handsome in this style as the present combination. Chiffon velvet and plain veiling over silk are other rewarding materials, but if the gown is for a young lady or youthful matron the train had better be cut pointed, as this cut is far more stylish just now than the square finish.

Tortoise Shell Combs.

Coiffure fashions are causing women to bring forth old shell combs and pins that have been laid away for years.

While these may be good in line they are apt to be dull and of cloudy appearance.

If very bad they should be sent to a jeweler or manufacturer of shell goods for repolishing.

To brighten at home rub with sweet oil, wipe dry, cover with whiting or a good silver powder and polish with a chamois.

To keep shell in good condition wash it frequently with tepid water, then polish with a little olive oil on a piece of flannel or chamois.

As shell is brittle, it should be carefully handled, especially not subjected to sudden changes of temperature.

When not sure if your shell is real, do not put it too near a flame, as it may be celluloid and explode.

WORKBAG MADE OF RIBBON

Novel and Handy Affair Can Be Made Quickly From Yard of Wide Ribbon.

A novel workbag that has added advantage of being quickly made up is constructed from a yard of wide ribbon, preferably six or eight inches, says the Washington Herald.

The bag is in four compartments, all drawing on the same string. The ribbon is folded in half, then three folds are made at either side until the ribbon is equally divided in space to form four compartments.

Sew the selvages together in pairs to make four divisions, each four and a half inches in depth. Overcast the edges neatly with tiny stitches. This will leave there top folds, which are cut for a depth of two inches from either edge. Hem narrowly and cover with a tiny silk cord if you wish a finish.

Crochet eight small rings of brass or bone with embroidery silk to harmonize with the colors in the bag. Sew a ring to each corner of the four bags and then run a double length of silk cord or narrow ribbon, which pulled from either end, will open and close bags at once.

Do not use too soft a ribbon. The heavy flowered effects with satin edges are pretty and will stand upright when opened, which makes it easier to discover contents.

Renewing a Hat.

You may not know how well a light beaver hat will wash. Put the hat into a large pan of warm water containing soap powder and pat it with the hands, changing the water four or five times, then rinsing in as many. To dry, lay as flat as possible, cover with a cloth and iron. When pressed into shape and partly dry nothing so quickly completes the process as an electric fan, says the Philadelphia North American. Then, to fluff up the nap, beat it 15 minutes with a small switch. This may seem a long process, but the hat will look as good as new.

JUDGED BY THEIR CLOTHES

Smart Cigar Store Clerk Ready With Apology That by No Means Mended Situation.

Herman Fellner tells this story on himself, according to the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times Star. He was in Washington on business recently and met three or four friends on the street. After a moment's chat he beckoned them to come with him. "I'm off the stuff," said he, "but I want to buy you each a cigar."

They happened to be in front of a combination cigar and news stand at the moment. Led by Mr. Fellner, they all trooped in. The clerk hurried to the cigar case to wait upon them. Before Mr. Fellner could indicate his wishes the clerk had slapped a box on the glass case. "Here y' are," said he. "Best dime smoker in town."

Mr. Fellner is sort of fussy about his smokes. He looked at the cigar then shoved the box away. "Have you no other price?" he asked.

The clerk shoved the box in the case. "Sure thing," said he. "My mistake and your treat."

Having pulled off this time-worn witticism, he addressed Mr. Fellner confidentially. "Your clothes sort of fooled me," said he. "You fellers are a pretty well-dressed lot, you know." Then he put another box on the counter. "Here," said he, "is the best nickel smoker in the village."

ECZEMA DISFIGURED BABY

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczema when but a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was disfigured very much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tied little bags of cloth over his hands to prevent him from scratching. He was very restless at night, his little face itched.

"We consulted two doctors at Chicago, where we resided at that time. After trying all the medicine of the two doctors without any result, we read of the Cuticura Remedies, and at once bought Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following the directions carefully and promptly we saw the result, and after four weeks, the dear child's face was as fine and clean as any little baby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He has a head of hair which is a pride for any boy of his age, three years. We can only recommend the Cuticura Remedies to everybody." (Signed) Mrs. H. Albrecht, Box 883, West Point, Neb., Oct. 26, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 14 L, Boston.

Housework Drudgery
Housework is drudgery for the weak woman. She brushes, dusts and scrubs, or is on her feet all day attending to the many details of the household, her back aching, her temples throbbing, nerves quivering under the stress of pain, possibly dizzy feelings. Sometimes rest in bed is not refreshing, because the poor tired nerves do not permit of refreshing sleep. The real need of weak, nervous women is satisfied by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.
It Makes Weak Women Strong and Sick Women Well.
This "Prescription" removes the cause of women's weaknesses, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures those weaknesses so peculiar to women. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces restful sleep.
Dr. Pierce is perfectly willing to let every one know what his "Favorite Prescription" contains, a complete list of ingredients on the bottle-wrapper. Do not let any unscrupulous druggist persuade you that his substitute of unknown composition is "just as good" in order that he may make a bigger profit. Just smile and shake your head!

Red Lake County is fast getting to be known as one of the best dairy counties in the state of Minnesota and the immigration agents and Railroad Companies predict that there in this county this comming year 1911 there will be the greatest movement in land with sales principally to actual settlers from southern Minnesota, Iowa Wisconsin, and Illinois that this country has ever seen and they are certainly in position to know whereof they speak.

NEW BANK BUILDING TO BE ERECTED NEXT SPRING

Henry Enderle, cashier of the First State Bank of Plummer, went down to the Twin cities last Sunday evening, where he went to have the plans and specifications drawn up for the new bank building which will be constructed here next spring and to order new fixtures, to be installed when the building is completed.

The plans will be called for a 24x40 two story brick building and will be furnished with all the modern conveniences fund in an up-to-date building, including a hot water heating plant. The building will be located on the corner of just east of the present bank building' and part of the material for the basement is at present on the ground in readiness for an early start as soon as the frost is out of the ground sufficiently this spring to permit excavating.

The down stairs will be occupied exclusively by the bank, and will be occupied by a fine new line of fixtures and to contain a large safety vault. The up-stairs will be utilized into offices and living rooms. This will be the first brick structure to be erected here and will be one that will provide sufficient room to meet their eeds for years to come and will be a credit to the village of Plummer.

Co-operative Shipping

Another instance of "success from the start," in the co-operative shipping of live stock, is afforded by the recently-organized Shipping Association of Cannon Falls, Minn. This organization pays its manager, or "buyer" ten cents per hundred weight of live stock handled a price which secures the services of a thoroughly competent man. He has already shipped four carloads of hogs, selling them at prices which netted the farmer $5.89 over all expenses. This is 39 cents per 100 pounds more than was being paid by the local buyer at Cannon Falls. Also instead of a deduction being made from expected returns, on account of "shrinkage in transit," the hogs were reported as having actually gained in weight, to the further advantage of the co-operative shipper.

At Cannon Falls, as elsewhere, there are some few among the stock-raisers who refuse to come into the co-operative movement, claiming that the old way is better. But the spectable of their wiser neighbors getting a bigger price for their stock must soon break down their opposition, and bring them into the co-operative ranks.

What is being done at Cannon Falls simply reinforces the object-lessons heretofore furnished by the Shippers Associations at Litchfield, Dassel and elsewhere; which teach that, by simply "getting together" co-operatively stock-raisers can everywhere realize from 5 to 20 per cent more than by the old plan on their cattle, hogs and sheep.

Ed. Moran Marries

The many friends of Ed Moran in the village will be pleased to learn that he was united in marriage last Sunday afternoon to Miss Lillian Mussey, a poplar young lady of Thief River Falls. The marriage ceremony took place at Thief River Falls, the Rev. Boyden, of the Presbyterian church officiating. The happy couple passed thru here Monday morning for Bemidji to make their home, and where Mr. Moran holds a lucerative position on the Bemidji Pioneer force and a member of various musical organizations. The Pioneer, with the many friends of the contracting parties, extend congratulations and wishes of happiness and prosperity on their journey together thru life.

Miss Ella Anderson who has been empolyed as saleslady in Gilbert Halverson's store here resigned last week and is at present enjoying a few days visit with relatives in the country. She will leave shortly for her home at Buel, this state.

Chas. G. Sall was a Plummer business visitor last Tuesday.

Mrs. E. Jackobson

Passed Away At Her Home Thursday Afternoon at One O'clock

At one o'clock Thursday afternoon occured the death of Mrs. Edwin Jacobson, at her home about five miles south east of town. Death came as an aftermath of an operation performed on her for appendicitis at McIntosh about five weeks ago, from which she seemingly was improving, until complications set in a few days ago from which she failed to recover.

She leaves besides her husband and one child; two brothers and two sisters to mourn her untimley death. The funeral will take place the first of next week and the remains will be laid to rest in the local cemetery.

Wins First Honors

Minnesota won the handsome silver trophy cup offered by the St. Paul Association of Commerce for the most comprehensive state exhibit at the Land Products show at St. Paul. The announcement was made by the mangement after the Judges, Thomas Shaw of St. Paul and C. L. Andrews of Fairbanks, Alaska, had spent several days making compartions.

Montana won the sweepstakes trophy cup for the largest and best exhibit of products from any one state.

The committee which collected the Minnesota exhibit left nothing out. It contained everything from fish to canned corn, from apples to iron ore and sugar beets to butter. It outdistanced any other exhibit when it came to comprehensive character.

In Serious Condition

In a letter from Miss Amanda Medchill yesterday from Winthrop, this state, to her parents here. she states that the condition of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Gudrun Medchill, is considered as very serious and that she was taken to a hospital at St. Paul this week where an operation was found necessary, which will be followed by a second one as soon as her condition will premit. Miss Manda is expected here the first of next week, with the two young daughters of Mrs. Medchill, who will remain at the Medchill home here.

Mrs. Medchill is well known here and has at several times visited with relatives and friends here, who will be deeply grieved to hear of her present condition.

To Go To Los Angles

A letter just received from Alex. F. Lattimore, who recently went to the Isle of Pines, West Indies, for his health, informs us that the climate does not agree with him and that accommodations for invalids are poor and expenses very high. So far his health has not improved and he has decided to leave for Los Angels, Cal., as soon as able which will be quite a serious undertaking for a person in his condition. We all hope he will get through safely and that the change will be beneficial to his health.—Erie Eleven Towns.

Miss Florence Bergh, who is teaching school in the town of Garnes, was in town last Monday morning, but was forced to return to her home at Thief River Falls by reason of sickness. The school where she teaches will be closed for a couple of weeks during the cold spell, and to allow the teacher a rest from from her duties and to recuperate from her illness.

Leap Year Dance

Young Ladies Willl Entertain Gentelmen Friends at Dance Tonight

The young men of Plummer will be guests at a Leap year dance tonight at the city hall given by the fair young damsels of our village. It is understood that the fairer sex will take all responsibility at this affair and show their friends that they can assume all the liberties that Leap Year affords them. From flourishing their pocket books to "seeing" their beaus home is part of the promises made for to-night, and unless you have treated your best girl with all the pomp, dignity and devotion, desirving of her you may be disappointed in expecting a bid from her for tonights affair. At midnight supper will be served at Hotel Plummer. Come girls and bring your beaus.

The Farmers Club.

At the farmer's institute held here some time ago a plan was proposed to form a farmer's club, which we think is a good one, but up to the present time nothing definite has been done along these lines. The idea of forming these clubs have since it was touched upon but a comparatively short time ago and put into practice met with great success.

It is from small beginnings in the co-operative line, as in other things, that the largest and most successful organizations have most frequently grown. A good way to begin and with something the results of which are almost immediate is for a few neighboring farmers to unite in a Farmers Club. Let them join in a concentrated effort to boost and help build up their community, and it will not be long before they will be thoroughly impressed with the advantages which accrue from "pulling together." Not only this, but the lessons learned in methods will prove valuable in futher co-operative endeavors. The frequent getting together which its formation will induce, with the lively comparisons sure to take place, of ideas and experiences, cannot fail to broaden and sharpen the intellects of all concerned. "As iron sharpeneth iron," so the contact of mind with mind works for the brightening and bettering of social as well as economic relations, especially when the motive which draws men together is of the beneficent order which underlies every proposal of co-operation.

A Hero In A Lighthouse.

For years J. S. Donahue, So. Haven, Mich., a civil war captain, as a lighthouse keeper, averted awful wrecks, but a queer fact is, he might have been a wreck, himself, if Electric Bitters had not prevented." They cured me of kidney trouble and chills," he writes, "after I had taken other so called cures for years, without benefit and they also improved my sight. Now at seventy, I am feeling fine." NEW BANK BUILDING TO BE ERECTED NEXT SPRING

Henry Enderle, cashier of the First State Bank of Plummer, went down to the Twin cities last Sunday evening, where he went to have the plans and specifications drawn up for the new bank building which will be constructed here next spring and to order new fixtures, to be installed when the building is completed.

The plans will be called for a 24x40 two story brick building and will be furnished with all the modern conveniences fund in an up-to-date building, including a hot water heating plant. The building will be located on the corner of just east of the present bank building' and part of the material for the basement is at present on the ground in readiness for an early start as soon as the frost is out of the ground sufficiently this spring to permit excavating.

The down stairs will be occupied exclusively by the bank, and will be occupied by a fine new line of fixtures and to contain a large safety vault. The up-stairs will be utilized into offices and living rooms. This will be the first brick structure to be erected here and will be one that will provide sufficient room to meet their eeds for years to come and will be a credit to the village of Plummer.

Co-operative Shipping

Another instance of "success from the start," in the co-operative shipping of live stook, is afforded by the recently-organized Shipping Association of Cannon Falls, Minn. This organization pays its manager, or "buyer" ten cents per hundred weight of live stock handled a price which secures the services of a thoroughly competent man. He has already shipped four carloads of hogs, selling them at prices which netted the farmer $5.89 over all expenses. This is 39 cents per 100 pounds more than was being paid by the local buyer at Cannon Falls. Also instead of a deduction being made from expected returns, on account of "shrinkage in transit," the hogs were reported as having actually gained in weight, to the further advantage of the co-operative shipper.

At Cannon Falls, as elsewhere, there are some few among the stock-raisers who refuse to come into the co-operative movement, claiming that the old way is better. But the spectable of their wiser neighbors getting a bigger price for their stock must soon break down their oppsition, and bring them into the co-operative ranks.

What is being done at Cannon Falls simply reinforces the object-lessons heretofore furnished by the Shippers Associations at Litchfield, Dassel and elsewhere; which teach that, by simply "getting together" co-operatively stock-raisers can everywhere realize from 5 to 20 per cent more than by the old plan on their cattle, hogs and sheep.

Ed. Moran Marries

The many friends of Ed Moran in the village will be pleased to learn that he was united in marriage last Sunday afternoon to Miss Lillian Mussey, a poplar young lady of Thief River Falls. The marriage ceremony took place at Thief River Falls, the Rev. Boyden, of the Presbyterian church officiating. The happy couple passed thru here Monday morning for Bemidji to make their home, and where Mr. Moran holds a lucerative position on the Bemidji Pioneer force and a member of various musical organizations. The Pioneer, with the many friends of the contracting parties, extend congratulations and wishes of happiness and prosperity on thesr journey together thru life.

Mrs. E. Jackobson

Passed Away At Her Home Thursday Afternoon at One O'clock

At one o'clock Thursday afternoon occured the death of Mrs. Edwin Jacobson, at her home about five miles south east of town. Death came as an aftermath of an operation performed on her for appendicitis at McIntosh about five weeks ago, from which she seemingly was improving, until complications set in a few days ago from which she failed to recover.

She leaves besides her husband and one child; two brothers and two sisters to mourn her untimley death. The funeral will take place the first of next week and the remains will be laid to rest in the local cemetery.

Wins First Honors

Minnesota won the handsome silver trophy cup offered by the St. Paul Association of Commerce for the most comprehensive state exhibit at the Land Products show at St. Paul. The announcement was made by the mangement after the Judges, Thomas Shaw of St. Paul and C. L. Andrews of Fairbanks, Alaska, had spent several days making compartions.

Montana won the sweepstakes trophy cup for the largest and best exhibit of products from any one state.

The committee which collected the Minnesota exhibit left nothing out. It contained everything from fish to canned corn, from apples to iron ore and sugar beets to butter. It outdistanced any other exhibit when it came to comprehensive character.

In Serious Condition

In a letter from Miss Amanda Medchill yesterday from Winthrop, this state, to her parents here. she states that the condition of hersister-in-law, Mrs. Gudrun Medchill, is considered as very serious and that she was taken to a hospital at St. Paul this week where an operation was found necessary, which will be followed by a second one as soon as her condition will premit. Miss Manda is expected here the first of next week, with the two young daughters of Mrs. Medchill, who will remain at the Medchill home here.

Mrs. Medchill is well known here and has at several times visited with relatives and friends here, who will be deeply grieved to hear of her present condition.

To Go To Los Angles

A letter just received from Alex. F. Lattimore, who recently went to the Isle of Pines, West Indies, for his health, informs us that the climate does not agree with him and that accommodations for invalids are poor and expenses very high. So far his health has not improved and he has decided to leave for Los Angels, Cal., as soon as able which will be quite a serious undertaking for a person in his condition. We all hope he will get through safely and that the change will be beneficial to his health.--Erie Eleven Towns.

Miss Florence Bergh, who is teaching school in the town of Garnes, was in town last Monday morning, but was forced to return to her home at Thief River Falls by reason of sickness. The school where she teaches will be closed for a couple of weeks during the cold spell, and to allow the teacher a rest from from her duties and to recuperate from her illness.

At midnight supper will be served at Hotel Plummer. Come girls and bring your beaus.

The Farmers Club.

At the farmer's institute held here some time ago a plan was proposed to form a farmer's club, which we think is a good one, but up to the present time nothing definite has been done along these lines. The idea of forming these clubs have since it was touched upon but a comparatively short time ago and put into practice met with great success.

It is from small beginnings in the co-operative line, as in other things, that the largest and most successful organizations have most frequently grown. A good way to begin and with something the results of which are almost immediate is for a few neighboring farmers to unite in a Farmers Club. Let them join in a concentrated effort to boost and help build up their community, and it will not be long before they will be thoroughly impressed with the advantages which accrue from "pulling together." Not only this, but the lessons learned in methods will prove valuable in futher co-operative endeavors. The frequent getting together which its formation will induce, with the lively comparisons sure to take place, of ideas and experiences, cannot fail to broaden and sharpen the intellects of all concerned. "As iron sharpeneth iron," so the contact of mind with mind works for the brightening and bettering of social as well as economic relations, especially when the motive which draws men together is of the beneficent order which underlies every proposal of co-operation.

OLD BLUE DOG'S MEDICINE

BY EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT BY W. A. PATTERSON

"KIOWA MEDICINE MAN MAKE DEAD ALIVE"

FORT MYER is in Virginia on a bluff overlooking the Potomac river and the Capital City of the country. The fort always is garrisoned by some picked troopers of Uncle Sam's army. Gen. Leonard Wood, the ranking officer of the service on the active list and chief of the general staff, lives at Fort Myer. Other officers of high rank have quarters there, and many an old plainsman trooper who in the old days fought the Indians, and who later fought the Filipinos, finds in the Virginia post an ideal garrison in which to round out his service.

The old soldiers at Fort Myer are as great story tellers as are the old sailors of wooden ship days who meet together occasionally at Annapolis. Stories of army life are not told alone in the enlisted men's barracks. In the officers' clubs one occasionally gets a story of the frontier days. Neither officers nor enlisted men are given to talking of their own experience, but if a tale of courage or of hardship well endured concerns another, the soldier is not slow to speak. Here is a story as told by an old officer of regulars, who is just about to leave the active service for the camp of the retired list. He called his story "Old Blue Dog's Medicine" and it ran like this:

"Ralph Burnham, government contractor doctor, joined the cantonment on the Platte river the first of July. Burnham was an ambitious young fellow, who knew his profession and he thought it was a good experience for him to go out where the Kiowas and Comanches were kicking up a row, there to do a little surgery for the soldiers.

JIM'S BODY WAS WRAPPED IN AN OLD GARRISON FLAG

"A contract doctor's pay was $1,500 a year, and Burnham concluded that he and a certain young woman down east could live comfortably enough on that amount until he chose to quit Uncle Sam's service and pick up a practice worth $15,000 a year or thereabouts. Burnham was sanguine.

"The new doctor recruit reached the cantonment about 9 o'clock in the morning. Outside the troops' quarters was a big Kiowa encampment. Burnham had never seen an Indian before, barring a few broken-spirited Oneidas on a New York reservation. He hadn't been in camp an hour before an Indian sneaked in and asked for the surgeon. It happened that the regular army surgeon had gone shooting for the morning, and the Kiowa buck was turned over to Burnham. He had 'sneaked' into the camp, because he did not want his fellow braves to know that he was a messenger after the doctor. The Kiowas believed implicitly in their own 'medicine man,' and especially in one, an ugly-faced old chap named Blue Dog.

"Burnham was told half in signs and half in words that a Kiowa buck was sick. He went along with the Indian until they reached the edge of the reds' camp. There the Kiowa pointed out a tepee as the place where the sick man lay, and then disappeared. Burnham went to the lodge and entered. He was met with growls and a frightful odor. On the ground lay a Kiowa warrior unconscious, and round him was dancing and chanting the most hideous-looking creature that Burnham had ever looked on.

"The dancer was old Blue Dog. In addition to the dancing he was burning some sort of Indian incense, which was worse than asafetida. He was trying to drive the devil of sickness out of the prostrate warrior.

"Burnham saw in an instant that the buck on the ground was suffering from epilepsy. He swung his medicine case round and began to take out some vials. Old Blue Dog gave a yell, and three bucks entered and told the doctor in pretty tough English that he couldn't try his medicine till Blue Dog got through. Blue Dog got through in ten minutes. The dancing had exhausted him, and his unconscious patient had not as much as trembled an eyelid.

"Then Burnham went at him. He had the buck on his feet inside of five minutes, and with the stimulation of the brandy that the doctor had given liberally the Kiowa acted as though he had never seen a sick day in his life.

"Blue Dog looked amazed, but he told his fellows that it was his own medicine that had brought the buck around, but that it was a little slow in acting, that was all.

"Three weeks after this Burnham was routed out of bed one night by a pounding on the window frame of his long shack. He rose and found old Blug Dog without. Blue Dog had a pretty fair smattering of English.

"'Little one sick,' he said. 'Come, same tepee.'

"Burnham followed the old medicine man, who disappeared just as the other Kiowa had done before reaching the lodge. The doctor found a child of Blue Dog suffering from a fever, tossing and moaning in delirium. Blue Dog came in. 'People mustn't know,' he said, 'or they'd kill me.'

"Burnham tended the child surreptitiously for a week. She recovered, and the next day Burnham found at his door as handsome a blanket as ever a Navajo made. Blue Dog gave the blanket.

"That was the summer that the Kiowas and the Comanches went out and raided western Kansas, and Nebraska. It was one of the worst years for the settlers and the troops known to Indian warfare. Things had been quiet about the cantonment on the Platte till late in August. The garrison was ignorant that the Indians were thinking of mischief. Burnham had received word from the east that the young woman who was to be Mrs. Burnham, Helen Truxton by name, was, in response to his earnest letters, to come to the cantonment on the Platte and let the chaplain have something to do in the marrying line. Helen Truxton was an orphan and school teacher. At her lover's solicitation she left civilization behind and started for the Platte. The stage in which she was to make the last part of the journey never reached the cantonment.

"The Kiowas jumped from their Platte encampment the night before and went on the warpath. Old Blue Dog went with them, somewhat to the amazement of the soldiers. He had always been fairly friendly to the whites. Well, there were fights and skirmishes, and finally the Kiowas were pretty thoroughly smashed. The stage in which Helen Truxton had been a passenger to the Platte was found. The driver and four men passengers were dead and scalped. There was no trace of the girl.

"Those who know something of Indian warfare and savage methods can imagine the feeling that was in Ralph Burnham's heart. Four weeks had gone by and all hope of rescuing Miss Truxton alive had been given over. One morning, Blue Dog, with his wives and children, showed up on the site of the old Kiowa encampment. There he pitched his tepee. The old fellow told the commanding officer that he had been forced to go out and that he had come back to his friends, the whites, as soon as he could. The colonel knew something of Blue Dog and believed him.

"At noon that same day the old medicine man went to Burnham's quarters. 'Your medicine is strong,' he said. 'I show you mine is stronger. You raise up Kiowa brave who was dead. You cure sick papoose, but I have stronger medicine than that. You come see.'

"Burnham went along with the old fellow, not realizing what he was driving at. He reached the tepee, which was a big double affair, with the skins falling like a curtain and dividing it into two parts. Blue Dog squatted on the ground and began burning incense and chanting. Then he drew circles and danced in them. Finally he let out a terrific shriek, and, raising his arm, he said to Burnham: 'Kiowa medicine man make dead alive.'

"Blue Dog jumped backward, and in an instant the curtain of skins fell, and Burnham, with a staggered mind and blurring eyes, knew that Helen Truxton was in the tepee beyond surrounded by the wives of Blue Dog.

"Safe and unharmed she was, and saved by Blue Dog.

"Blue Dog turned to Burnham. There was a curious expression in his eye. It was as much like a twinkle as could find a place in the eye of an Indian. 'My medicine,' he said, 'raise dead, but it do more wonder than that, for palefaces and some Indians say no cure for this, but I find it,' and the chief drew in the dirt a heart broken through its center."

A sergeant with the sleeve of his blouse well covered with enlistment stripes told the other day this tale of the service:

'What's that you say?" said Sergeant Toole, as he sat down at the barracks table around which were seated a dozen comrades. "You say there never was any good in a deserter? Well, you've missed it by just one, and have made a 'four' instead of a bull's-eye. Didn't you ever hear tell of Jim Benson of I Troop of the Twelfth? Jim was a deserter, so Washington people said, but Jim loved the flag.

"What made him desert? Well, what should make an old soldier desert but a woman?

"Jim was in the service twenty-five years before he struck his flag to a petticoat. Like all those fellows, when he got his he was hit so bad that none of your surgeons who are up in matters of sentiment could probe and get out the bullet, or perhaps I'd better say arrow, for that's the kind of ammunition the little chap who shot Jim uses. You see Jim was nigh onto fifty when he got his sights fixed and held on to this pretty creature with blonde hair, blue eyes and pink cheeks. It's always the way with the old fellows when they get stuck on something young. It goes hard with them. You see the girl has heard how it was that Jim had always been steady, had never seen the inside of 'the mill' except as a member of the guard, and, moreover, how he had $4,000 drawing 4 per cent with the paymaster and was sure of going out as a first sergeant in five years with forty plunks a month.

"Jim always went into a fight to win, and he got onto the track of that girl and hung to it just as he did to the Kid's trail down in the Apache country when I Troop was chasing that red devil through the Arizona hell. The girl led Jim on for a while coquettish like, just to make sure of him, I guess. I don't suppose she ever cared a rap for him.

"Well, finally we all thought that Jim had corraled her all right. It was given out that the Twelfth's chaplain was going to have a job tying the two up. None of the boys congratulated Jim too hearty, because most of them had sized the affair up right, and wouldn't have it that the girl was good enough for Jim Benson. She might be all right for a rookie, but not for an old one who had seen more campaigns than the girl had years. I ought to have told you before that this particular petticoat was visiting at the post. She came from down Iowa way somewhere.

"One night she gave it out that she was going home, and that Jim must go down there for the splicing. She cleared out, and in a few days after the old fellow gets a furlough and clears out, too, following the trail, as we heard after, way down to Iowa. Now, you must just get hold of this fact. Jim was kind of a pious chap, but he loved the flag better than any Bible that was ever printed, but for a short time that girl was above the flag. Jim was just crazy for her. The story is that she wouldn't come back and wouldn't marry him unless he quit the army then and there. Jim tried to quit through the regular red tape channels, but they wouldn't have it down in Washington.

"Jim Benson, veteran, medal of honor man, fighter in a hundred fights, lover of his flag and country, and as good a soldier as ever wore quartermaster's shoes, deserted, and deserted for a petticoat. I forgot to say that Jim got his wad of money from the paymaster before his leave was up.

"There was another desertion inside of a month after Jim quit the colors. This time a woman did the deserting, though a fellow helped her to do it, and along with the woman and the fellow went Jim's money.

"Jim's heart was clean broke. He got in communication with his old captain somehow, and he tried to work the thing through the department for Jim, but there'd been a heap of desertions about that time, and despite Jim's medal and his twenty-five years with nary a 'blind' nor a day in the 'mill' against him, the honorable the secretary of war said that if Jim was caught he must take his medicine.

'It was rumored around old Fort Johnson that Jim had been seen on the edge of the woods looking at the old place and seeming kind of wild like. One night one of the old quartermaster shacks got on fire. It was just before target practice season and the building had a dozen big boxes of ammunition in it. There was a pretty stiff wind blowing and it looked as if the barracks and a lot of other things would go. If that stuff had exploded the other buildings would have gone sure. The fire was fairly eating around those boxes and the fellows fought shy of it.

"All at once, while the crowd was bearing back, somebody jumped clean through the line and plump into the fire. He grabbed a box and threw it out clear of the blaze, and then another and another, though the flames were burning his clothes and going up wreathlike about his head.

"When he had done the business clean and good, the man jumped out of the flames and ran to the woods. Well I guess you know who it was. It was Jim Benson. We found him dead the next day in the thicket, but the curious part of the matetr was that Jim's body was wrapped in an old garrison flag that had been pinned about him by the last effort of those poor burned hands. Jim thought, you see, that deserter though he was, if he did this that they might bury him with the flag.

"Did they do it? Yes, and gave him the regulation three rounds over the grave and the best prayer that the old chaplain knew how to pray."

TORY HEAD RETIRES

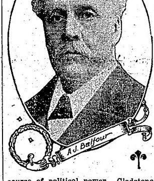
Balfour No Longer a Leader in British Parliament.

Importance of His Position as National and Parliamentary Guide—Held the Post of Premier for a Decade.

London.—It is difficult for an American to understand and appreciate the immense sensation produced in England by the retirement of A. J. Balfour from the leadership of the opposition party in the house of commons, and in the whole country. The office of opposition party leader carries with it a recognition of authority that has no exact counterpart in the United States. Mr. Balfour, in addition to having been the chosen floor leader, combined with that responsible position one of greater responsibbility—leadership of his party as a whole, both outside as well as in Parliament, a stewardship that came to him through having held the office of prime minister. He had been the titular head of his party for 20 years, in office and out of office.

Additional prestige was conferred upon Mr. Balfour's position as party and floor leader by the unquestioned certainty that should his political following regain ascendancy, he would be the most powerful personage in the British empire, possessing in that domain a combination of the authority possessed in the United States by the president, the cabinet, the speaker of the house of representatives, the majority leader on the floor and in lesser degree the functions of the vice-president as presiding officer of the senate.

This great power, augmented recently by the right given the commons to nullify the veto privilege of the lords, would not depend on the sanction of any national convention—it would come to Mr. Balfour as his unquestioned right solely by virtue of his office as leader of the opposition, just as he held the latter position because of his previous service as chief executive. No question of a "third term" ever arises in England to complicate the course of political power. Gladstone was premier five times; Lord Salisbury held that high office three times; Balfour was majority leader in the house of commons for ten consecutive years—a longer period of continuous leadership of the house than that of any minister since William Pitt.



The exercise of such great political power continuously throughout the better part of a lifetime, requires a strong intellect and great knowledge of men and affairs. Mr. Balfour was undoubtedly brilliant, and started with the inestimable advantage of a thorouugh apprenticeship in foreign affairs under his famous uncle, Lord Salisbury.

Mr. Balfour is politically the last of the great Cecils, that wonderful family which has always taken a prominent place in the forefront of English political life from the time of Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth's great minister, consistently and continuously until the present day. They belonged to the self-constituted and practically unquestioned ruling caste of the nation. Their energies were not expended for the gratification of material desires—they threw themselves willingly and whole-heartedly into the service of their country, partly because of their love of power, but mainly from a high-minded sense of duty as they saw it. But their sway is over—benevolent as it may have been in many ways. Radicalism and democracy have invaded the sanctum sanctorum of their dominance—the house of lords is no longer the invulnerable stronghold of their class. The leadership of the Unionist party in the commons has been given to a Scotch manufacturer, born in Canada, Bonar Law.

Use a Skull for Football.

Cleveland, O.—Small boys played football with the crumbling skull from a human skeleton found under the sand in a lot on St. Clair avenue, while rumor spread through the neighborhood that the find had disclosed a long-hidden murder. Judge Thomas K. Dissette, living across the street, stilled the rumor by explaining that 65 years ago the lot was a township burying ground.

Birds Attack a Man.

Bloomfield, N. J.—Frank Bock was attacked by a flock of blackbirds in a vacant lot at Broad street and Bloomfield avenue. He sustained painful injuries of the neck, face and hands.

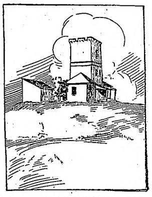
IT OVERLOOKS PUGET SOUND

Hermit Castle a Unique Building Erected Many Years Ago by an Eccentric Englishman.

Port Townsend, Wash.—On the summit of a high hill back of Port Townsend, the state's port of entry, and overlooking the town, stands a unique building, much resembling a castle. In the early days, when there were no neighboring residences, the structure often underwent searching scrutiny by eyes aboard ship peering through binoculars or field glass, as it does to this day, when some shap-visioned tourist picks it out as something distinct from the ordinary type of building.

The "castle," as the structure is called by the people of the town, was built many years ago, in boom times, by an eccentric Englishman, who through his habits and eccentricities was known as a hermit.

There are, perhaps, few building locations in the United States affording views as grand as the one where this freak in architecture stands. It stands nearly 300 feet above sea level, immediately overlooking a beautiful little bay with numerous inlets, and beyond great stretches of America's fir-fringed and greatest inland waterway, Puget sound. In the distance are the green foothills, and beyond the majestic Olympic range, snow-capped the year 'round, and behind which old Sol sinks from sight amid a wealth of color month in and out.



The Hermit Castle.

After the old Englishman's death, "the castle" passed to the United States, acquired by purchase of land for use as a military reservation. The building is of brick, and is substantially built and well finished within.

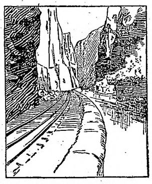
BIG ROCKY MOUNTAIN GORGE

Grand Canyon of the Arkansas River One of the Most Spectacular in the West.

Denver, Colo.—The Grand Canyon of the Arkansas is one of the most spectacular gorges in the Rocky mountains. It is ten miles long and the railroad—the Denver and Rio Grande—by a marvel of engineering skill has made it a thoroughfare to the west.

The narrowest part of the canyon is known as the Royal Gorge. The red granite and gneiss walls, sparkling with mica, tower aloft on either hand 2,627 feet; the sky is a thread, almost obliterated by the jagged ramparts, and the stars may be seen at midday.

At one point, the hanging bridge, the width is but ten yards, and the roadbed has been built out over the water. The river boils madly through; the engine sways now to the right, now to the left, dragging the train; the vista ahead, momentarily blocked, opens again; a way is always found.



Grand Canyon of the Arkansas.

And ever there is the ruddy granite, in walls and in huge broken masses, and the green stream foaming against its boulders, and glimpses of side canyons wooded and mysterious.

Bands of mountain sheep are seen almost daily on the high cliffs as the trains climb the backbone of the continent.

Lights on Baby Carts.

St. Paul.—Baby carriages in Minnesota must hereafter carry warning lights when used after dark—two white lights in front and a red one at the rear. It's all due to a mistake, a kind o' "joker" that somehow got in the new law just passed by the legislature, but it "goes," according to an opinion rendered by Attorney General Simpson.

Children's velocipedes, wheelbarrows and kiddies' express wagons are also included in the provisions of the law, which really was intended only to help automobilists and motorcyclists, by compelling horse-drawn vehicles to carry lights. But the language was clumsily put: "the other users of wheeled vehicles."

The AWAKING of the OLDER NATIONS

Greece Trembles Under War Clouds—Dread of Turkish Invasion the Supreme Sentiment Among Hellenes—Help From American Greeks.

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Athens.—"If war does not come within six weeks, it probably will not come for six months, because of the difficulty of moving troops in winter. I expect it to come by the unannounced invasion of Thessaly by Turkish troops."

That is the essence of a report that may be found in the secret archives of at least two governments. Moreover, I have it upon the highest authority that a recent dossier contains not only the foregoing alarming statement, but also the substance of the terms which Turkey will exact—namely a huge indemnity, the cession of a large part of Thessaly, and the disarmament and neutralization of Greece by the powers. At the same time, Crete will be given up by Turkey, for the turbulent island is only an apple of discord, of which the Ottoman empire will be glad to be rid, when it can do so gracefully.

As to the outcome of this inevitable war, the opinion of one diplomat with whom I talked is that "Turkish troops will be in Athens in just the time that it takes them to march from the frontier."

A Typical Greek Soldier.

Greece in a Blue Funk.

Greece is scared cold. It was a surprise to me, I confess, to find everybody here so sure that the conflict is not only certain, but also that it is near. In Constantinople I discovered no signs of an immediate purpose to have it out with Greece. My judgment was, and is, that the Young Turks have trouble enough at home for the present. Their own house needs to be set in order; and I cannot agree with the careful observers over here who think that the best cure of Turkey's internal ills would be a short and easy war. Greeks listened with incredulous hope when I told them why I thought hostilities remote. Even the new hero of the nation, Venizellos, late prime minister of Crete, to whom all Greece looks as a deliverer, fervently told me that he hopes my optimism is warranted, so that Greece may have more time to make ready.

A nation scared is not a pretty sight. The thrill which a traveler feels as for the first time he looks upon the Acropolis, and the other magnificent ruins of Greece's ancient glory; or as he stands on the top of the Parthenon and looks off in one direction to Marathon, and in another to Salamis, must give way to quite different sentiments as he observes the present-day population of the city suffering from a bad case of "nerves," aware of its own inability to fight, and momentarily expectant of news of a Turkish invasion.

The two hopes which the people cherish, and repeat to one another reassuringly, are that the powers will prevent a war; and that an alliance is now assured with the once-hated neighbor, Bulgaria, which is a fighting force not to be despised. The men in high place, who are informed upon what goes on behind the scenes in Near Eastern politics, also say—and they doubtless are right in this—that Russia has officered and drilled the troops of Bulgaria, Servia and Montenegro, in the latter case even supplying the equipment for the 50,000 troops immediately available. When the moment comes for action, and it cannot long be delayed, for this splendidly fit body of men is spoiling for a fight, Russia will throw this force against the Moslem, and in support of Christian Greece.

This will be not because she loves Greece more, but because she loves Turkey less, and Turkey's new ally and controlling genius, Germany. The new alignment of forces created by the Roumanian-Turco agreement, with the "understanding" that is now believed to exist between Germany, Austria and Turkey, has changed the situation in the Balkans. At present it stands as I have portrayed it. Great Britain, once the first factor to be considered, has sunken in influence until she is scarcely reckoned with. The panicky state of mind of the past year in Great Britain has produced a situation in these parts which neither Britishers nor Americans view with satisfaction.

Greece Is Europe—Turkey Is Asia.

One who is studying the awaking of the older nations finds a striking illustration of his main thesis in Greece. Of all living nations except China and Japan, Greece is the oldest. It once was the greatest. Civilization owes more to Greece than to any other country. This point is familiar to every schoolboy. Monuments of her departed splendor are all about: they constitute a large proportion of the world's precious art treasures. But Greece herself had become a mere memory; her glory had departed, and she had come to be spoken of in the past tense.

Within the lifetime of old men in Athens a new Greece has been born. Athens itself has grown in less than a century from nothing to a modern, well-kept, beautiful city of 200,000 inhabitants. The contrast between it and Constantinople is the contrast between Europe and Asia. Here is order, cleanliness, up-to-dateness; there is helter-skelter clutteration, dirt and archaism. The European dress, the familiar urban customs, and the general sense of at-homeness, put the sympathies of the traveler from Asia at once with the Greeks.

America's Influence Upon Greece.

The new life of the west has permeated this old nation. There is a constant interflow of thought between Greece and Britain and America. Three million dollars are sent here annually by Greeks in the United States. Last year, from only one American consular district in this country, the number of emigrants to the United States amounted to one per cent. of the entire population of all of Greece.

Of course, this is a serious drain upon the vital power of the nation. But the Greeks abroad send and bring back modern ideas. The labor union is flourishing. I saw it work on a Russian steamer in the harbor. The Russian officer in charge of the loading of the cargo flew into a passion at one of the hands, because the latter could not understand Russian. He ordered the interpreter to discharge him, whereupon all the stevedores left the ship within five minutes. The poverty of the country is being ameliorated, and compulsory education is general everywhere, although far too large a proportion of the curricula is devoted to Ancient Greece.

This influence of the Greece of twenty-five centuries ago is at once a pernicious and a noble force in the life of the nation. Everybody is posted upon who was who in the cycles B. C. Antiquities are guarded most carefully. The beautiful Acropolis overshadows the life of the nation. Models of the great statues are found in most buildings. I saw a modern sized house which had three great Greek figures on top of the front wall. It is the dream of even the bootblacks, who swarm the streets in such numbers, that the old days will come again.

Unfortunately, this passionate loyalty to the old heroes and the old ideals is not accompanied by a loyalty to the present rulers and leader. The hold of the royal house upon the nation is very tenuous indeed. No political leader can command a national following for any considerable length of time.

The present-day Greek has no capacity for self-subordination and discipline. Even the army and navy, as the bloodless "revolution" of a year ago showed, is completely demoralized. With all his devotion to patriotic ideals, the Greek has not learned how to keep quiet and do what he is told in support of his leaders and country. He lacks capacity for cohesion, co-operation and efficiency. The Turkish soldier is a stupid fellow, by no means the equal of his Greek enemy, yet he knows how to obey his officers and fight like a demon. Perhaps, as some say, here, Greece has too many university students out of jobs; she is overtrained sentimentally and intellectually. I listened in the house of deputies one day while the members wrangled and quarreled like monkeys on the eligibility of a notary public to parliament; all the while the national feeling is that the Turks are at the gate. The need for a Demosthenes is plain. For all signs are wrong, and all prophets misled, if Greece is not now at the crisis of her modern history.

Greeks Abroad Drill for Fight.

There are more Greeks outside of Greece than within the country. Turkey has more than Greece. The persistence of the Greek national spirit is almost as marked as that which makes the Jews in all lands a peculiar people. No measures that Turkey has ever been able to take have been effective in transforming her Grecian subjects into true Ottomans. The fundamental reason for this is religious.

Now, in her time of danger, Greece looks to the dispersion for succor. I learned here, confirming my information from the proper American official sources, that the Greeks in the United States are diligently drilling for the great issue. In Boston, Lowell, Manchester, N. H., Chicago and many other centers of Greek immigration, the men have formed military companies, and in some cases even have uniforms and arms. They are making ready for the call which every Greek in the world is confident will shortly sound, in response to which there will be a swift and simultaneous migration of Hellenes from Turkey, Egypt, Macedonia, England and North America, to the scene of what they fondly hope will be a new Homeric struggle.

A level-headed official remarked that it would be more to the point if the rich Greeks who are equipping military companies would instal experiment stations in dry-farming; to help Greece develop her resources. The national spirit is talking about what will happen when Greece gets back her lost territory; whereas the more sensible course would be to make the most of what she now has. It is very fine for men and women to parade in the old national costume, and to dress their children in it, and to sit about the cafes talking patriotism and singing national songs; but the present need of the nation is for greater individual efficiency, subordination and loyalty.

The tragic phase of the present crisis in Greece is that the whole nation is awake to the possible impending fate. A peculiarly sensitive people, of most ardent and patriotic temperament, they are yet so hampered by conditions, including their own mercurial and impractical temperament, that they must face the encroachments of the hated Turk with flowing speeches rather than with well-drilled rifles.

The Fixed Size of Bricks.

If bricks were made larger, it would save a great deal of time and labor in building, said a contractor, but the standard has been set, and any change would be attended by considerable inconvenience. In England when bricks were first made and up to sixty or seventy years ago, there was a tax on bricks, and, in order to evade it, the bricks were made of larger and larger sizes. These were used for cellars and other concealed places. To stop this fraud, an act was passed in the reign of George III., fixing the legal size of bricks. Early in Queen Victoria's reign the tax was taken off, and bricks may now be legally made of any size whatever. But any change from the standard size would bring about great inconvenience. All calculations are made for building on this standard size, and the London and other building acts have practically fixed it.

How Hindus Obtain Fire.

Fire is obtained for the important Hindu ceremony Yanga by a curious method, says a writer in the Strand Magazine, matches not being considered holy. The priest holding the two ends of a piece of cord coiled around a vertical rod, the lower end of which fits into a groove cut in the block of wood on which the rod rests, by a churning motion causes it to rotate very rapidly, it being meanwhile kept in position by means of a horizontal handle with a hole in which the rod turns. The friction between the rod and the lower block of wood after a short time sets fire to the latter. This fire, by timely nourishment, is developed into a glorious flame. The instrument is considered very sacred by the orthodox Hindus. They, of course, kept grumbling all the while.

TO COOK VEGETABLES

SUGGESTIONS THAT MAY BE HELPFUL TO HOUSEWIFE.

Properly Cooked and Dished Up Vegetables Should Take More Prominent Place on Table—Few Do the Work Right.

One of the greatest drawbacks to the success of vegetarianism is that so few people know how to cook vegetables. Sodden boiling is not in any sense of the word right cooking even if the vegetables are half-strained afterwards and sent to table with streaks of well-watered butter through them, masquerading as sauce. When vegetables are boiled the water should be saved for stock, for it has nourishing qualities that have been given out in the process of cooking; to prevent this cooking by steam is the best method that can be recommended. Properly cooked and dished up vegetables might be promoted to a much more important position at our tables; on occasion they might very well take the place of meat even among those who do not profess vegetarian principles.

When steaming is resorted to, the steam should be brought directly into contact with the green food that is being cooked, if possible. A home-made steamer may, of course, be contrived, and a milk can may be made to serve this purpose if a muslin cloth is tied across the top. Carrots, peas, sprouts, cauliflower or spinach may be set in this inner can and steamed while potatoes are boiling in the water outside. Place a little butter in the improvised bain marie if cabbage, spinach, sprouts, French beans or cauliflower should be the vegetable course, and add a little water (or in some cases milk), then allow the vegetables to steam slowly, the water in the outside vessel being kept boiling, but not too fast.

While boiling the pan should be well filled with water, which should always be kept boiling, and the lid of the pan should not be quite closed. Here it may be said that the method of pouring off the water preparatory to adding a little butter is a barbarous one; the vegetables should be thoroughly drained and then returned into a pan in which the butter is already melted.

Potatoes are best cooked by steam and new potatoes are particularly nice when prepared in this fashion, quite dry with a little butter added before they are sent to table.

It is because vegetables that have been cooked by steam have not so good a color as when boiled that objection is sometimes taken to this method and the perforated steamer preferred. When, however, boiling is the method chosen the vegetables should be carefully prepared and outside green leaves should all be removed while steeping in salt gives firmness and will destroy and remove any lurking insects. If the vegetable is then put for five minutes into boiling water and afterwards again into cold the color will be improved and a little sugar in the cooking water also helps the color.

Cauliflower is a vegetable which appeals to all tastes, and it is also one of the most nourishing of our vegetables, and in price practically within the reach of all. Like all vegetables for boiling, it requires care in cooking. First soak the cauliflower in salted water for an hour, drain and leave it whole or break it into sprigs if preferred, removing the outer leaves. Then put it into a large pan full of boiling salted water and boil till the green parts are soft.

Root vegetables, among which are included sea kale, celery, artichokes, turnips and carrots, are best boiled in unsalted water and the heat must not be too fast and furious, or the vegetable will become tough. Parsnip is one of the many vegetables which are unappreciated, because it is rarely cooked in a fashion which makes the most of its flavor. It should not be watery when served, but sent to table thoroughly dry with butter sauce.

Beef Rolls.

The remains of cold roast or boiled beef, seasoning to taste of salt, pepper and minced herbs; puff paste. Mince the beef tolerably fine, with a small amount of its own fat; add a seasoning of pepper, salt and chopped herbs; put the whole into a roll of puff paste and bake for half an hour or rather longer should the roll be very large.

Beef patties may be made of cold meat by mincing and seasoning beef as directed above and baking in a rich puff paste in patty tins.

Sauce for Plum Pudding.

Cream together a cupful of sugar and half a cupful of butter. When light and creamy add the well-beaten yolks of four eggs. Stir into this one wineglass of wine or brandy, a pinch of salt and one large cupful of hot cream or rich milk. Beat this mixture well, place it in a saucepan over the fire, stir it until it cooks sufficiently to thicken like cream. Be sure and not let it boil.

Apple Butter.

Pare and quarter apples and cook them in just enough water to keep them from burning; about a pint of water to four quarts of apples; cook until very soft, then run them through a sieve and add half as much sugar as pulp. To four quarts of apples use half a teaspoon of whole cloves and cinnamon tied in a bag. Cook until good and thick.

TABLE TOP IMMUNE TO HEAT

How Surface of Antique Furniture Was Made to Defy Hot Plates and Dishes.

I was staying with an antique furniture enthusiast the other day and was very much interested to find that hot plates and dishes seem to have no effect on his old gate-leg dining table, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

I inquired how it was managed, and this is what he told me:

When the table was bought, the first thing he did was to remove the coating of French polish that was already on. This he did by scrubbing it with hot water to which a good allowance of washing powder had been added. When the whole was off, the wood was rinsed with clear, warm water, and then rubbed over with a cloth dipped in vinegar and water (equal quantities.) You'll probably think that after such harsh treatment it was ruined, but it wasn't.

After applying the vinegar and water, he rubbed it as dry as possbile, and when dry he started to polish it with boiled linseed oil. One can buy it all ready for use at any oil and paint shop.

Taking a very little of the oil on a soft cloth, he began to polish with a circular movement round and round. When he had gone all over the surface he polished well with a clean soft duster till all trace of the oil was removed.

Next day he repeated the process, and this he did every day, barring Sunday, for six months, adding just a wee drop of ammonia to the oil during the last month or two.

The result is a hard, beautifully polished surface that does not mark even if hot plates or dishes are put on the table.

It is now polished very occasionally only, with a little turpentine and beeswax, made so thin that it can be shaken up in a bottle.

I have come back terribly dissatisfied with my own French polish dining table, which shows a white mark on the slightest provocation.

SECRETS OF TOAST-MAKING

Cut Bread Night Before so That Surface Is Dry Before It Is Toasted.

The secret of having crisp toast is to cut the bread the night before, so that the surface is dry before it is toasted. Another trick is to have the slices, when toasted, stood up on edge in some place where they can be kept hot until they are served. If the slices are placed one on top of the other they become soggy.

For toast that is to be used as the foundation for poached eggs, mushrooms or any creamed food, half an inch is the correct thickness, hot water is distributed over it evenly with a small spoon, and melted butter spread on with a bristle brush, which comes for the purpose. People who dislike the softness produced by this treatment may, of course, preserve the crispness of the toast by omitting the hot water. Often when bread is very stale, it may be steamed a little before it is toasted: otherwise it is so hard that even the best of teeth rebel at it. Housekeepers who do not possess ancient silver toast racks have been heard to say that these only act as coolers for the slices they hold, and that they are not desirable at all. On the other hand, a covered toast dish holds the heat and steams the slices to sogginess in a short time. The surest way to have perfect toast seems to be to dispense with the ancient formalities and take to ultra-modern inventions, such as the electric toaster, which stands on the table at milady's elbow and makes the toast "while you wait."

Sponge Rings with Fruit.

Make a sponge cake by using two eggs, half cup of sugar, half cup of flour and half teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake in a ring mold. Serve by removing from the mold and into the center piling cut oranges, or oranges and bananas. This may be served with foamy sauce, made as follows: One cup of milk, two tablespoons of butter, half cup of sugar, one tablespoon of cornstarch, one egg. Moisten the cornstarch in a small portion of milk. Scald the remainder, stir in the cornstarch and add the butter. Beat the white of the egg until stiff and fold into the custard carefully.

Fruit Cake.

One pound butter, two pounds brown sugar, six eggs well beaten, three pounds flour, half teaspoon soda dissolved in teaspoon of hot water, half pound blanched and chopped almonds, two pounds currants, two pounds raisins (seedless), half pound citron (cut fine), half pound lemon peel (candied), half pound prunes (pitted and soaked and chopped), half pound New Orleans molasses, half teaspoon all kinds of spice.

Pie Crust.

Here is my way of making pie crust for two pies. Two and one-half cups of flour, one heaping teaspoon of baking powder, salt. Sift all together. Mix in with hands, one cup of lard, cold water to roll. Mix with silver knife.

Gingersnaps.

Half cup molasses, half cup sugar, half cup butter and lard, three tablespoons hot water, three cups flour, one teaspoon soda, three teaspoons ginger; salt.

PITIFUL SIGHT WITH ECZEMA

"A few days after birth we noticed an inflamed spot on our baby's hip which soon began spreading until baby was completely covered even in his eyes, ears and scalp. For eight weeks he was bandaged from head to foot. He could not have a stitch of clothing on. Our regular physician pronounced it chronic eczema. He is a very able physician and ranks with the best in this locality, nevertheless, the disease began spreading until baby was completely covered. He was losing flesh so rapidly that we became alarmed and decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

"Not until I commenced using Cuticura Soap and Ointment could we tell what he looked like, as we dared not wash him, and I had been putting one application after another on him. On removing the scale from his head the hair came off, and left him entirely bald, but since we have been using Cuticura Soap and Ointment he has as much hair as ever. Four weeks after we began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment he was entirely cured. I don't believe anyone could have eczema worse than our baby.

"Before we used the Cuticura Remedies we could hardly look at him, he was such a pitiful sight. He would fuss until I would treat him, they semed to relieve him so much. Cuticura Soap and Ointment stand by themselves and the result they quickly and surely bring is their own recommendation." (Signed) Mrs. T. B. Rosser, Mill Hall, Pa., Feb. 20, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 29 K, Boston.

New to It.

They walked up to the desk of the Getty House in Yonkers, both in suspiciously new clothes. He took a pen from the hand of Clerk Maling with a careless, indifferent air and signed with a flourish. It was just his name. Maling looked at him in surprise and waited. Finally he said:

"Aren't you going to register her, too?"

The man answered, "Of course," and with another flourish he added, "and wife."

The bride looked at him reproachfully, murmuring, "What did you suppose I hit you in the ribs for?"

Appropriation Bills Ready.

Two appropriation bills are about ready to emerge from the committee of the house. The District of Columbia bill, which last year carried $12,000,000, will be completed and reported to the house early this week, and it will be followed quickly by the pension appropriation bill which runs usually close to $150,000,000.

The arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France probably will be called up in open session of the senate within a fortnight.

Lorimer Testifies.

Senator Lorimer will testify under oath for the first time since the senate ordered an investigation of his election. If necessary, his counsel intends to let the senator tell his story in his own way. He may take two days to do so. Then the cross-examination will begin. Following his testimony, the committee is expected to begin work on its report to the senate where the final fight will come.

Bryan Is Turned Down.

Future caucuses of the Democrats of the house of representatives will be conducted under new rules which, while they do not answer the demand of William Jennings Bryan for an open caucus, satisfy the Democratic leaders in the house. The Democrats met in secret session for three hours. After protracted debate, a resolution proposed by Representative S. Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, a compromise on the Bryan plan was adopted by a vote of 103 to 27. The 27 who voted against it favored opening the caucus to the press.

The new rules provide that a record vote be taken on demand of one-fifth of those present and that a journal be kept for publication. Debates and other incidents to the meetings will not be made public.

The rules were proposed by a committee appointed several months ago. Speaker Clark, one of the committee, owing to his illness was not present at the caucus. Mr. Underwood, floor leader, answering to call and engineered the movement by which the Bryan faction were defeated. The feud between Mr. Bryan and Mr. Underwood has lasted for many months and the defeat of the Bryan open caucus movement at this time is taken as another victory for the Alabama leader.

Washington, D. C. — There are indications that the senate hopper will be full of pension bills of various kinds. The house and senate are divided as to the sweeping general increase bills that have been considered in both houses.

Senator Nelson has presented a bill intended to deal more liberally with soldiers who were maimed in war.

All hope of agreement between conferees of the two houses of congress on the resolution providing for election of United States senators by direct vote of the people has vanished.

The difference between the house and the senate conferees is based on a question of congressional supervision. As passed by the house the resolution placed the control of senatorial elections in the hands of the state legislatures. The senate amended the resolution, leaving the control in the hands of congress. This question has been debated by the conferees since the extra session and after many meetings representatives on each side have been unable to offer concessions which would be acceptable.

Senator Newlands of Nevada precipitated a lively debate when he attempted to force upon the senate his resolution providing for a legislative program. He sought ineffectually to have his resolution made the unfinished business with the result that the ensuing discussion took a wide range, entering the complicated field of the tariff. The report of the tariff board and the board itself also figured.

$50,000 Asked to Repulse Fly.

The sum of $50,000 to repulse the invasion of the Mediterranean fruit fly is asked in a bill introduced by Representative Hayes and Kahn of California. California, they say, already called an extra session of its legislature to prepare for war on it. The invasion is threatened from the Hawaiian islands, the fly's native habitat, and fruit brought from there carries the larvae which flourishes in the California climate.

No caucus on the tariff legislative program has been suggested yet and it is probable that there will be none until the wool schedule is ready.

Monetary Plan Is Ready.

The monetary commission's plan for a national reserve association when it goes to congress will provide for an organization so constituted that the financial institutions of New York—the seat of the money power in the United States—will control less than ten per cent of the total representation in the central association, although they possess fully 30 per cent of the banking capital.

The South, with about ten per cent of the banking resources of the country, would control 23 per cent of the representation in the reserve association. New England with 12 per cent of the banking capital would have eight per cent; the middle west with 25 per cent of the banking capital would have 30 per cent, and the far western and Pacific states with about 13 per cent of the banking capital would control approximately 25 per cent.

By preparing such a method of organization it is expected to remove the possibility of control of the reserve association from any single group or set of men.

Fifteen branch associations will be provided for—one in New England, two in the eastern states, four in the south, four in the middle west and four in the far west. To control the reserve association it would be necessary to control a majority of the branches. This is held to be impossible.

It has been proposed that ownership of bank stocks by other banks be prohibited, and that any bank a member of the reserve association be forbidden to own stocks in any other bank. It also has been proposed that when a bank acquires stock control in another bank it be prohibited from voting that stock in the main organization.

Washington, Jan. 4.—A busy season was in prospect for congress when it reconvened after the holiday recess. The deliberations may run well into the summer, without a halt even for the presidential conventions.

With the Russian treaty abrogated, the pension bill and urgent deficiency appropriations out of the way in the house, tariff legislation is expected as soon as the ways and means committee can send out the revised schedules. The iron and steel schedule will come first and is expected within ten days. Tariff legislation, however, is by no means all that is in the legislative program.

Anti-trust, labor legislation and revision of the statutes relating to injunctions are to be pressed by the judiciary committee. Panama canal legislation is to be urged by the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, members of which have just returned from a three weeks' inspection of the canal zone. The rules committee has under consideration important matters, including proposed investigations of the "money trust," the shipping combine and the harvester trust. This committee contemplates recommending the appointment of a joint committee to conduct a broad inquiry into all three subjects.

RICHESON GUILTY

ACCUSED MINISTER ADMITS MURDER OF GIRL WHO WAS TO HAVE BEEN HIS WIFE.

MAKES FULL CONFESSION

States That His Motive Was to be Free to Marry the Heiress, Violet Edmands—Prosecutor Demands Death Penalty.

Boston, Jan. 8.—That he was responsible for the death of Avis Linnell, was the confession made by Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, in order that he would be free to marry Violet Edmands, a Brookline heiress. The confession is in the form of a letter written by the minister to his attorney, in which he recites the story of his crime. The complete text of the confession follows:

"Boston, Jan. 3, 1912. — John L. Lee, Esq., W. A. Morse, Esq., Philip R. Dunbar, Esq.

"Gentlemen—Deeply penitent for my sin and earnestly desiring, as far as in my power lies, to make atonement, I hereby confess that I am guilty of the offense of which I stand indicted.

"I am moved to this course by no inducement of self-benefit or lenience. Heinous as is my crime, God has not wholly abandoned me and my conscience and manhood, however depraved and blighted, will not admit of my still further wronging by a public trial her, whose pure young life I have destroyed. Under the lashings of remorse I have suffered and am suffering the tortures of the damned.

"In this I find a measure of comfort. In my mental anguish I recognize that there is still, by the mercy of the Master, some remnant of the divine spark of goodness still lingering within me. I could wish to live only because within some prison's walls I might in some small measure, redeem my sinful past, help some other despairing soul and at last, find favor with my God.

"You are instructed to deliver this to the district attorney or to the judge of the court.

"Sincerely yours,
"Clarence V. T. Richeson."

After receiving the letter, his lawyers went hurriedly to the office of District Attorney Pelletier, in charge of the prosecution, and pleaded with him for leniency for the murderer. Pelletier refused. Nothing, he said, would be promised. If Richeson wished to "change his mind" about his plea of "not guilty," he must do so in the full knowledge that at the end of the story stood the chair of death.

Crime a Strange One.

The crime, with the person involved and the setting, has become one of the most famous in New England's criminal annals. Clarence Virgil Thompson Richeson, a handsome young Virginian, was pastor of a little Baptist church in Hyannis, Mass., the little Cape Cod town where Avis Linnell was the reigning belle.

Richeson soon became engaged to the girl, but, after a row with his congregation, resigned and accepted the pastorate of the Immanuel Baptist church of Cambridge, a fashionable Boston district. There he met and became engaged to Miss Violet Edmands, herself worth half a million dollars and heir to a greater part of the vast estate of her father, Moses Grant Edmands.

Although his engagement to Miss Edmands was known, Avis Linnell was kept in ignorance of it. She went to Boston to study music in the conservatory of music. She told several persons she was engaged to Richeson.

Strong Case Against Him.

On the night of Saturday, Oct. 14, 1911, Miss Linnell was found dying in the bathroom in the Young Women's Christian asociation building. For a time it was thought she had committed suicide, and an examination of her body showed she had been killed by cyanide of potassium.

Richeson disappeared immediately but was arrested a few days later in the home of Edmands, where he was in hiding. He denied his guilt, but the state wove about him a strong circumstantial case.

It was proved that he had bought the cyanide from a druggist, William Hahn, of Newton Center, Mass. The state contended that Richeson had given the girl the poison under the guise of medicine, and that she had swallowed it voluntarily, believing it was the medicine he claimed it to be.

Only a few days before Christmas Richeson stabbed himself in the groin with a piece of tin and for a time was thought to be in a dying condition.

Indianapolis.—"Digging Tom Taggart's Political Grave," is a regular event at the biennial reorganization of the democratic state committee, but the popular, debonair, smiling, quiet Tom, who was national chairman in 1906, and the owner of the famous French Lick Springs and "Pluto" invariably comes out on top. At the reorganization here this week, Taggart's foes were completely routed and he placed Bernard C. Korbley, one of his old time lieutenants in the state chairmanship.

BY-PRODUCTS PROFITABLE

YIELD 97 PER CENT OF GAINS IN PACKING BUSINESS.

Bookkeeping System Shows That His Company Made But Little From Dressed Beef.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—By-products yield 97 per cent of the profits in the packing business, according to figures given by William D. Miles, formerly of the Armour Packing company of Kansas City, who concluded his testimony in the trial of the ten Chicago packers, charged with criminal violation of the Sherman law. He gave the company's net profits for 1899 as $262,875.18 in the dressed beef department, based on the slaughter of 204,820 animals.

An analysis of the figures given by the witness showed that the company made but three cents profit on dressed meat of each steer killed while the fat of each animal yielded a profit of 42 cents.

The profit on hides was 37 cents a head and 18 cents profit was obtained from the glue manufactured from the hoofs of each steer. The profit from the fat was 14 times that yielded by the dressed beef and the profit from the hides was nearly as much. The money made from glue in the hoofs was six times as much as that made from the sales of the fresh meat, according to Mr. Miles.

San Francisco, Calif. — China's rejuvenation was observed in San Francisco by the residents of Chinatown. The main purpose was to do honor to the election of Dr. Sun Yat Sen to the presidency of the empire.

Three thousand queueless Chinamen took part in the parade that wound its way through the city's business district and the gaily hued silk robes of other days were replaced by the garb of the Occident.

The famous dragon had been relegated to seclusion and the tom toms and other music making instruments of old China were replaced by the strident brasses of American bands. The tunes were familiar to Occidental ears, rag time and American national airs varying with each other.

AUSTRALIAN MAC

CHARGED WITH ROBBING BANK AT NEW WESTMINSTER, B. C. OF $375,000.

ARRESTED IN NEW YORK

And This Resulted In His Capture By New York Police.—Accomplice Caught In Los Angeles.

New York, N. Y.—John McNamara of San Francisco, known to detectives of half a dozen cities as "Australian Mack," was arrested here on a warrant charging him with the larceny of $375,000 from the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B. C., which was dynamited Sept. 14. Eleven hundred dollars was found in his wallet and detectives are searching the city for $340,000 of the bank's funds which he is believed to have brought to New York.

In addition to larceny, McNamara is charged with dynamiting the bank's safe and binding and gagging a Chinese watchman. He admitted that he was in British Columbia at the time the bank was robbed and had lived at the Strand hotel in Vancouver afterwards, but declined to say anything further.

For nearly 15 years, the police assert, McNamara has been known to the authorities throughout the country.

The crime with which McNamara is charged was committed by four men, who entered the New Westminster branch of the Bank of Montreal on the night of Sept. 14, and after binding the watchman and dynamiting the safe, departed so heavily laden with loot that they wrapped it in pillow slips and sheets and had to use an automobile to get away. They dropped a $5,000 bundle of bills in their haste and finding that they had more than they could carry hid $24,000 beneath a sidewalk.

Two hundred and forty thousand dollars of the stolen money was negotiable, lacking, however, the signature of the bank's officials. Six weeks later a bank in Buffalo received $1,005 in the stolen bills, deposited by a poolroom keeper. The bank asked the depositor where he procured it and upon his failure to give an answer the money was confiscated.

Sent $1,000 To Wife.

San Francisco. — John McNamara has a long criminal record. He bore the aliases of John P. McNab, "Big Mac" and "Australian Mac." In 1899 he was arrested in Boston on a burglary charge. In 1900 he was arrested in Cleveland on a charge of bank robbery, but was acquitted. He also was arrested in Australia on a charge of bank robbery.

During the Schmitz-Ruef regime in San Francisco, McNamara enjoyed many privileges and conducted a notorious resort known as the "Turtle." Later, he and "Billy" Gallagher conducted another resort known as "Tom's Cabin."

McNamara was traced last August to Portland, thence to Seattle, and to Vancouver, B. C. He was in Vancouver in August and it was the month following that the New Westminster bank was robbed.

It was through McNamara's family in this city that he was finally located. He had sent $1,000 to his wife, who resides in the Sunset district of San Francisco. Through the forwarding of the money McNamara was located in New York.

McNamara had been associated with a man named Barrett who is serving time in an Oregon prison for burglary. Barrett is now believed by local detectives to have been connected with the New Westminster bank robbery. Barrett robbed the First National bank of San Francisco of $20,000 in 1904 and served five years in San Quentin.

Accomplice Is Caught.

Los Angeles. — Charles Hoffman, alias Charles Don, alias C. W. Howard, was arrested here by agency detectives, charged with being connected with the robbery of the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B. C., last September.

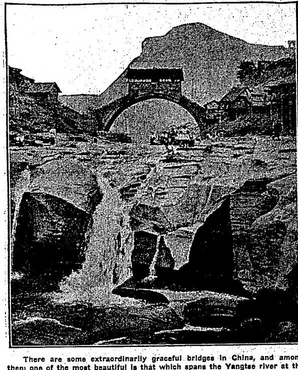
Things Queer and Curious

Beautiful Bridge in China

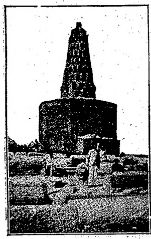


There are some extraordinarily graceful bridges in China, and among them one of the most beautiful is that which spans the Yangtse river at the town of Wan-Hsien. The place is above the great gorge district of the Yangtse, and the houses, owing to the steepness of the banks, are supported on tall piles.

PECULIAR WHITEWASH

When traveling through the rural districts of Uruguay, says the American consul at Montevideo, one's attention is attracted to the fine white color of the farm buildings, even during the wet season. To obtain this neat effect a whitewash is used which is made with the sliced leaves of the common cactus, macerated in water for 24 hours, preducing a solution of creamy consistence. To this lime is added and well mixed. When applied to any surface, be it wood, brick, iron, or other material, a beautiful pearly white appearance is produced which will endure through storms and frosts for many years. It is suggested that in sections of the United States where the cactus is a nuisance the plant might be utilized in this manner.

TOMB OF HAROUN'S FAVORITE



Very little remains to mark the golden age of Bagdad, though one constantly comes across the yet more ancient bricks bearing the stamp of Nebuchadnezzar that have been brought from the ruins of Babylon and are used in modern buildings. We do not know even where the famous palace of Haroun-al-Rashid stood. From this epoch remain only the tomb of Zobeida, Haroun-al-Rashid's favorite wife, here pictured, and Khan Ortma, a handsome and extensive caravanserai.

SAME OLD STYLES

From the fresco paintings of women in Cretan palaces of the period about 2,000 B. C., it is learned that the women of that time pinched in their waists, had flounced or accordeon plaited skirts, wore an elaborate coiffure, shoes with high heels and hats which might have come from a Parisian hat shop, while one woman might be described as wearing a jupe culotte.

SKIN FOR SANDPAPER

An ancient mariner and fisherman says he well remembers when the dried skin of the dogfish was used for sandpaper, and good sharp cutting stuff it was, too. The old salt further says there are many sorts of imitation dried cod on the market and that the tail of a young dogfish is fine fried.

CHINA HAS NO TYPEWRITERS

Typewriters are now made for use in nearly a hundred different languages, and they are sold all over the world; but there is still one great nation which, for a very simple reason, has no typewriters that write its tongue. That nation is China.

The English alphabet has 26 letters, the Russian 36. The typewriter produced for the Russian market is the largest made; but no typewriter could be made that would begin to be big enough for the Chinese language, which has no alphabet but is represented by sign characters, of which there are about 50,000. Of the great number of words found in the English language only a small proportion are used for the ordinary purposes of speech, and the same is true of the characters used in the Chinese language; but the number of Chinese characters commonly employed is still far greater than could be put on any typewriter. So this nation of 400,000,000 people has no typewriter in its own tongue.

But that doesn't mean that no typewriters are sold in China. More and more Chinese are learning other languages besides their own, and Chinese merchants and resident foreign merchants use typewriters, and they are used in legations and in consular offices and in banks and shipping offices and colleges, and by missionaries, by various people. Altogether there are sold in China a good many typewriters.

FIGHTING MALARIA.

In Athens a sluggish stream, with its nuemerous wide and shallow pools, was cleaned out and deepened, thus making it flow faster, and every week the new made river bed was swept rid of mosquito eggs. All this began five years ago. The first year the malaria in the school children dropped to 60 per cent. and the year following it fell to 20 per cent., and the next year it was only three per cent., and from that it fell the following year to one per cent., and last year there was no more malaria.

CHANGE OF EYE COLOR

The possibility of a man's eyes changing color as the result of mental shock or physical ill treatment was the subject of an interesting discussion by a number of surgeons in the eye ward of one of the great London hospitals. One of the surgeons stated: "It is common knowledge that great physical hardships may suddenly turn the hair white. The loss of color here follows on certain chemical changes, due to disturbances of nutrition, taking place in the tiny particles of coloring matter which give the hair its color. "All infants at birth have blue eyes. In some babies immediately after birth pigment granules begin to develop in the iris. Thus they become brown or black eyed. In others, however, no such pigment formation takes place and the eyes remain blue or gray throughout life. If this at present blue eyed convict is really the missing brown eyed banker a reasonable explanation of the discrepancy in the eye colorings would be that under the stress of physical and mental shock the coloring matter which he had in early life disappeared, leaving the eyes the original blue coloring present at birth."

TO KEEP WITCHES AWAY

Some curious superstitions are gathered round even so eminently a practical thing as beer. In Scotland it used to be the custom to throw a handful of salt and a little dry malt into the mash to keep the witches from it, and the cautious housewife in houses where they brewed their own beer used to throw a live coal into the vat to save the liquor from the frolicsome interference of fairies.

The addition of salt, by the way, to beer in the course of brewing was supposed to be for the unholy purpose of exciting thirst. It may possibly have been used to this end by the unscrupulous, but the real reason was legitimate. Salt moderates the fermentation and makes the liquor fine.

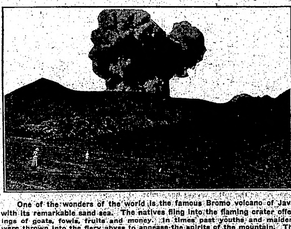
RAT CATCHER OF PARIS

George Menard of Paris holds a unique position, being the official rat catcher of the great system of sewers. Carrying a light and a bag he traverses the sewers and seems to hypnotize the rats, which are captured alive and sold for the training of rat dogs and for rat fights.

JEWEL WEIGHS 243 POUNDS

Jewel experts throughout the world have been thrown into a state of excitement by the appearance of a beryl that weighs 243.1 pounds, and is 18.9 inches high, and from 15.75 inches to 16.5 inches in width. This is the largest beryl ever found, and is reported to have been sold by its finder for nearly $25,000. The beryl was picked up by a Turk in the state of Minas Geraes, Brazil. Its color is a greenish blue, and it is absolutely free from impurities.

Bromo Volcano and Sand Sea



One of the wonders of the world is the famous Bromo volcano of Java, with its remarkable sand sea. The natives fling into the flaming crater offerings of goats, fowls, fruits and money. In times past youths and maidens were thrown into the fiery abyss to appease the spirits of the mountain. The sand sea is ribbed by the action of the winds, just as the sands of the real sea are by the tides and waves.

CHAMPIONS NORTH STATE

Leaders of Zenith City Pay Eloquent Tribute to Guest of Honor as One Who Has Made Good.

Duluth.—State developments was the keynote of L. W. Hill's address at the Commercial club's banquet at the Spalding hotel at which he was guest of honor. The president of the Great Northern railroad held out alluring prospects of great expansion of the agricultural resources, and declared that Minnesota was just awakening to the wonderful possibilities which can be hers for the effort. Mr. Hill strongly urged co-operation of the people to the end that the development of Northern Minnesota may progress more rapidly.

Mr. Hill was received with much enthusiasm. He was acquainted with most of the 150 persons present and the function lacked much of the formality which might attach to a similar event where the guest of honor was a stranger, personally.

W. A. McGonagle, president of the Duluth, Missabe & Northern road, was toastmaster. He introduced Mr. Hill as a young man who had made good despite the fact that greatness was thrust upon him and that there was no young man in the country whose career had been watched with greater interest and ultimate satisfaction than his. Mr. Hill's talk came after the toastmaster had introduced representatives of the city, the grain business, manufacturing, navigation, etc.

Mayor M. B. Cullum and President C. A. Luster, of the Commercial club, delivered the welcoming addresses to the visitor and his party from the Twin Cities. A. D. He said that while we hear so much about the wonderful resources of timber and ore, we don't hear much about wheat and wondered why. Mr. Thomson declared that the Great Northern road would be hauling wheat to the Head of the Lakes long after the ore and lumber traffic had become mere memories. F. A. Patrick, W. J. Olcott, Julius H. Barnes and other prominent Duluth men were speakers at the banquet.

When the special train bearing Hill and party arrived the party was escorted by the reception committee to the Spalding hotel, where an informal reception was held and the visitors were then entertained at the Kitchi Gammi club until the banquet hour.

HINES NOT PURCHASER.

Claimed Rainy Lake Company Took Up Shevlin-Clark Interests.

Duluth. — The report from Winnipeg that the Edward Hines Lumber company has purchased the Shevlin-Clark sawmill and a quantity of Canadian timber is untrue, as far as the name of the purchaser is concerned and the consideration. It has been learned from other sources which are reliable that the Rainy Lake company has purchased the Shevlin-Clark mill or at least that crowd which includes Edward Hines, the Weyerhaeusers, William O'Brien and others.

The Winnipeg report gives the consideration as having been $750,000, but it was $1,500,000. The Hines-Weyer-O'Brien syndicate already own 700,000,000 feet of Canadian timber.

WOMAN'S DEATH ACCIDENTAL.

Barnesville.—In the case of Ellen Nyeng, whose body was found in her home ten miles east of here Christmas night, the coroner's jury brought in a verdict that the woman came to her death from accidental causes, either by falling or from injuries from stock in the barn on the Nyeng farm. Lander Nyeng, who was held here for twenty-four hours, was discharged.

To Test Bridge Fund Law.

Albert Lea. — The county commissioners having refused to grant the city funds requested for the building of a bridge across Shell Rock river, mandamus proceedings have been begun. The request for funds was made under the provisions of a law passed by the last legislature, premitting cities and villages, under certain conditions, to expend the share of the road and bridge fund levied by county boards and paid by such cities and villages, as may be directed by the city or village councils.

FARMERS ENJOY COURSE.

Ninety-six Enroll at Beardsley—Women Organize a Club.

Beardsley.—A successful farmers' short course was held here. Ninety-six farmers enrolled for the work in corn judging and livestock and many women took the work offered in domestic science by Mrs. Margaret Baker of St. Paul. The ladies formed a home economics club with Mrs. J. L. Fitzgerald, president, Mrs. E. J. Daly, vice president, Mrs. A. B. Gillette, secretary, and Mrs. John McDonald, treasurer.

W. H. Tomhave, W. H. Schilling and O. M. Olson had charge of the work in livestock and K. A. Kirkpatrick and C. E. Ewen of the corn judging. Professor A. W. Rankin of the college of education and M. P. Somes gave evening lectures. The average daily attendance of farmers for the week was 150. A meat cutting demonstration and sheep butchering by Mr. Tomhave was one of the features of the weeke.

SERVE NOTICE OF DENIAL.

Striking Winona Motormen Fail in Fight Against Railway Receiver.

Winona.—Officials of the Winona Mortomen's union, which is now on strike in Winona, received word of the denial by Judge Willard of the federal court at Minneapolis, of a petition asking that Receiver Howard Morris, of the Winona Railway and Light company, be required to show cause why the striking men should not be reinstated and why the new proposed working agreement should not be accepted. The court returned the petition to the local clerk and made no comment other than the serving of notice of denial. Judge Willard appointed Mr. Morris receiver some months ago.

The motormen have wired for an international officer, and further efforts will be made to win the strike. Most of the cars are now in operation under non-union local men, and no trouble has developed in more than a week.

LINDBERGH IS ACTIVE.

In Fight to Curb the Power of the Money Trust.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Lindbergh of Minnesota introduced a number of amendments to his resolution calling for an investigation of the so-called money trust, the principal one of which calls upon congress to ascertain the ownership of stocks and practical control of the banks and trust companies eligible under the so-called Aldrich plan to subscribe for and hold the stock of the proposed National Reserve association so as to determine what relationship their stockholders have with the leading trusts of the country.

Another of the Lindbergh amendments calls for an investigation into the control and use of the funds and resources of the principal life insurance companies and whether they are so manipulated as to deprive policy holders of a large part of the profits justly due them.

LOSS BY RASSHOPPERS.

State Entomologist Seys Insects Damaged Crops 10 to 20 Per Cent.

St. Paul.—In his annual report, made to Governor Eberhart, covering the year, F. L. Washburn, state entomologist, said grasshoppers were a serious pest and caused a loss of from 10 to 20 per cent in most parts of the state, especially in western section. Here there were a number of idle farms and these, Mr. Washburn said, were responsible.

Mr. Washburn had four men at work in the infected districts showing the farmers how to get rid of the pests. An arsenical dissolution was used with good results.

Other insect pests mentioned by Mr. Washburn were the saw fly, which attacked tamarack, the clover seed insect and the oak tree borer. The latter, Mr. Washburn said, did much damage throughout the state.

Washington County Pioneer Dies.

Hastings.—David Gallinger, 72 years old, died at his home in Denmark from heart trouble. He was a pioneer and respected resident of Washington county and a brother of J. H. Gallinger, United States Senator from New Hampshire. He is survived by a widow, two sons and a daughter.

DON'T WANT JUDGE HOOK.

Minnesota Railroad Commission Protest His Appointment.

Washington, D. C.—Because of the belief that it would be inimical to the state's interest in the Minnesota rate case to have him upon the United States Supreme Court bench the Minnesota railroad commission has wired a protest against the appointment of Judge Cather Hook to the supreme bench as it has been rumored President Taft had planned.

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan, recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail.

CHAPTER XXVI.—Continued.

He looked at me in surprise. "I reckon, cap, as how ye don't know much 'bout whut's a goin' on in ther valley fer ther las' few months," he said soberly, rubbing down his mule as he spoke. "Tell ye what, thar jist hain't no plantation houses left thar now, thet's a fac', leastwise not north o' ther lines we uns sorter hol' onto yit. Sheridan he played hell with his cavalry raids, an' whut the blue-bellies left ther durned guerillas an' bushwhackers wiped up es clean es a slate. Durn if a crow wudn't starve ter death in ther valley now. Why, cap, them thar deserters an' sich truck is organized now till they're mighty nigh an army, an' they don't skeer fer nuthin' les' ner a reg'ment. I see more ner a hundred an' fifty in one bunch up on ther White Briar two week ago, an' they're worse ner a parcel er pirates. I reckon as how they got Mariar, but I'll bet she giv 'em a hot ol' time afore she done quit."

Rumors of this state of affairs to the north and west of our defending lines had already reached me—indeed, the verification had formed part of my instructions; but Bungay's homely yet graphic description made the situation appear terribly real, and my thought went instantly forth to those I knew who might even then be exposed to this great and unexpected danger.

The very conception of Edith Brennan in such hands as these was agony. I felt I could never rest until assured of her safety, and since my order granted me full authority to prolong my journey, I might ascertain whether or not she yet remained within the valley.

"Jed," I asked, my mind finally settled, "do you know the old Minor plantation?"

"Ol' Jedge Minor's place? Sure; it's up on ther south branch of ther Cowskin."

"Have those fellows got down that far yet?"

"Wal, I reckon not, but durn if I know fer sure, cap."

"How long would it take us to reach there?"

"'Bout two days, I reckon."

I turned and looked at my men in some perplexity. They were scattered along the edge of the road, and only one group had taken the precaution to build a fire. The sergeant lay flat upon his back on a grassy knoll.

"Ebers," I said sternly.

He arose ponderous, and came forward with a decidedly halting gait.

"Vos I sent for?" he asked.

"Yes," I said; "I want you to have the men get their supper at once, as we shall be obliged to ride a good portion of the night. Get the men to their supper. We shall go on in an hour."

How often since have I smiled at the expression upon his solemn round face as he turned ruefully away!

CHAPTER XXVII.

An Embarrassing Situation.

It was well into the third day when we came down into the fertile valley of the Cowskin. It had proven an uneventful ride thus far, for we had met with no adventures and had observed little worthy of consideration from a military standpoint.

While constantly observant of those points regarding which I had been dispatched, my one overmastering thought during all those hours was the possibility of again meeting with Edith Brennan and proving of some assistance to her. Her greeting of me in the Federal hospital had been so sweetly gracious, so marked with tender sympathy, while the memory of her words, and even more of the look which accompanied them, had so remained with me in encouragement that I longed to encounter her again. God knows what I hoped for, for I knew well it must all inevitably end in despair, yet like the moth I must continue to singe my wings until the flame devoured me. Now, however, as we actually drew near to where I supposed she might be, I felt my earlier courage fast deserting me. Nor was I furnished with even the slightest excuse for pressing on; my orders did not positively compel me to proceed, and nothing appeared along the way to lead me to suppose that harm of any kind threatened that peaceful valley. Everything meeting my eyes evidenced that here, at least, was with its attendant horrors had not come. Totally without the beaten track of those great armies which had battled so fiercely for the Shenandoah, it had been traversed only by a few scouting and foraging parties, and so short had been their stay that even the rail fences remained undisturbed to guard the fields, and nowhere did I note outward signs of devastation. It was Virginia as I recalled it in those old days of peace and plenty, before civil strife had sown the land with dead.

What possible excuse, then, had I for going there? In my own heart I knew I had none, or one so poor and selfish I scarcely durst whisper it even to myself; yet I rode steadily on. Impelled by my own weakness, or drawn irresistibly by fate—whichever the real cause I know not—I would at least look upon those walls that had once sheltered her, would learn if possible if she was yet there. Then—well, in the bondage of my passion I hoped for what might happen, as every lover does.

It must have been two o'clock; we had baited our horses, I remember, an hour previous; and the Sergeant had enjoyed his noonday siesta beneath the shade of a great bush bearing purple blossoms. The road we had been traveling since early morning wound in and out among great trees, and crossed and recrossed the little stream called the Cowskin until I almost thought we had lost our way. We met with no one in all the long day's riding, not even a stray negro, and indeed it was some hours since we had passed a house of any kind. Leaving the brook behind us we toiled slowly up a long hill, and at the top Bungay, riding beside me, pointed to the westward.

"Cap," he said, "thar is ther Minor place."

The very sight of it in the distance was a thrill—a great white house placed well back from the road and almost hidden from sight by fine, large trees an old-fashioned, big-roomed house it looked to be, built after the colonial type, a wide veranda upon three sides, with fluted columns to support the overhanging roof.

"Hain't no signs es fer es I kin see of any trouble havin' 'curred thar," Jed said slowly, his shrewd gray eyes roaming over the peaceful scene. "Somebody ter hum tew, fer ther chimley is a smokin'."

Of course, now I was there, the only sensible thing for me to do would have been to ride openly to the front door, and thus learn all I desired. But what man who loves, who is continually swayed by hopes and fears, by strength and weakness, ever does the sensible thing? I had certainly intended doing so at the start, but now my nerve failed me. She was the wife of another. I could not confess I had ventured to come to her in love, nor could I look into those clear, honest, questioning eyes and lie.

"Halt!" I ordered. "Sergeant!"

"I am here, Captain."

"Take your men down into that hollow yonder, and remain there until I return. Better post a sentry on the hill here."

"It vill be done, Captain."

"I shall not, probably, be absent more than an hour, so don't permit the men to stray."

"Dot is it, Captain. I vill be mit dem all over."

I, rode down alone into the thick woods at the foot of the hill, and dismounting, tied my horse to a sapling. Then on foot I struck across the fields, my intention being to come in by the way of the negro quarters at the rear, in hope of meeting some one from whom I might inquire relative to the great house and its inmates.

It was a slight upward trend of land I had to traverse, and although the house was a most sightly object and stood upon the very summit of the elevation, yet so surrounded was it with trees, both fruit and ornamental, I was enabled to make but little of its situation until I approached the outbuildings. I met with no one, nor could I perceive any negroes about the slave quarters. Yet the place did not bear the appearance of desertion. There were horses in the stable, a cat was curled up on one of the cabin door steps, and smoke continued to pour in a dull yellow cloud from the kitchen chimney. Altogether there was much in the situation to puzzle ever, and I no longer regretted that I had exercised some caution in my approach.

The orchard, with the remains of a garden, lay between the house and the stable, protected by a low fence of whitened pickets. So far as I could observe, it contained no occupant, and I pushed open the gate and started down a narrow cinder-path which led between two rows of low bushes. To right of me was an extensive grape-arbor, completely covered with vines, the fresh green leaves forming a delightful contrast to the deep blue sky beyond. As I came opposite an opening leading into this arbor I suddenly caught the flutter of drapery and stopped instantly, my heart throbbing like a frightened girl's. It was quite dark beneath the vine shadow, and I could make out no more than that a woman stood there, her back toward me, busied at some task. Possibly she felt my presence, for all at once she glanced around, and upon perceiving me gave vent to a quick exclamation of terror.

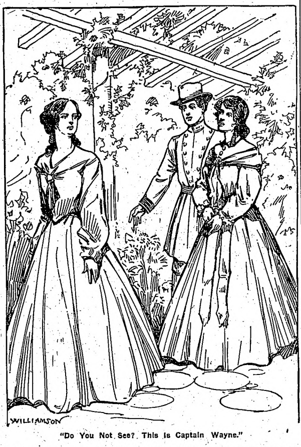
"Pardon me," I said hastily, and removing my hat, "but you have nothing to fear."

There was a moment's hesitancy on her part, and I knew I was being scrutinized by a pair of bright eyes.

"Surely," said a familiar voice, "I cannot be mistaken—you are Captain Wayne."

Before I could even answer she stepped forth from her partial concealment and advanced toward me with cordially extended hands. It was Celia Minor.

"Well, of all men!" she cried gayly, her dark eyes smiling a most kindly welcome. "And Edith and I were speaking about you only yesterday. That is, I was, for really I do not recall now that Edith made any remark apropos of the subject. You have no idea, Captain Wayne, what a hero I have made you out to be. It would make you positively vain if I should confess; why, Arthur has actually become so jealous that he has almost forbidden me even to mention your name in his presence. So when I want to talk about you I am compelled to go to Edith. She hasn't power to stop me, you know, but I'm sure I must bore her awfully. And then to think that when you stood there just now, and I saw your gray uniform, I actually thought the guerillas had come. My heart beats so now I can hardly talk. But how pale and haggard you look—is it that horrible wound which troubles you still?"



"Do You Not See? This Is Captain Wayne."

"I have been discharged from the hospital only a short time," I answered, as she paused to take breath. "Indeed, this is my first military service for several months, yet I am feeling quite strong again. Mrs. Brennan, then, is still with you?"

"Oh, yes; we have been here all winter long. It has been so dull, for really nothing has happened, and the valley is quite devoid of inhabitants—even the negroes have gone hunting freedom. But Major Brennan and Arthur are to be here this afternoon, and sometime tonight we are all of us going away together."

Eager as I was to meet Brennan, I had no desire that we should meet in the presence of his wife. Better, far better, would it be for me to leave at once and without even seeing her.

"You say you are about to depart?" I asked, determined to learn all possible regarding their plans. "Do you go North?"

"Yes, to Baltimore and Washington. The guerillas are becoming so desperate in this neighborhood that we are actually afraid to remain here longer. They attacked the Cuyler plantation, only ten miles from here, two weeks ago, killed old Mr. Cuyler, turned his wife out partially dressed in the middle of the night, looted the house of everything it contained of value, and then set it on fire. You see we have no men folks here, except two negroes, who have clung to us because they were so aged they were afraid to leave—just mamma, Edith, my old nurse, and myself. It seems so lonely, and Major Brennan and Arthur both insist it is no longer safe. So they are coming with a cavalry escort to take us all North. I am sure we shall have a splendid time."

"You have experienced no trouble, then, thus far?"

"Oh, none at all—we have not even been bothered by scouting parties. Oh, I do not mean you; you are no bother. But yesterday there was a horrible man here; he came to the kitchen door, and asked all sorts of impudent questions. Mrs. Bungay actually had to threaten him with a gun before he would leave."

"Is Maria Bungay here, then?"

"Why certainly; do you know her? Isn't she a delightful old dear—just as good as a man."

"Her husband is with my party."

"Jed—really? Why, do you know, Maria has got it into her head that he had run away from her. I should so love to witness their meeting; it would be most interesting. But you must come into the house, Captain Wayne; Edith will be overjoyed to see you again, although you know she is never demonstrative, as I am. It must be awfully nice to be always cool and calm, don't you think?"

Determined that I would not be tempted, I yet hesitated, and my vivacious companion too everything for granted at once.

"Oh, before we go in, won't you do me a favor?" she asked. "But of course you will. I was trying to tie this grapevine into place when you surprised me, but I could not hold on with one hand and tie with the other. See what I mean?" And placing one slender foot upon a slat of the trellis she lifted herself up until she could barely reach the refractory branch. "Now," she said, smiling down upon me, "please just hold me here for a moment until I secure this end."

My hand was scarcely upon her in support when the slender slat snapped beneath her weight. As she fell I caught her with both arms. For a moment she lay, panting and startled on my breast; then, as with a little laugh she disengaged herself from my embrace, we stood there hand in hand and face to face with Edith Brennan.

Shall I ever forget the look within her eyes? How plainly I saw it, although she stood half hidden beneath the shadow of the vines. Amazement, incredulity, scorn were expressed there, yet even as I marked them all became merged into proud unconsciousness. She would have turned away without a word, but my companion stopped her.

"Edith," she cried eagerly, "do you not see? This is Captain Wayne."

She turned toward me and slightly inclined her head.

"I recognized Captain Wayne," was her calm answer, "and regret greatly having intruded upon him. It was entirely unintentional, and I have no desire to remain."

I could not have spoken at that moment to save my life. It fairly stunned me to realize the construction she so plainly placed upon the scene just enacted. Not so the girl at my side. Her cheeks flushed with indignation, and her audacity gave her speech which made matters even worse than before.

"You are exceedingly free with your criticisms, Edith," she exclaimed sharply, as the latter turned her back upon us. "Perhaps it would be as well for you first to ascertain the truth."

"You wholly mistake," was the calm reply. "I have not presumed to criticise. Why should I? It is not a matter which interests me in the least. I presume you have no further objection to my returning to the house?"

She did not so much as deign to look again at either of us, but as she moved slowly out of sight Miss Minor turned and looked into my face with questioning eyes. What she may have read there I know not, but she sank back upon a bench and burst into a merry peal of laughter.

"Isn't it perfectly ridiculous!" she cried, as soon as she was able to speak. "Only I do hope she won't tell Arthur."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

We Capture a Courier.

The girl's light burst of laughter aroused me thoroughly to a sense of our situation.

"You seem to derive much amusement from a condition of affairs almost intolerable to me," I said bitterly. "I have always valued most highly the friendship of Mrs. Brennan, but this unfortunate occurrence will doubtless end it."

She glanced up at me, her long lashes wet, but her dark eyes sparkling with mischief.

"Oh, she won't care so far as you are concerned," she exclaimed indifferently. "But I suppose she will think I am perfectly horrid. Well, I don't care if she does; she might have waited and learned the truth first. Wasn't her face a study? And how shall I ever explain to Arthur so that he will understand? I'm sure I have got the worst of it. Oh, Captain Wayne, is my hair all ruffled up? I know I look like a fright. You must come in now, and we will explain to Mrs. Brennan the whole matter. She cannot help believing us both, while I know she would be so cold and proud to me alone."

I shook my head decisively. Perhaps it was better ended so; at least I possessed no courage just them to face her indignation. She might but deem we had concocted our explanation, and would very likely receive it with all the scorn she felt it deserved. Besides, it was clear there was nothing I could do to aid them. I should be now merely an unwelcome intruder. An escort was to be there shortly to convoy them northward, and for me to be found in their company by Brennan would only inflame him and add greatly to the embarrassment of his wife's position. Much as I might long for immediate vindication in her sight, the plain duty of true-love was to depart at once, and permit time to straighten out the tangle.

"You must pardon me," I hastened to say, standing hat in hand before her, "but it would not be best for me to intrude upon Mrs. Brennan after her late reception. I merely halted here in order to assure myself of your presence and safety. My men are even now waiting for me a few hundred yards away."

"But I wish you to meet Arthur."

"Oh, I think not, Miss Minor. I feel warm friendship for Lieutenant Caton, but we wear different uniforms, serve under different flags, and a meeting here, both with armed forces behind us, would naturally have to be a hostile one. However the Lieutenant and I might consent to a temporary truce, his superior officer, Major Brennan, would not likely prove of the same mind."

"Then you really must go?"

"Unless you specially desire to witness a cavalry skirmish in your front dooryard, I certainly consider it best," and I held out my hand. "Surely we part as friends, and I may hope that you will intercede in my behalf with Mrs. Brennan?"

She rose up impulsively.

"How ridiculous; how supremely ridiculous! Why, of course I will, though I don't suppose Edith really cares very much, but she believed it would be highly proper to be shocked. I don't think she likes you so very well anyway, Captain Wayne, for she never will talk about you."

With these cheering words ringing in my ears, and feeling thoroughly defeated in every cherished hope, I strode savagely down the long hill and mounted my horse. How roughly fortune had suffeted me, to be sure, and how extremely small the inspiration left. Well, perhaps I deserved it for ever permitting myself to love one whom I knew to be the wife of another. Doubtless she had seized upon this slight pretext to be rid of me, and was already rejoicing over its easy accomplishment.

In my agitation I forgot entirely the presence of Maria Bungay at the house, and ordering my men into saddle prepared for departure without giving a thought to the little fellow and his domestic troubles. I chose the road leading toward the northwest, for although I had not asked the question I conceived it highly probable that Brennan and his party would ride from the Federal calvary quarters at Colter's Church, and I had no desire to meet them. They were upon an errand of mercy of far greater importance than my revenge.

As we swung along through the heavily timbered land fringing our road, Bungay pressed his mule into a trot and finally succeeded in ranging up at my side. Even in my disturbed mental condition I was amused at his unique style of riding, although I would not wound him by laughing.

Wonderful Luck.

Rook—Taylor was always a fortunate man, but doesn't it seem wonderful that his luck should stay with him to the very last?

Raleigh—How was that?

Rook—Why, he was operated on for the removal of a pearl which he had accidentally swallowed while eating oysters, and when the pearl was examined it was found to be valuable enough to pay for both the operation and the funeral.—Pathfinder.

IN MATCHTOWN.

Fortunately no Faith Was Required, For She Had None.

"I had no faith whatever, but on the advice of a hale, hearty old gentleman who spoke from experience, I began to use Grape-Nuts about 2 years ago," writes an Ohio woman, who says she is 40, is known to be fair, and admits that she is growing plump on the new diet.

"I shall not try to tell you how I suffered for years from a deranged stomach that rejected almost all sorts of food, and digested what little was forced upon it only at the cost of great distress and pain.

"I was treated by many different doctors and they gave me many different medicines, and I even spent several years in exile from my home, thinking change of scene might do me good. You may judge of the gravity of my condition when I tell you I was sometimes compelled to use morphine for weeks at a time.

"For two years I have eaten Grape-Nuts food at least twice a day and I can now say that I have perfect health. I have taken no medicine in that time—Grape-Nuts has done it all. I can eat absolutely anything I wish, without stomach distress.

"I am a business woman and can walk my 2 or 3 miles a day and feel better for doing so. I have to use brains in my work, and it is remarkable how quick, alert and tireless my mental powers have become." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

The Better Part.

A certain woman went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and it chanced that her gown was not fully buttoned up in the back. Now, a priest and a Levite, meeting the woman and perceiving her plight, passed by on the other side, without saying a word. But a certain Samaritan, journeyed that way, was touched with compassion.

"Madam," quoth he, "your ha—hub—"

"Sir?" the woman thereupon exclaimed and gave him a look which froze him on the spot.

When it appears that discretion is the better part of valor.—Puck.

No Claim for Reciprocation.

Jack Reeves tells this on Felix McCarthy, who used to drive a night hack before he retired to the presidency of a refectory, where the goods are sold from the wood:

"I didn't see you at Murphy's funeral," said an acquaintance to McCarthy. "What's the reason you didn't go?"

"Why should I?" returned McCarthy, somewhat touchily. "Sure, Murphy niver attended my funeral."—New York Telegraph.

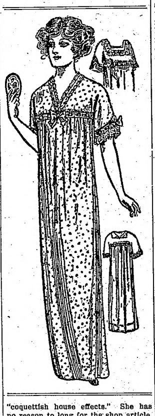
WOMAN'S SPHERE

MAKING DAINTY BITS

WOMAN WITH TASTE AND SKILL TO BE ENVIED.

Quite Clever Thing to Know How to Add Touches Which Produce What Is Generally Called "Coquettish House Effects."

Happy the woman who knows the art of the needle, if she also has taste, and ardently desires those mysterious evolutions of dress known to the newspaper advertisement as "coquettish house effects." She has no reason to long for the shop article, for she can copy it for a third of the cost and go it one better in individual sweetness. She has the grace for finding the choicest bargains, the daintiest bits of lace, the most unique embroideries. Practice perfects her in her chosen trade, delight and patience are her handmaidens—and when she is all through she has the satisfaction of knowing that she is a genuine daughter of fashion.



For it is quite a clever thing—will you believe it?—to know how to make the dantier articles of dress, those dainty flummeries in underwear which are so satisfactory to see and wear, the house-gown beautiful, the negligee which makes the bedroom and getting up agreeable.

The negligee or semi-dressy thing which makes some pretense of being a dress, or the house-gown which suggests the tea-gown, is much more in evidence now than the old shapeless wrapper. Some style is chosen for long, gracious lines, the very high waist of another finds favor and the open neck and drooping collar, deep and clinging, are everywhere admired and exploited. Only the unstarched lingerie materials are used, or else silks, satins and wools of much softness and lightness.

Behold a frivolity of this especial sort in our illustration, the hybrid thing between nightdress and slip-on, and which may be distinctly either or both at the same time. For the nightgown made in this style is often of some colored cotton, figured, striped, dotted or plain; the wrapper in the same materials will only be distinguished from it by a specially deep hem, or by some slight trimming of the skirt edge. This model then is useful for both garments, for the skirt has quite a proper fullness as well as the nightgown plainness, and with pointed or square neck it will do for all the intimate little summer wrappers and fixy nighties in lingerie amterials. At the same time, made with higher neck and with longer flowing sleeves, the design is admirable for the convalescing mother, who needs something loose and yet protective. Cashmere, flannel and albatross are proper wrapper materials for the present season, and with any one of these ribbon bands, torchon laces and such simple stitchery as faggotting and French knots go beautifully.

Concerning all of these affairs, or any others for house use, a hand finish gives a much more dainty look than if the entire garment were made by hand. There is endless latitude, too, in the choice of ribbons, and with the right matching of a color a very smart look can be obtained with cheap flowered ribbons, or those with striped borders. Worn with any color under the sun black velvet and satin ribbons are forever stylish.

MARY DEAN.

FOR FAIR LADY'S JEWELRY

Just Give Her Box That Has Been Taught to Know Its Own Mistress.

The invention of a jewel case which growls like a big dog for eight hours, if so much as flickered with a duster, sounds a mingled blessing. Although it would certainly deter thieves, and induce unwary members of that fraternity to put it down more hastily than they took it up, the nerves of the owner must be considered.

The growling, it is true, can be stopped by opening the box and setting a lever within, but when one wanted, perhaps, a small brooch, it would surely make one do without it rather than have the nerve-racking experience of going to a jewel case which had to be opened and argued with before it would stop growling like a mastiff, for the lever naturally has to be inside, or it would defeat its own purpose.

In a hotel, too, life would be most exciting for the owner of such a jewel box, for when she wanted to get her jewels, the box, promptly fulfilling its functions, would bring the entire hotel staff racing to the spot, with an interested crowd of hotel guests in their wake.

By the time this had happened once or twice before dinner in the evening, the noise would be so well known, and the hotel staff would be in such a bad temper with it, that thieves might set it going with impunity, and let it go while they smashed it open.

The idea, however, is very ingenious, and if only the box could be taught to know its mistress from a burglar, there would be nothing left to desire.

INDIVIDUALITY IN A GOWN

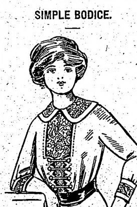
Touch of Color at Hands of Girl Who Has Artistic Sense Does the Trick.

Nine times out of ten it is the little touch of clear, vivid color, used exactly in the right place, that will give the note of individuality to a gown as nothing else will! And this color touch—also nine times out of ten—is a thing to be given by the deft fingers of the girl who is cultivating a sense of artistic effect as regards her own clothes.

The exquisite and dainty neckwear and sash effects give many opportunities for unhackneyed and orginal ways of bringing out this note of emphasis. Of a length of lustrous crepe de chine, hemstitched with heavy silk in a contrasting color all the way around and pressed in tiny, even plaits, a jabot of most attractive sort can be made. After plaiting it is simly folded lengthwise, not quite in the middle, so that the handwork on the longer under plaits can be seen. To vary this a girl of clever facility made for herself the prettiest of jabot trifles by making the hem of a contrasting tint. She had one of white and pinky lavender with a baby Irish butterfly to fasten at top, and she had another of black crepe de chine with a hem of golden brown in which the faggoting stitch joining hem to body of the jabot was of gold.

On a jabot of soft ecru lace this same girl gave "the color touch" by two tiny bows of dark green velvet ribbon and a band of the same which connected the two, one of them being at the top of the jabot and the other about five inches below it. In the center of each bow and studded along the ribbon were square buttons of steel.

SIMPLE BODICE.



This is a suitable style for cashmere or any fine woolen material; the pattern is Magyar, open in front to show a vest of fancy silk; the lower part of material fronts is cut in scallops each side, which are connected by straps of silk and silk covered buttons. The collar and deep cuffs are of the fancy silk bound with material; a deep waist-band of satin is worn.

HAVE YOU SUSPECTED YOUR KIDNEYS?

There are two ways to tell whether you have weak kidneys.

The first is through the pains in the back and other outward signs. The second is by examination of the kidney secretions.

That is why physicians make such a careful examination when you apply for insurance, and if there is any sign of kidney trouble you are surely rejected.

Kidney disease is so dangerous that it is a bad mistake to overlook or neglect it, and if pain in the back, recurring headaches, or a fretful, nervous, tired condition makes you suspect some kidney trouble, take the trouble to watch the kidney secretions. Look for any of the following signs:

More or less than three and one half pints passed daily.
Too dark or too pale a color.
Passages too frequent, profuse, or much reduced, or scalding and painful.
Sandy, gritty or cloudy settlings.
Fat or oily-looking layer which gathers on the surface when allowed to stand, or a jelly-like thickening.
Staining of the linen or bad odor.

Temporary changes may occur for a time from things eaten, but if the changed appearance continues, your kidneys are out of order and need help. Neglect may prove serious.

Doan's Kidney Pills correct and regulate the kidney secretions, stimulate and heal sick kidneys, and thereby drive away backache, rheumatic pain, nervousness, dizziness, bloating and other results of kidney disease.

The following case is typical of the cures effected by Doan's Kidney Pills. Grateful testimony is the best evidence.

SAVED AT THE CRISIS.

Cured After Doctors Gave Up Hope

H. R. Hatch, 2576 Cedar Street, Everett, Washington, says: "I doubt if anyone ever suffered more than I did from kidney trouble. I endured the greatest agony anyone can imagine. My back so bad I could hardly walk. The least jar was or sudden misstep caused sharp twinges through my loins that fairly made me groan. I dreaded to stoop for I knew what I had to suffer when I straightened. At times the kidney secretions passed much too freely, while again there was a marked retention. The secretions were almost like blood, offensive in odor and terribly painful in passage. I treated with several physicians and consulted two specialists in Seattle and one in Tacoma. They all told me I had Bright's disease and could expect to live only a short time. Finally I began using Doan's Kidney Pills on a friend's advice, and to my surprise, I received prompt relief. I continued and was completely cured. Though 75 years of age, I am as supple and active as any man in the country."

THE SAFE LAXATIVE FOR ELDERLY PEOPLE

Most elderly people are more or less troubled with a chronic, persistent constipation, due largely to lack of sufficient exercise. They experience difficulty in digesting even light food, with a consequent belching of stomach gases, drowsiness after eating, headache and a feeling of lassitude and general discomfort.

Doctors advise against cathartics and violent purgatives of every kind, recommending a mild, gentle laxative tonic, like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, to effect relief without disturbing the entire system.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the perfect laxative, easy in action, certain in effect and, withal, pleasant to the taste. It possesses tonic properties that strengthen the stomach, liver and bowels and is a remedy that has been for years the great standby in thousands of families, and should be in every family medicine chest. It is equally as valuable for children as for older people.

Druggists everywhere sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If you have never tried it send your name and address to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and he will be very glad to send a sample bottle for trial.

Simply Blushing.

A Gillman man, it is related, has a very red nose, and recently a very inquisitive person said to him: "Please don't take offense, but I'm curious to know why your nose is always red?" And this is the reply the inquisitive got: "My nose is merely blushing with pride over the fact that it has never butted into any one's business."—Fort Smith Times-Record.

Uncle Sam's Representative.

Senator John Sharp Williams tells of a negro lad in a southern town who was not the least zealous of Uncle Sam's servants. One day when the mail bag for that town was thrown from the train the pouch was caught up by this diminutive courier, who started off, as was his wont, on a brisk trot to the postoffice.

As he was rounding a corner of the station he encountered a larger boy, with the result that the little courier was upset. When the latter got up and readjusted himself he turned upon the other exclaiming:

"Look heah! Yo' wants to be keerful 'bout dis chile! When yo' jars me yo' jars de gov'ment of de United States. I carries de mail!"

A LEAKAGE THAT CAN BE EASILY STOPPED.

How many people who read this article, realize the weighty influence of one little necessity of life—baking powder—on the cost of living.

Yet it is a leakage that can easily be stopped if the housewife will only pay a little more attention to the choice of her baking powder. Some think there is economy in buying the cheap "Big Can" Baking Powders. These Baking Powders are not always uniform, and sometimes produce failures in the baking, and the result is that more is lost in one or two spoiled bakings than you spend on baking powder in the whole year. The cheap "Big Can" Baking Powders should be avoided.

On the other hand, many housewives feel that a baking powder is of no value unless they pay 50 cents a pound for it—the price charged for the high priced "Trust" brands. This is a mistake, as the best baking powder that can be made can be sold for 25c. per pound if the manufacturer is satisfied with a reasonable profit. There is one brand on the market that meets these requirements. It is CALUMET BAKING POWDER, recommended by leading physicians and chemists; used in millions of homes; and given the Highest Award at the World's Pure Food Exposition.

Now's the Time

—not a year from now, when land will be higher. The profits secured from the abundant crops of Wheat, Oats and Barley, as well as cattle raising, are causing a steady advance in price. Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop.

A GOOD ROADS EDUCATION FOR NATION'S CHILDREN.

Along with educating our young people to get the most out of farming, good roads are the most important things to develop in this country. There is only one way to get them, and that is to tax ourselves for them. Build good bridges. The stone and concrete bridges are the only ones that are really economical to build. Iron and wooden bridges are too short lived.

When things get adjusted the motorcar will take an important place in the work of the nation, It is a good roads advocate.—Farm Progress.

ASPHALT ON MACADAM.

New York Highway Commission to Improve Newburg Roads.

At the annual session of the Newburg board of supervisors last December the New York state highway commission submitted a proposal for paving Cochecton turnpike with brick at the joint expense of the state and county. This method of improvement was strongly urged by County Engineer Smith. The supervisors decided, however, that in view of the state of the county's finances with respect to good roads they could not afford to obligate the county for half the cost of brick paving, and accordingly they tabled the communication from the state commission.

Now the state authorities have decided to wait no longer for the cooperation of the county in improving the road. The state highway commission has prepared plans for macadamizing two or more miles of the turnpike in the Coldenham section, where the condition of the thoroughfare is worst.

The macadam will be given an asphalt surfacing and the result will be a fine stretch of road. The improvement may be later extended and a fine roadway provided all the way between Newburg and Montgomery.

Red Lake County is fast getting to be known as one of the best dairy counties in the state of Minnesota and the immigration agents and Railroad Companies predict that there in this county this comming year 1911 there will be the greatest movement in land with sales principally to actual settlers from southern Minnesota, Iowa Wisconsin, and Illinois that this country has ever seen and they are certainly in position to know whereof they speak.

Elected Officers

Emardville Creamery Ass'n Held Annual Meeting last Monday

The Emardville creamery Association held its annual meeting in the city hall last Monday afternoon, and the following officers were elected to represent the company for the insuing year:

President—David Hagen
Vice President—John Mahla
Secy. & Treas.—A. J. Hemstad
Directors—Oscar Anderson, Sam Lovaas and Anton Lee.

The company reports the year just closed as having been a very favorable one to both the creamery and its patrons. While the past svmmer invoksome draw backs to the dairy industry the increase in patronage to the institution mines than off-sets the deficit and the creamery has found very well as a result.

Elect Officers.

The Deer Park Telephone Company held their annual meeting last Monday at the place of John L. Rodencki, and about half of the share holders were present. The old board was reelected for the insuing year as follows: President, John L. Rodnecki; vice president, Pete Gustafson; secretary, Julius Olson, treasurer, W. A. Swanson; general manager Aug. J. Lillo, and W. A. Swanson was also put in as the authorized collector for the company. Hereafter all share holders that have phones must report at the end of each month to the treasurer, as to the amount of money they take in from non share holders and others. The new board is to meet at the place of John L. Rodencki on Monday January 22nd at 1 o'clock p. m. to make arrangments for by-laws, rules regulations, etc,

Masque Ball

To Be Held at the City Hall Friday evening, Jan. 26.

The next of the many social events held in Plummer this winter will be a masquerade ball to be given Friday evening, Jan. 26, at the city hall. Liberal prizes will be given for the best dressed couple and the poorest dressed couple. This is the first masque ball to be given in the new city hall, and that spacious room combined with the good floor is an assurence of a good crowd in attendance for that evening. The affair will be advertised extensively and a large crowd is expected from the surrounding country and for such nearby towns as Brooks, Oklee, Trail and Thief River Falls. A good time is assured those who desire to attend and to make it a hummer everyone should make it a point to inform their friends who would likely desire to attend. The music will be furnished by the Lillo orchestra and supper will be served at the Hotel Scotland. For futher particulars see bills.

Mrs. Jacobson Funeral.

The last sad rites of the late Mrs. Edwin Jacobson who died last Thurs day at one o'clock was held at the Luthern church south of this place last Wednesday morning and the remains laid to rest in the Emardville cemetery. The Rev. Kolstoe conducted the services and delivered a very impressive sermon in behalf of the deceased and the unfortunates who remain to mourn her loss. Mr. Jacobson has the sympathy of the entire community in his hour of sorrow.

Miss Manda Medchell returned Sunday morning from Winthrop, Minn., accompanied by the two young daughters of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Gundrun Medchell, who will remain at the P. S. Medchell home here unti the condition of Mrs. Medchell, who is at present at a hosptial in the Twin Cities, improves sufficently so that she will be able to return home. Mrs. Medchell has had two operations, and at first it was feared that it would be difficult for her to withstand them in her weakened condition, but reports are to the effect that she is at present getting along nicely.

Thief River Falls has organized an athletic association. For a town of its size Thief River should have had an organisation of this a long time ago.

New Survey is Made.

Thief River Ealls Interested in Work of Crew There.

There has been so many railway construction rumors in the last few months that the actions of a large surveying crew at work in Red Lake and Pennington counties for a week past has been sufficient to set the whole population agog with excitement. Just what the party's intentions are cannot be learned, as no one can tell what road the engineers represent,

More rumors, with apparently the best of foundation for their truth, aver that the Minneapolis & St Louis is again examining Thief River Falls and the surrounding territory, with a view of making that city one their principal division points. Antoher rumor has it, that that road will build next summer from the Twin Cities to Winnipeg. That railway's engineer made Thief River Falls their headquarters for three weeks while they surveyed the country north and south and to the east.—Crookston Times.

Play Thief River

Plummer Basket Ball Team to Play New Organization Friday.

The local basket ballteam have almost completed arrangements for a game with the team from the newly organized athletic club at Thief River and expect to go up to that place next Friday evening. The new organization has not been in existance very long and this is to be their initial game with any out-of-town team.

Manager Rice of the local team have been promised a game with the Erskine quintette but the date of the game has not as yet been definitely arranged.

Proofs upon all lands filed upon previous to March 26, 1906, will have to be presented to the United States land office before March 26, 1912. Proofs on land filed upon after March 6, 1906, must be made within six years from the date of filing. These orders apply to lands on the Eleven Towns only, and are issued by order of the Interior department.

The proper care of cream during the winter should be a compartively easy task, for throughout most of the dairy districts nature furnishes gratis one of the important factors in the proper preservation and handling of cream namely, COLD. In spite of this fact there is produced a large proportion of poor cream at that season of the year. The reason no doubt lies in the fact that the cold provided by nature is not properly utilized and in the future fact that the cows are not always kept clean and in suitable surroundings during the stabling season. Infrequent delivery of cream is also responsible for many defects in winter dairy products.

Certain butter flavors, such as wintry, barny, tallowy, and stale, appear so often and so regularly during the cold season that they have been collectively named wintry defects. Most if not all, of such defects are wholly unnecessary and are easily avoided if the proper means are used in handling the dairy herd and the product is suitably cared for. Some of the causes of such defects are unclean cows, unclean, ill-ventilated stables, unclean milkers unclean dairy utensils, and lack of succulent feed for the cattle, all of which should be especially avoided. It is also necessary to produce good butter during the winter that the milk be removed from the stable immediately after milking and separrted at once; that the cream be thoroughly cooled without delay and that warm cream be cooled to the temperature of other cream before they are mixed. Care should be taken to prevent cream from freezing and deliveries should be made to the creamery while it is fresh as stale cream, especially in winter, is a frequent source of faulty butter.

Wichterman - Pahlen

Miss Alyce Wichterman and John Pahlen United in Marriage Wednesday.

Last Wednesday morning at 6 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Wichterman of this place, occurred the marriage of their daughter Miss Alyce May to Mr. John W. Pahlen, the Fr. La Flock, of Bemidji, uniting the young couple in the holy bonds of matrimony. Only relatives of the contracting parties were present to view the ceremonies and to partake in the sumptious wedding breakfast served after the services. The happy couple departed on the 7:30 Soo train for Bemidji and other points in Minnesota on a couple of week's honeymoon trip and expect to be at home to their friends here after February 5th.

The news of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Pahlen came as a pleasant surprise to many of their friends here who were unaware of the approaching happy event, and who will rejoice in the opportunity of extending congratulations and wishes of happiness and prosperity in abundance during their married life.

Both are among the popular set of our village; the bride who has made her home here with her parents has by her charming qualities won a large circle of admiring friends. C. M. West, a land seeker from Iowa came here last summer to invest in land and was induced by some of the land boomers of northwestern Canada to go here and investigate. He went, spent three months in examining the merits and demerits of what he was told was "the finest farming region of the world," and returned, utterly sick of everything in the vast territory. He said the soil is probably as good as anywhere, there is no timber, the water is unfit to drink and scarce, it is so sparsely settled that a neighbor twenty miles away is a near neighbor, building material is inordinately high and hard to get, and crops, when gathered, are hardly worth the cost of threshing and hauling to market. I have returned fully satisfied with northern Minnesota and am going to invest what I have left in a farm where the rainfall is sufficient and frost does not fall every month in the year."—Cass Lake Times.

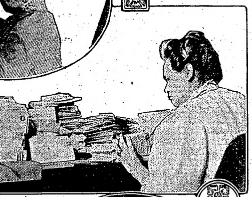
ODD DUTIES OF UNCLE SAM'S WOMEN CLERKS

YOU have read many times, if you will recall, that a large share of the work of administering Uncle Sam's business at Washington is in the hands of women. To be sure, none of the most conspicuous executive positions such as those of the president and the heads of the various departments are yet held by members of the fair sex—although they may be some day if this suffrage wave continues to roll forward. All the same, many of the most responsible subordinate positions are in the hands of women—married women, single women and widows—and about half of the thousands upon thousands of federal employes who are engaged in clerical work are women.

Many of Uncle Sam's feminine assistants perform tasks that are not one whit different from those which fall to the lot of their sisters who can earn their own livelihood in the modern business world. For instance, they operate typewriters or manage telephone switchboards or do any other one of a dozen tasks common to every community in this busy age. On the other hand, however, Uncle Sam has on his payroll a number of women who have odd duties. Some of the tasks, indeed, are so novel, that Uncle Sam had to train his own workers for their performance and there are, scattered here and there in the ranks of the army of feminine workers, women experts or specialists who have absolutely unique vocations—mistresses of their crafts who have no rivals anywhere in the world.

UNCLE SAM'S FAMOUS "MANUSCRIPT DOCTOR"

ONE OF UNCLE SAM'S WOMEN BOOK-BINDERS



DECIPHERING PUZZLING ADDRESSES ON LETTERS

WOMEN CLERKS AT THE DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE

GUMMING SHEETS OF POSTAGE STAMPS

FEMININE WORKER MAKING CURRENCY OR PAPER MONEY

For instance, there is a woman in the employ of the department of state who stands pre-eminent as a "manuscript doctor" or "manuscript surgeon." Never heard of such a thing, did you? Well, it is a very important line of work for all that there is not a wide market for her services and it is a form of endeavor that is almost invaluable to Uncle Sam, who likes to preserve intact all the historical manuscripts and documents which have had a bearing upon the history of our nation. Before the government had recourse to the services of this "restorer" many of the most valuable documents (treaties, presidential proclamations, etc.) were fast going to ruin. Age, handling, and frequent foldings that broke the paper had, indeed, already played havoc with many a precious relic. After this ingenious woman took hold she accomplished wonders in mending the ravages of time. She patched and pasted and smoothed out wrinkles and the result is that many of these treasured mementoes are, to all appearances, literally as good as new.

A very interesting line of work in which Uncle Sam has recruited a corps of especially adept women workers is fine book binding. In ordinary practice most bookbinding nowadays is done by machinery. That is the way it is done at the government printing office where there is maintained one of the biggest bookbinding plants in the country. However, the government has some books that it desires to have bound with the costliest materials and with greater care than can be bestowed upon the machine-made product. This hand-work is performed for the most part by women and some of the morocco-bound volumes which they have turned out in recent years would arouse all sorts of enthusiasm were they to be exhibited at any of those expositions of women's handicraft which are held from time to time.

The whole process of making Uncle Sam's paper money and postage stamps is full of odd tasks and many of them are performed by women. The women—hundreds of them—assist in printing the precious product and they have an ideal field in which to develop their superior deftness of fingering in the counting and recounting of the money in the making. The newly-printed currency is counted no less than half a hundred times ere Uncle Sam sends it out to the people, and women do most of this enumeration. They also examine the sheets of money and stamps for the tiny defects of printing, and this requires a keenness of vision almost unbelievable in its accuracy.

When the soiled currency, tattered and torn, is sent back to Uncle Sam as unfit for further usefulness, it is other women at the treasury department who have to count it and check up the returns. Connected with this office—the redemption division, are a few women whose work is perhaps the most miraculous of all the wonder-tasks performed by the women at Washington. Their forte is to identify the denomination of partially destroyed bills which no ordinary individual would regard as anything more than waste paper. Currency that has been chewed by dogs, notes that have been torn into bits and even charred paper money that has been all but consumed by the flames is taken in hand by these wizards and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they manage to ascertain the denomination of the damaged bit of pulp or paper and Uncle Sam reimburses the unfortunate owner.

In line with the detective work of these money sleuths is the intuition (you cannot call it anything less) of the so-called "blind readers" of the United States postoffice department. These women are made the wardens of the waifs of the mails—the letters that no postmaster or letter carrier can deliver because, try as they may, they cannot make out the name or address of the persons for whom they are intended. Sometimes the difficulty is simple, being merely caused by misspelling, but more often the puzzling letter originates with some person whose education is deficient or has been sent by a resident of a foreign country who could not get through his head our American system of towns and counties and states and who mixes things up so that no ordinary individual could make head or tail out of the hodge-podge. The "blind readers" take these puzzles and by a magic which comes from experience and which they cannot themselves explain they decipher the writing and set the letter on its way to the proper destination.

Uncle Sam has a number of very clever women artists on his roster and though you may never have heard the names of any of them you have, most of you, seen and admired the work they do. For one thing they paint those splendidly realistic pictures of fruit and birds and insects, etc., which are reproduced in color in the publications of the department of agriculture. Some of these women are experts in the coloring of magic lantern slides and you know Uncle Sam has come to use lantern slides and moving pictures very extensively in order to educate the people regarding the work he is doing in their behalf. Finally these women have shown their skill in coloring the huge transparencies of American scenery which Uncle Sam has exhibited at every one of the big expositions held in this country in some years past.

Entitled to recognition along with these artists is Uncle Sam's woman sculptor. Mrs. Otto Heidemann is a portrait sculptor of no mean ability, as is amply attested by her recently-completed bust of Clara Barton, the founder of the Red Cross society. However, her work for Uncle Sam is confined to the odd occupation of making models of bugs. These reproductions of insects are many times as large as the insects themselves—a common house fly being represented as much larger than a man's head and there is consequently opportunity for the utmost accuracy of detail and coloring. The counterfeit bugs of giant size are made from wire, thread, wax, celluloid, papier-mache, rubber and a special kind of gauze, and despite the frail appearance of the figures it has been found that they are really very stanch and will well withstand the shocks incident to shipment from place to place.

Among other odd jobs in the government service held by women are those of two "waste basket examiners" at the treasury department. These women are paid $480 a year each just to pull over the scraps of paper, red tape and other discarded articles that find their way into the waste baskets in the biggest of financial institutions. As Uncle Sam receives $1,600 a year for the waste paper that they sort over he can well afford to pay them for their odd sorting of refuse, but there is another and better reason and one that makes it an economy instead of an extravagance. The real object of this supervision of the waste baskets is to guard against the loss of money or valuable papers that might inadvertently slip into the baskets. And that this is no idle precaution, either, is eloquently proven by the fact that not so very long ago one of these women recovered $10,000 from a waste basket one evening. A woman with a decidedly odd job is Mrs. Leroy, who is employed in the land office and who received $1,200 a year for simply signing the name of William H. Taft, all day long, every working day in the week. The law requires that the signature of the president shall appear on every land patent. Of course the chief magistrate cannot sign all these papers in person. If he did he would not have time for anything else. So the lady at the land office acts as his proxy and gets a tidy salary for the monotonous work. The highest salaried woman in the federal service (or probably in the service of any republic on earth) is Mrs. Margaret V. Kelly, who is examiner of the United States mints and who receives the fancy salary of $3,000 a year. She deserves it, however, because she has spent many years in the mint bureau and probably knows more about the administration of Uncle Sam's coin factories than any other living person.

Mr. Howells and Reporters

Mr. Howells does not shun publicity, and he gets his share of it. He says he used formerly greatly to enjoy favorable press notices of his books and owns to having carried them about like love letters. Having once been a newspaper man, he has a soft place in his heart for the reporter. A journalist who sought an interview with him not long ago received this reply:

"What there is left of me to be interviewed is at your service."

Discriminating readers who have felt the charm of "A Modern Instance" and have sympathized with the mute yearnings of "Silas Lapham," enjoy reading a newspaper page in which Mr. Howells talks of his work, and they see nothing immodest in it. The present writer never could understand why so many modern writers so obviously affect to ignore their own work and refrain from speaking about it, for nearly all writers are proud of their literary performances and of whatever distinction they may have gained.

Stevenson had no timidities of this sort. "I know what pleasure is," he says frankly, "for I have done good work." He was a proud man, but not a vain one. The silly statement made by W. E. Henley that Stevenson could not pass a mirror without looking into it proceeded from a heart full of the jealously or art. Stevenson was not a much photographed man, but I have seen an album of pictures of him taken amid various scenes, and in none of them was there anything like pose. In many of the photographs his head is modestly lowered and his eyes are on the ground or otherwise averted. Where he appears in a group you would hardly single him out as the person whom the photographer most wished to present.

PAVING THE WAY.

"Who is the man to whom you just bowed?"

"A coal dealer."

"You were extremely polite. You must owe him money."

"Not yet, but I hope to soon."

PAPER BAG COOKING

WONDER-WORKING SYSTEM PERFECTED BY M. SOYER, WORLD'S GREATEST LIVING CHEF

GENERAL DIRECTIONS FOR PAPER BAG COOKING.

By M. Soyer, Chef of Brooks' Club, London.

I do not claim for the paper-bag system of cookery that it can cook everything. It is evident that tea must still be made in the teapot. Generally speaking, we may waive our claim to having mastered the difficulty with respect to soups, although I have made beef tea with excellent results. The following is a list of articles that may in the meantime be avoided:

Soup (except beef tea), omelette, scrambled eggs, jam (except in small quantities), Scotch kale, beans, cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, artichokes, macaroni or kindred Italian pastes.

The success of the system depends entirely upon how it is carried out. Good cooking requires time, care, attention to detail, taste and a temperature suited to the particular dish being cooked. While the paper-bag

The Oven.

Practically any oven will do. Paper-bag cookery is as well suited to a gas stove as it is to a coal oven, an electricity cooker or oil stove, always provided the necessary heat is secured. The size of the oven makes no difference to the cooking, only to the size of the article.

Before placing the bag with its contents into a gas oven, the gas should be lighted at least eight minutes beforehand. The average oven heat should not be less than 200 degrees Fahrenheit, and when the bag is put into the oven this ought to be reduced in eight minutes after to 170 degrees. To find out the correct degree a thermometer, of course, is the most accurate method; but experience will soon teach the cook what is required, and the color assumed by a piece of paper placed in the oven will at once tell whether it is too hot or too cold.

In the case of coal-heated stoves with solid shelves a wire broiler should be used. This should be placed on the shelf with the bag containing the food. It is necessary to emphasize the fact that, except in the case of pies, no dish should be used.

How to Know when the Food is Cooked.

If the time-table is adhered to, the bag may be taken out of the oven in confidence that the food is well cooked. But if from any cause the heat declines, it is very easy to find out whether the food is properly cooked. Except in the case of vegetables, a little hole can be made in the bag by which the food can be seen and judged as to whether it is cooked or not. This will not militate against the cooking of the food in the slightest. In many articles, however, a slight touch of the bag will indicate to an ordinary cook whether the bag is ready to be served. A prick with a needle is another method that may be adopted. But a peculiarly favorable feature of paper-bag cookery is that if the food is left five or ten minutes in the bag in the oven longer than the specified time on my table, the food will not be spoiled. There is little chance of over-cooking.

Dangers to Be Avoided.

Cooking generally has its dangers, like other occupations. It is the beauty of this system that the dangers are reduced to a minimum. One does not require every now and then to open the oven door "to see how the roast is getting on." The oven is doing its work, because the whole force of the heat is playing upon the bag and ensuring every part of the food being properly penetrated. Nevertheless, care should be exercised when opening the oven.

Care, again, should be exercised in taking the bag out of the oven. A plate should be placed gently under the bag about a couple of inches, and the bag drawn completely on to the plate with the fingers. The bag should be ripped open from the top and the fragments thrown at once away.

A PAPER BAG DINNER.

Roast Beef, Round, Ribs, or Sirloin.—Grease well with drippings, but do not season. Put in bag, lay on a wire broiler, and cook in a moderate oven. For a three-pound joint allow forty-five minutes; for seven-pound, one hour and twenty minutes.

Lima Beans.—Take a quart of Lima beans, add two ounces of butter, four ounces of diced ham, a little sugar and salt, a good teaspoonful of flour, and a few sweet herbs to taste. Put in a paper bag with half a pint of water, seal up, and cook for an hour in a moderate oven.

Baked Potatoes.—Thoroughly wash twelve good-sized potatoes. Make a few small slits in them, but do not peel. Place in a paper bag, with one tablespoonful of water. Seal and cook thirty-five to fifty minutes, according to size.

Tomatoes.—Place six tomatoes in boiling water for twenty-five seconds. Peel, butter your paper bag, put in tomatoes with salt, pepper, a suspicion of sugar, and a small piece of butter. Put the bag on the broiler after sealing, and cook for twelve minutes in a hot oven.

Apples a la Duchesse.—Wash and dry ten large apples. Core them, put stick-cinnamon—only a bit—in the place of each core, and pour over them a tablespoonful of rum. Put in a buttered bag, and bake on the broiler thirty minutes. When quite done, dish up, remove the cinnamon, and fill the centers with jam—strawberry, raspberry, or apricot. Cover with stiffly whipped cream, sprinkle with chopped nuts, and serve, or set on ice till wanted. Use sweet apples and let them cool before adding the jam and cream.

Light the gas range eight minutes before beginning to cook, or open the draughts so the coal range will be hot. Put the roast on first, upon the lowest shelf. Put the apples upon the upper shelf, so as to leave room for the tomatoes beside them. As soon as the tomatoes are done, remove, set the bag in a plate, and stand where it will keep hot. Put the Lima beans in the vacant place—and when the apples are done, remove them and put on the potatoes. Thus, you will be able to have the cooking come out even, also to chill and season your apples before sitting down to table.

My Paper Bag Cooking Experiments

By Martha McCulloch Williams.

When Soyer's paper bag method of cooking was first brought to my attention by friends, who, rightly or wrongly, seem to have a high opinion of my abilities as a cook, I admit that I was skeptical of its practicability. Indeed, I was more than that—I was rather firm in my belief that it could not prove out. But I was induced to put the system to a trial—and, lo and behold!—the very first trial made me an enthusiastic follower of M. Soyer. Since then I have been doing all my cooking by the Soyer method, and each succeeding day more than ever convinces me that any woman, simply by following Soyer's general directions, and using that good common sense and care which are essential to all good cooking, can master the Soyer paper bag method of cooking in a very short time, and will find it a great boon both to herself and to all the members of her household.

Following M. Soyer's general directions for paper bag cookery, I speedily learned that there are sundry commandments to be observed while pursuing his method of cooking.

The first and greatest of these is to get the right bag, which is made specially for cooking, is parafined, odorless even when crumbly-crisp, sanitary and to be had in sizes big enough to hold a Thanksgiving turkey, or tiny enough for a single chop.

Next, nearly as important, is to grease the bag inside liberally, using butter, lard, oil, drippings or a very fat rind of bacon.

Further, proportion your bag-size to what it is destined to hold. The closer the fit of bag and contents, the better, and the more even and compact the lay of the food, the less trouble in handling.

Use a footed wire broiler, or very open grid-shelf, in the oven. All paper bag cooking is done in the oven. If a gas oven, it must be lighted eight to ten minutes before putting in the food and kept at blazing heat until the bag corners scorch lightly; then slacken the heat a third or even half throughout the rest of the time of cooking.

Be sure to lay the bags in the oven with the seam uppermost, especially if water has been put inside. Seams will steam open now and then—if the opening is downward there will be a leakage and much bother.

Finally, it is important to remember that all manipulation, seasoning and flavoring of food must be attended to before it is put in bags. There can be no stirring or tossing in the course of paper bag cooking. Nor must a bag be opened at any time during cooking; such action is absolutely unnecessary if directions are faithfully followed.

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan, recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail, and arriving at the Minor place, Wayne meets Miss Minor and Mrs. Bungay, and later Edith appears.

"I say, Cap," he said, jerking the words out to the mule's hard trot, and grasping his saddle pommel desperately, "I sorter reckon as how ther'll be some fun back thar afore long 'less all signs fail."

"Why?" I stared at him, now thoroughly aroused to the thought that he had important news to communicate.

"Wal," he explained slowly, "whin ye wint off, I sorter tuk a notion ter look 'bout a bit. Used ter be an ol' stompin' ground o' mine. So Dutchy an' me clumb thet big hill back o' whar we halted, and' by gum, down thar in ther gully on t' other side thar's a durned big camp o' fellers."

I reined up short, and with uplifted hand signalled the men behind to halt.

"Why didn't you tell me this before?" I questioned sternly. "How many were there? and what did they look like?"

He scratched the back of his head thoughtfully, and answered with careful deliberation. "Durn it, I didn't jine ye till after y'd started, an' I reckon as how it took me all o' tew mile ter git this yere blame muel up ter whar I cud talk. Thar's quite a smart bunch, but they had some pickets out, an' I cudn't git close 'nough ter tell zackly. Dutchy thought thar wus nigh onter two hundred o' 'em, but I jist don't know. They wusn't dressed like sojers o' either army, an' I reckon they're out o' ther hills."

I glanced at my little handful of men, scarcely knowing what decision it might be wise to make. Undoubtedly they would fight if occasion arose, but the odds were terribly heavy; besides, if Brennan came, and his party got away that same evening, as was planned for them to do, then it might not be necessary for us to strike a blow. I was certainly in no mood to expose my small command merely to save the empty house from destruction.

"Ebers," I said, turning toward the Sergeant, who sat his horse with expressionless face, "you were with the guide when he discovered this camp. How many do you think it contained? and who were they?"

"Vel, dere vos more as two gompanies, Captain, und dere vos some horses, but dey vos dressed—vot you calls it?—all ober not ner same."

"Not in uniform?"

"Dot vos it."

"Have any of the rest of you seen anything that looked suspicious?" I asked, glancing around into the different faces.

"Maybe I did," answered one of the troopers named Earl. "As we rode up the first hill after leaving the house my horse picked up a stone, and I had to stop and get it out. I reckon I fell behind a quarter of a mile or more, and just as I started I looked back, and a party of ten or twelve fellows was just riding in through them big gates onto the front lawn. But them fellows was soldiers for sure; they rode regular like, and all of them wore caps. It was so far off I couldn't tell the color of their clothes, but them caps made me think they was Feds."

I chose my course at once. This undoubtedly must have been Brennan's party.

"Thank you, my man; it would have been better if you had reported that to me at once," I said. "However, I understand the situation much better now. Sergeant, we will go into camp here. Post pickets in both directions, but put your most careful men on that hill yonder. Let them report promptly any signs of fire to the southeast, or any sound of guns."

We completed all our cooking before dark, and when the night finally closed down about us it proved to be an exceedingly black one, although the skies were clear. Sleep was an impossibility for me, as my mind was in constant turmoil.

Ebers was lying next me upon the grass, solemnly puffing at his huge pipe, and I held my watch to the glow in its bowl in order to see the time. It was nearly midnight.

"Those fellows ought to be at it before this," I said to him, "if they intend to accomplish anything tonight."

"I dink so too," he answered slowly. "I vill see dot der guard is all right, an' den vill get some sleep, for I am pretty moch done op already."

He arose ponderously to his feet, and stretched out his short arms in a prodigious yawn. As he stood there, his pudgy figure outlined against the sky, there was borne to our ear the sound of a furious struggle on hilltop to the south—a shout, blows, a volley of cursing, then silence. An instant later we were both running through the darkness toward the scene of trouble.

"What is it, Sands?" I questioned breathlessly, as I came suddenly upon the little group.

"A fellar on hossback," was the answer. "He come up on us like a was surrounded as soon as it became dark. Those devils supposed it to be unguarded, and advanced without precautions. We fired and drove them back. He had repulsed three attacks when I left at eleven, but three of our men were already hit."

"You were after aid?"

"I was striving to reach our advance pickets at McMillan. It seemed the only possible chance, and none of the men would volunteer to make the ride. One was killed trying it before I started. God knows how I hated to leave them, but it had to be done. How many have you?"

"Only twenty; but if we could once get inside along with your fellows, we might hold the house until reinforcements came."

"Thank God! I knew you would!" he cried joyfully, grasping me again fervently by the hand. "You are not one to hesitate over the color of a uniform at such a time as this. Only, Wayne," and he hesitated an instant, "it is right I should tell you that Brennan is there, and in command."

"I know it, but those women must be saved nevertheless," I answered firmly, my mind settled. "This is no time for personal quarreling, and whatever color of cloth we wear those outlaws are our common enemies, to be hunted down like wild beats. I have seen specimens of their fiendish cruelty that make my blood run cold to remember. The very thought of those who are now exposed falling into such hands is enough to craze one; death would be preferable a thousand times. How many fighting men have you?"

"Seven fit for duty."

"Will you ride forward, or go back with us?"

"We must send word"—and the gallant fellow's voice shook—"but God knows, Wayne, I want to go back. If we both live I am to marry Celia Minor."

"I understand," I said gravely. "Ebers, who is your best rider?"

"It vos dot funny leetle vellow Glen, Captain."

"Glen, come here."

The trooper, a mere boy, with freckled face and great honest gray eyes, but wiry and tough as steel, pushed his way through the group and faced me.

"Glen," I said, "your Sergeant tells me you are the best rider in the troop. I am going to intrust you with the most important duty of all. The lives of every one of us and of four helpless women depend entirely upon your riding. You take two horses, kill both if necessary, but stop for nothing until your duty is done. You are to carry a note from me, and another from this gentleman, who is an officer in the Federal army, and deliver them both to the commandant of the first military post you find. Insist upon reaching him in person. It makes no difference which army the post belongs to, for this is a matter of humanity. The Federal outpost at McMillan is the nearest to us; make for there. You understand?"

The boy saluted gravely, all mischief gone from his face.

"I do, sir," he said. "But I'd a darn sight rather stay here and fight."

"You will be back in plenty of time to take a hand, my lad. Now, men"—and I turned to the dark, expectant ring about me—"this is no ordinary duty of your enlistment, and I wish no one to accompany me tonight who does not volunteer for the service. Seven Federal soldiers and four women, three of them Virginians, are attacked at the house we have just left by a large party of bushwhacking guerillas, the offscourings of hell. Every one of you knows what that means. Will you go with me to their rescue?"

No one seemed anxious to be first to speak. I could see them look aside uneasily at one another.

"Bungay," I said, "I feel sure you will go, for your wife is there."

"Mariar?"

"Yes; Miss Minor told me this afternoon, but I had forgotten to mention it."

The little man sprang into the air and came down with a whoop.

"The bloody devils!" he cried excitedly. "Ye bet I'll go."

"Come, Sergeant; speak up; what do you men say?"

"I like not to fight mit der Yankees," he admitted candidly, "but der vomens, py Chiminy, dot vos anoder ting. I vill go, Captain; mein Gott, yaw."

"We're with you, sir," spoke voice after voice gravely around the dark circle, and then Sands added: "We'll show them thar Yanks how the Johnny Rebs kin fight, sir."

Ten minutes later Glen, bearing his two messages to the Blue and Gray, was speedingly recklessly through the black night northward, while my little squad was moving cautiously back over the road we had so lately traversed.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A Mission for Beelzebub.

As we picked our way slowly forward through the gloom I gleaned from Caton all he knew regarding the situation before us. My own knowledge of the environments of the Minor house helped me greatly to appreciate the difficulties to be surmounted. He had succeeded in his escape by dodging among the negro cabins where the attacking line appeared weakest, but expressed the conviction that even this slight gap would be securely closed long before we reached there.

"Have they sufficient men, then, to cover thoroughly all four sides?" I asked.

"To the best of my judgment, there must be fully two hundred and fifty in the gang, and apparently they operate under strict military discipline. It is a revelation to me, Wayne, of the growing power of these desperate fellows. I knew they were becoming numerous and bold, but this surpasses anything I could imagine. More, they are being constantly recruited by new arrivals. A party of at least a dozen came in while I was hiding behind the stables. I heard them asking for the leader."

"What did they call him?"

"Lory, or Laurie, or something like that. They claimed to be deserters from Lee's army, but two or three of them wore our uniforms."

"It's Red Lowrie," I said gravely, more impressed than ever with the seriousness of the situation. "I heard of him two years ago—he killed a man in the Sixth North Carolina, and took to the hills. Since then he has developed into quite a leader for such scum, and has proven himself a merciless monster. You have no suggestion to offer as to how we had better attempt to get in?"

He shook his head despondingly.

"What station does Brennan defend?" I asked.

"The front of the house; the main point of attack has been there."

We could distinguish the sound of firing by this time, and its continuous volume convinced me that Caton's estimate of the number engaged was not greatly overdrawn. As we topped the summit of the hill a great burst of red fire leaped suddenly high into the sky.

"Great God, Wayne! we are too late!" he cried widly. "Those devils have fired the house."

With fiercely throbbing heart I gazed down at the flames far below in the black valley.

"No," I said with eager relief. "It is the stable which is ablaze. See, the light falls full upon the white side of the house. Thank Heaven, we are not too late."

As I sat my horse there, gazing down upon that scene of black rapine, unwilling to venture into its midst until I could formulate some definite plan of action, fully a dozen wild schemes thronged into my brain, only to be cast aside, one after another, as thoroughly impracticable.

"We shall have to make a dash for it, and trust in God," said Caton, guessing at my dilemma.

"No," I answered firmly, "there would be no possibility of success in such a course. Those fellows are old hands, and have pickets out. See, Caton, that is certainly a picket-fire yonder where the road dips. Every man of us would be shot down before we penetrated those guard lines and attained the house. We have got to reach their inner line some way through strategy, and even then must risk being fired upon by our own people before we get within cover."

Even as I was speaking I evolved a plan of action—desperate it certainly was, yet nothing better occurred to me, and time was golden.

"Ebers," I said, "didn't I see an extra jacket strapped back of your saddle?"

"It is no good," he protested vehemently. "It vos for der rain come."

"All right; hand it over to the Lieutenant here. Caton, throw that uniform coat of yours into the ditch and don honest gray for once. Sands, come here. Take your knife and cut away every symbol of rank on my jacket; tear it off, any way you can."

In another moment these necessary changes had been accomplished.

"Now," I ordered, "pile your sabers there with mine beside the road; then hobble your horses, all but the mule; I shall want him."

"Does we go der rest of der vay on foot?" questioned the Sergeant, anxiously.

"Certainly; and I desire you to remember one important thing: let me do the talking, but if any of you are asked questions, we are deserters from Hill's corps, tired of the war."

"Mein Gott!" muttered the German, disconsolately. "I hope it vos not long off, Captain; I am no good on foot in der dark, by Chiminy."

"You had better manage to keep up tonight, unless you are seeking to commit suicide. Now, men, mark me carefully! Load your carbines. Are you all ready? Sergeant, see that each man has his gun properly charged and capped. You are to carry your arms as thoroughly concealed as possible; keep close to me always; obey my orders instantly, and to the letter. We are but twenty men pitted against over two hundred, remember, and when we strike, it must be both quick and hard."

I mounted the mule, counted the dim figures in the darkness, and then gave the order to march. As we moved slowly down the hill I was aware that Caton walked upon one side of me, while Bungay plodded along upon the other; but my mind was so filled with the excitement of our adventure and all that depended upon its successful culmination, as scarcely to realize anything other than the part I must personally play. Good fortune and audacity alone could combine to win the game we were now engaged upon.

A tall heavily beared mountaineer stood squarely in the middle of the road to the north of the picket-fire. I could make out but little of him as the light shone, excepting that he wore a high coonskin cap and bore a long rifle.

"Stop right thar!" he called out hoarsely, upon hearing us. "Who are you uns?"

As he challenged, a dozen others sprang up from about the flame and, guns in hand, came toward us on a run.

"We uns are doggoned tired o' soldierin', an' a gittin' nuthin' fer it," I said in the slow Southern drawl, "an' wanter jine yer gang, pervidin' thar's any show fer it."

"How many are ye?" asked one of the newcomers, striding forward between us and the sentry.

"A right smart heap o' a bunch; bin a pickin' o' 'em up ever since we left Charlotte," I returned evasively. "They be dandies ter fight, an' I reckon as how ye kin use 'em, can't ye?"

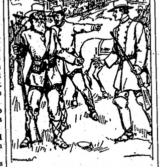
"Maybe; who did ye want ter see?"

"Wal, they sed as how a feller named Lowrie wus a runnin' this yere gang, an' if thet's ther way o' it, I reckon as how it's Lowrie we're after. Be you Lowrie?"

"Naw."

The answer was so gruff and short, and the fellow hesitated so long in adding anything to it, I began to think it was all off.

"Wal," he consented to say at last, ungraciously, thar's a blame pile o' ye kim in lately, an' I calcalate we got 'bout 'nough fer our business, but I reckon as how Red will use ye somewhar. Anyhow you uns kin come 'long with me an' find out, but ye'll diskiver him 'bout ther ornerest man jist now ever ye run up again. He's plum mad, Red is, fer sartain."



"That Feller Thar Is Captain Wayne, o' My Ol' Reg'ment."

He turned and strode off, without so much as giving us a backward glance, and, with a hearty congratulatory kick to the mule, I and my company followed him. A hundred yards further in, we passed through the fringe of trees and emerged into an open space from whence we could see plainly the great white house still illumined by the flames which continued to consume the stables. Shots were flashing like fireflies out of the darkness on every side of us, the smell of burning powder scented the air, and I could distinguish the black forms of men lying prone on the grass in something resembling a skirmish line.

"Makin' a fight o' it, ain't they?" I asked of our taciturn guide, as we picked our way carefully among the recumbent forms.

"Damn 'em, yes, a hell o' a fight," he admitted bitterly.

Just beyond musket-shot from the house, and nearly opposite the front entrance, quite a group of men were standing beneath the black shadows of a grove of trees. In spite of the gleam from the fire I could make little of them, but as we approached from the direction of the rear, one of them exclaimed suddenly:

"Who comes thar? What body o' men is thet?"

"It's 'nother party o' deserters, as wants ter jine us," said the guide, sourly. "They's Johnnies from Lee's army."

"Oh, they dew, dew they? Who's ther boss o' this yere crowd?"

I swung down from my seat on the mule's back, and stood facing him as he advanced.

"We uns hain't got no boss," I answered, "but they sorter fell in ahind o' me 'cause I wus astraddle o' this muel. Be you named Lowrie?"

"I reckon; I'm Red Lowrie," proudly. "'Spect, maybe, ye've heerd tell o' me, an' if ye hev, ye know ye've got ter step damn lively whin I howl. Whut wus ye in ther army?"

"Corporal."

The flames of the burning barn leaped suddenly upward, as if fed by some fresh combustion, and flung a brighter glare over the rough faces clustered about us. I saw Red Lowrie plainly enough now, as he peered eagerly forward to scan my face, a heavy-set, coarse-featured man, with prominent nose, and thick, matted red beard. He wore a wide-brimmed soft army hat, under which his eyes shone maliciously, and he grasped a long rifle in one big, hairy hand. As I gazed at him curiously, some one hastily pushed a way through the group at his back, and the next instant a tall figure stood at his side. I recognized the newcomer at a single glance, and for the moment my heart fairly choked me—it was Craig.

"Lowrie," he said, pointing straight at me, "thar's somethin' wrong yere. That feller thar is Captain Wayne, o' my ol' reg'ment."

Explanation of the Differences Between Domestic Standards Now and Those of Long Ago.

In the Woman's Home Companion there is an interesting presentation of the difference that exists between the domestic standard of young married women of today and those of the past generation. How did the women of the middle class of a generation or two ago manage when they could not keep help? Following is the answer quoted from a Companion editorial:

"They lived according to their means; they did not set up impossible standards, and they knew much less about the science of bringing up children. They had no special style to keep up; gave the children a weekly bath; kept the table set between meals; did not serve their meals in courses, but put all the food on the table at once; confined their social affairs to evening calls and parties, and church suppers, at which they wore the same black silk dress for at least two seasons; in short, every woman did only what she could, and her friends made it easier for her by doing likewise."

Why He Couldn't Sit Down.

Harry, aged six, is an orphan; but an indulgent grandmother and kind maiden aunt have taken care of him. The first pair of knickerbockers were secured recently, and it was a proud moment for the boy when his aunt put them on him on Sunday morning and he was permitted to go to church with his grandmother. Naturally maiden aunts know very little about the arrangement of knickerbockers, and there was a suspicious fullness in front and an equally mystifying tightness in the back to be observed, as the little chap trudged happily along. In church Harry sat down, but did not appear comfortable and stood up. "Harry, sit down," whispered his grandmother. He obediently climbed back on the seat, but soon slipped off again. "Harry, you must sit down." "Grandma, I can't. My pants is choking me." She looked more closely than her dim sight had before permitted, and discovered the new little knickerbockers were on hind side before. Harry stood up during the remainder of the service.

A Fright.

"Lady," said Meandering Mike, "would you lend me a cake of soap?"

"Do you mean to tell me you want soap?"

"Yes'm. Me partner's got de hiccups an' I want to scare him."

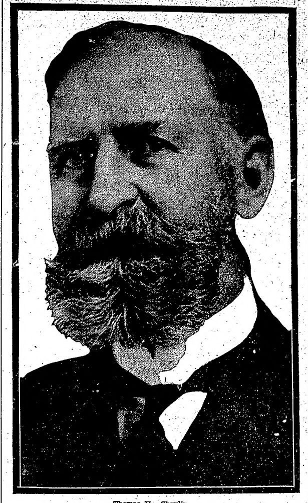
Minneapolis Millionaire Lumberman Is Called



Thomas H. Shevlin,
President of the Shevlin-Carpenter company, who died in Pasadena, Cal., today.

T. L. SHEVLIN DIES IN WEST

Minneapolis Lumberman Expires at Pasadena, Cal., Age of 60 Years.

AMASSED A BIG FORTUNE

He Had Been Republican National Committeeman in 1900-1904—Liberal Donor to University of Minnesota.

Minneapolis, Jan. 16. — Thomas Henry Shevlin, president of the Shevlin-Carpenter company, died in Pasadena, Cal. He was 60 years old. It is said his death probably was due to uraemic poisoning. He had been ill for some time before his death and his active interests in business had been assumed by his son, Thomas H. Shevlin.

Mr. Shevlin was taken seriously ill about a year ago and was under the doctor's care until the time of his death. He recently took a trip abroad with Hovey C. Clarke. His death was hastened by the death of his wife in April, 1910. According to his associates in business, Mr. Shevlin had been a different man since her death.

He had been identified for many years with the lumber business. He leaves an estate estimated to be in the neighborhood of $10,000,000.

Thomas Henry Shevlin was born in Albany, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1852. He was the son of John and Matilda Shevlin. His mother survives him. He is survived by three children, Thomas Leonard, Florence and Helen.

Mr. Shevlin's boyhood was spent in Albany. Until he was 15 years old he attended the public schools of that city, acquiring a common school education. He then entered the employ of John McCraw & Co., a lumber firm of Albany, and with them began his training for the business with which he has been identified for years.

He was connected with this firm from 1870 as manager of important interests in several New York towns. He then went to Chicago, going from there to Muskegon, Mich., where he took charge of the lumber interests of R. W. Harvey. About a year later he associated himself with the Stephen C. Hall Lumber company and in 1884 started a branch company in Minneapolis under the name of the North Star Lumber company.

Came to Minneapolis.

He moved to Minneapolis and soon organized the Hall & Ducey company, Upon the withdrawal of Mr. Ducey in 1887 the firm became the Hall & Shevlin Lumber company, and so continued until the death of Mr. Hall in 1888. Three years later Elbert L. Carpenter bought an interest in the business under the firm name of the Shevlin-Carpenter company. The organization then established with Mr. Shevlin as president and has been doing a large business.

Since the establishment of this company, Mr. Shevlin had extended his operations until his interests included timber, lumber and mills in the South, the West and in Canada. With J. Neils he established the J. Neils Lumber company in 1895 with a mill at Sauk Rapids and in 1900 this firm installed a mill at Cass Lake, Minn., with an annual capacity of 50,000,000 feet of lumber. In 1896 he joined Frank P. Hixon in buying a large amount of timber on the Red Lake Indian reservation, forming the St. Hilaire Lumber company and building a mill.

This company bought out the mill, logs, and timber holdings of the Red River Lumber company at Crookston and reorganized as the Crookston Lumber company with Mr. Shevlin as president.

In 1902 and 1903 the company built a mill at Bemidji with an output of 70,000,000 feet a year, running a logging spur east of Red Lake and connecting with the Minnesota and International railway at Hovey Junction, thus opening up a vast tract of hitherto unavailable timber. Mr. Shevlin also was connected with and was active in founding a line of retail yards operated as the St. Hilaire Retail Lumber company, with the Shevlin-Clark company of Ontario and with the Rainy River Lumber company which operates a plant at Rainy River, Ont., with a capacity of 70,000,000 feet—said to be one of the most complete saw mills in the world.

Mr. Shevlin besides being president and organizer of many subsidiary companies, had vast timber holdings in Oregon.

In politics he was Republican and a member of the national committee for Minnesota from 1900 to 1904. In 1901 he served as vice president of the Minnesota State fair, representing Minneapolis on the board of managers. His interest in public affairs and in the institutions of Minneapolis and Minnesota is evidenced in his gift to the University of Minnesota—Alice Shevlin hall, the building for the use and convenience of the women of the institution. In addition to this gift he presented five scholarships in 1909 at $10,000 each.

President Submits an Economy and Efficiency Message.

RESULTS OF INQUIRY TOLD

Special Commission Found Extravagant and Antiquated Methods in Government Work and Many Unnecessary Offices.

Washington. — President Taft has submitted to congress a special message on economy and efficiency in the government service. The message in part is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit for the information of the congress this report of progress made in the inquiry into the efficiency and economy of the methods of transacting public business.

Efficiency and economy in the government service have been demanded with increasing insistence for a generation. Real economy is the result of efficient organization. By perfecting the organization the same benefits may be obtained at less expense. A reduction in the total of the annual appropriations is not in itself a proof of economy, since it is often accompanied by a decrease in efficiency. The needs of the nation may demand a large increase of expenditure, yet to keep the total appropriation within the expected reveneu is necessary to the maintenance of public credit.

Upon the president must rest a large share of the responsibility for the demands made upon the treasury for the current administration of the executive branch of the government. Upon the congress must rest responsibility for those grants of public funds which are made for other purposes.

Reason for the Inquiry.

Recognizing my share of responsibility for efficient and economical administration, I have endeavored during the past two years, with the assistance of heads of departments, to secure the best results. As one of the means to this end I requested a grant from congress to make my efforts more effective.

An appropriation of $100,000 was made June 25, 1910, to enable the president to inquire into the methods of transacting the public business of the executive departments and other government establishments and to recommend to congress such legislation as may be necessary to carry into effect changes found to be desirable that cannot be accomplished by executive action alone. I have been given this fund to enable me to take action and to make specific recommendations with respect to the details of transacting the business of an organization whose activities are almost as varied as those of the entire business world. The operations of the government affect the interest of every person living within the jurisdiction of the United States. Its organization embraces stations and centers of work located in every city and in many local subdivisions of the country. Its gross expenditures amount to nearly 1,000,000,000 annually. Including the personnel of the military and naval establishments, more than 400,000 persons are required to do the work imposed by law upon the executive branch of the government.

Plan of the Work.

In accordance with my instructions, the commission on economy and efficiency, which I organized to aid me in the inquiry, has directed its efforts primarily to the formulation of concrete recommendations looking to the betterment of the fundamental conditions under which governmental operations must be carried on. With a basis thus laid, it has proceeded to the prosecution of detailed studies of individual services and classes of work, and of particular practices and methods, pushing these studies as far and covering as many points and services, as the resources and time at its disposal have permitted.

In approaching its task it has divided the work into five fields of inquiry having to do respectively with organization, personnel, business methods, accounting and reporting, and the budget.

Comprehensive Plan of Organization.

On organization the commission has entered upon the preparation of three series of reports. The first series deals with the manner in which the services of the government should be grouped in departments. This is a matter of fundamental importance. It is only after a satisfactory solution of this problem that many important measures of reform become possible.

The second and third series of reports deal, respectively, with the organization and activities of particular services, and the form of organization for the performance of particular business operations.

One of the reports of the second series is upon the revenue cutter service, which costs the government over two and a half million dollars each year. In the opinion of the commission its varied activities can be performed with equal, or greater, advantage by other services. The commission, therefore, recommends that it be abolished. It is estimated that by so doing a saving of not less than $1,000,000 a year can be made.

Another report illustrating the second series recommends that the lighthouse and life saving services be administered by a single bureau, instead of as at present by two bureaus located in different departments. These services have much in common. Geographically, they are similarly located; administratively, they have many of the same problems. It is estimated that consolidation would result in a saving of not less than $100,000 annually.

Abolition of Local Offices.

Perhaps the part of the organization in which the greatest economy in public expenditure is possible is to be found in the numerous local offices of the government. In some instances the establishment and the discontinuance of these local offices are matters of administrative discretion. In other instances they are established by permanent law in such a manner that their discontinuance is beyond the power of the president or that of any executive officer.

The responsibility for the maintenance of these conditions must naturally be divided between the congress and the executive. But that the executive has performed his duty when he has called the attention of the congress to the matter must also be admitted. Realizing my responsibility in the premises, I have directed the commission to prepare a report setting forth the positions in the local services of the government which may be discontinued with advantage, the saving which would result from such action and the changes in law which are necessary to carry into effect changes in organization found to be desirable. On the coming in of the report, such offices as may be found useless and can be abolished will be so treated by executive order.

Classification of Local Officers.

In my recent message to the congress I urged consideration of the necessity of placing in the classified service all of the local officers under the departments of the treasury, the interior, postoffice and commerce and labor.

The next step which must be taken is to require of heads of bureaus in the departments at Washington, and of most of the local officers under the departments, qualifications of capacity similar to those now required of certain heads of bureaus and of local officers. The extension of the merit system to these officers and a needed readjustment of salaries will have important effects in securing greater economy and efficiency.

In the first place, the possession by the incumbents of these positions of requisite qualifications must in itself prmote efficiency.

In the second place, the removal of local officers from the realm of political patronage in many cases would reduce the pay roll of the field services. At the present time the incumbents of many of these positions leave the actual performance of many of their duties to deputies and assistants. The government often pays two persons for doing work that could easily be done by one. What is the loss to the government cannot be stated, but that it is very large cannot be denied, when it is remembered how numerous are the local officers in the postal, customs, internal revenue, public lands, and other field services of the government.

In the third place, so long as local officers are within the sphere of political patronage it is difficult to consider the question of the establishment or discontinuance of local offices apart from the effect upon local political situations.

Finally, the view that these various offices are to be filled as a result of political considerations has for its consequence the necessity that the president and members of congress devote to matters of patronage time which they should devote to questions of policy and administration.

Superannuation.

Attention has been directed in recent years to the need of a suitable plan of retiring the superannuated employes in the executive civil service. In the belief that it is desirable that any steps toward the establishment of such a plan shall be taken with caution, I instructed the commission to make an inquiry first into the conditions at Washington. This inquiry has been directed to the ascertainment of the extent to which superannuation now exists and to the consideration of the availability of the various plans which either have been proposed for adoption in this country or have actually been adopted in other countries. I shall submit, in the near future, for the consideration of the congress a plan for the retirement of aged employes in the civil service which will safeguard the interests of the government and at the same time make reasonable provision for the needs of those who have given the best part of their lives to the service of the state.

Business Methods.

In every case where technical processes have been studied it has been demonstrated beyond question that large economies may be effected. The subjects first approached were those which lie close to each administrator, viz, office practices. An illustration of the possibilities within this field may be found in the result of the inquiry into the methods of handling and filing correspondence. Every office in the government has reported its methods to the commission. These reports brought to light the fact that present methods were quite in he reverse of uniform. Some offices follow the practice of briefing all correspondence; some do not. Some have flat files; others fold all papers before filing. Some use press copies; others retain only carbon copies.

Need for Labor-Saving Office Devices.

The use of labor-saving office devices in the service has been made the subject of special inquiry. An impression prevails that the government is not making use of mechanical devices for economizing labor to the same extent as are efficiently managed private enterprises. A study has been made of the extent to which devices of this character are now being employed in the several branches of the government and the opportunities that exist for their more general use.

The efforts of the commission resulted also in the adoption by several bureaus or departments of improved methods of doing copying. The amount of copy work heretofore done by hand each year in the many offices is estimated to aggregate several hundred thousand dollars. The commission exhibited, at its offices, appliances that were thought to be especially adapted to this kind of government work. Following these demonstrations methods of copying were introduced which have brought about a saving of over 75 per cent. in offices where used for six months. This change in one small cross-section of office practice will more than offset the whole cost of my inquiry.

Waste in the Distribution of Public Documents.

Going outside the office, one of the business processes which have been investigated is the distribution of department documents. This is a subject with which both the congress and administration heads are familiar. The prevailing practice in handling departmental publications is to have them manufactured at the government printing office; each job when completed is delivered to the department; here the books or pamphlets are wrapped and addressed; then are then sent to the postoffice; there they are assorted and prepared for shipment through the mails; from the postoffice they are sent to the railroad station, which is only a few steps from the government printing office, when they started. The results of this laborious and circuitous method is to make the use of the best mechanical equipment impracticable and to waste each year not less than a quarter of a million dollars of government funds in useless handling, to say nothing of the indirect loss due to lack of proper co-ordination.

Wasteful Use of Properties and Equipment.

The use of equipment is a matter which also has been investigated. Up to the present time this investigation has been in the main confined to the subject of electric lighting. The government pays over $600,000 per year for electric current; it has made large capital outlays for wiring and fixtures. With the increasing demands in many buildings the present equipment is taxed to its limit and if the present methods are continued much of this wiring must be done over; in many places employees are working at a great physical disadvantage, due to inadequate and improper lighting, and thereby with reduced efficiency. In every place where the inquiry has been conducted it appears that there is large waste; that without the cost of rewiring, simply by giving proper attention to location of lights and the use of proper lamps and reflectors, the light efficiency at points where needed may be much increased and the cost of current reduced from 30 to 60 per cent. Other inquiries into the use which is being made of properties and equipment are contemplated which promise even larger results.

Lack of Specifications.

The importance of establishing and maintaining standard specifications is found not only in the possibility of very materially reducing the direct cost of government trading, but also in insuring to the service materials, supplies and equipment which are better adapted to its purposes. One of the results of indefiniteness of specifications is to impose contract conditions which make it extra hazardous for persons to enter into contractual relations. This not only deprives the government of the advantage of broad competition, but causes it to pay an added margin in price to vendors who must carry the risk.

Excessive Cost of Travel.

One of the first steps taken toward constructive work was the reclassification of the expenditures for the year 1910 by objects. The foundation was thus made for the investigation of government trading practices. While it was recognized that this large field could not be covered within a year except at enormous cost, the subjects of "Transportation of persons" and "Subsistence while in travel status" were taken as concrete examples. The annual cost of travel to the government was found to be about $12,000,000. It was also found that the government employees were traveling in practically every way that was open to the public; it was further found that although the government was the largest user of transportation, it was buying railroad tickets on a less favorable basis than would be possible if the subject of traveling expenditures were systematically handled from the point of view of the government as a whole. The form of ticket most often used between such points as New York, Philadelphia and Washington was the single-trip, first-class ticket. In two departments definite tests have been made in the use of mileage boks and in each practically the same result has been reported, viz., an average saving of a little over one-half of one cent per mile.

Better Methods for Purchasing.

Through a long period of years and by numberous laws and orders there has grown up a procedure governing public advertising and contracting that is more burdensome and expensive in some cases than is necessary. The procedure is not uniform in the various departments; it is not uniform in many cases for the different services in the same department. To make uniform the requirements so far as practicable will be in the interest of economy and efficiency and bring about that simplicity that will secure the largest opportunity for contractors to bid for government work, and will secure for the government the most favorable prices obtained by any purchaser.

The Budget.

The United States is the only great nation whose government is operated without a budget. This fact seems to be more striking when it is considered that budgets and budget procedures are the outgrowth of democratic doctrines and have had an important part in the development of modern constitutional rights. The American commonwealth has suffered much from irresponsibility on the part of its governing agencies. The constitutional purpose of a budget is to make government responsive to public opinion and responsible for its acts.

The Budget as an Annual Program.

A budget should be the means for getting before the legislative branch, before the press, and before the people a definite annual program of business to be financed; it should be in the nature of a prospectus both of revenues and expenditures; it should comprehend every relation of the government to the people, whether with reference to the raising of revenues or the rendering of service.

In many foreign countries the annual budget program is discussed with special reference to the revenue to be raised, the thought being that the raising of revenue bears more direct relation to welfare than does government expenditure. Around questions of source of revenue political parties have been organized, and on such questions voters in the United States have taken sides since the first revenue law was proposed.

Public-Welfare Questions.

The principal government objects in which the people of the United States are interested include:

The national defense; the protection of persons and property; the promotion of friendly relations and the protection of American interests abroad; the regulation of commerce and industry; the promotion of agriculture, fisheries, forestry and mining; the promotion of manufacturing, commerce, and banking; the promotion of transportation and communication; the postal service, including postal savings and parcels post; the care for and utilization of the public domain; the promotion of education, art, science and recreation; the promotion of the public health; the care and education of the Indians and other wards of the nation.

These are public-welfare questions in which I assume every citizen has a vital interest. I believe that every member of congress, as an official representative of the people, each editor, as a non-official representative of public opinion, each citizen, as a beneficiary of the trust imposed on officers of the government, should be able readily to ascertain how much has been spent for each of these purposes; how much has been appropriated for the current year; how much the administration is asking for each of these purposes for the next fiscal year.

Furthermore, each person interested should have laid before him a clear, well-digested statement showing in detail whether moneys appropriated have been economically spent and whether each division or office has been efficiently run. This is the information which should be available each year in the form of a budget and in detail accounts and reports supporting the budget.

Continuance of the Commission.

I ask the continuance of this commission on economy and efficiency because of the excellent beginning which has been made toward the reorganization of the machinery of this government on business principles. I ask it because its work is entirely non-partisan in character and ought to apply to every citizen who wishes to give effectiveness to popular government, in which we feel a just pride. The work further commends itself for the reason that the cost of organization and work has been carefully considered at every point. Three months were taken in consideration of plans before the inquiry was begun; six months were then spent in preliminary investigations before the commission was organized; before March 3, 1911, when I asked for a continuation of the original appropriation for the current year, only $12,000 had been spent.

The expenditure for the inquiry during the present fiscal year is at the rate of $130,000. The mass of information which must be collected, digested and summarized pertaining to each subject of inquiry is enormous. From the results obtained it is evident that every dollar which is spent in the prosecution of the inquiry in the future will result in manifold savings. Every economy which has been or will be effected through changes in organization or method will inure to the benefit of the government and of the people in increasing measure through the years which follows. It is clearly the part of wisdom to provide for the coming years means at least equal to those available during the current year, and in my opinion the appropriation should be increased to $200,000, and an additional amount of $50,000 should be provided for the publication of those results, which will be of continuing value to officers of the government and to the people.

LORIMER WITNESS

CLAIMS "LIFE LONG FRIENDSHIPS" AND "ACTS OF KINDNESS" ELECTED HIM.

DIDN'T WANT HOPKINS

Says Fear of Deadlock by Those Anxious to Get Home Aided Him.—Other Congressional News.

Washington, D. C.—Senator Lorimer of Illinois, continuing his testimoney before the senate investigating committee, undertook to explain the individual motives which caused 108 members of the Illinois legislature to cast their ballots for him. His recital was a long story of boyhood to man, grown to political alliances.

In explaining the votes often he would say, "He lived in my neighborhood and some times I may have done an important favor for him," or "we worked together in politics for 30 years and our personal friendship was stronger than any party tie."

The votes of other men Senator Lorimer explained by saying they were unalterably opposed to Hopkins, were anxious to break the deadlock and get home, had received favorable recommendation of Lorimer from constituents, or they were anxious to give to him some substantial reward for his work in behalf of the proposed "lakes to the gulf" waterway.

Earlier in the day the senator had made a dramatic denial of any knowledge of corruption in connection with his election, and in an equally dramatic way charged that Governor Deneen and a Chicago paper were forwarding a conspiracy to drive him from the senate.

Representative Smith of Texas, a Democrat, attacked President Taft in the house for alleged failure to protect Americans on the border during the Mexican revolution last year. Mr. Smith arraigned the Republican administration for pursuing a policy of "spineless diplomacy" and for alleged refusal of all practical aid to Americans in the prosecution of their claims against the Mexican government, though Germany, China and other nations were pressing their citizens' claims.

Mr. Smith declared President Taft should have protected Americans during the battles of Juarez and Agua Prieta by taking such steps as were necessary even if the president of the Mexican republic wanted to consider any such step an offense to his nation.

Representative James T. Lloyd of Missouri, chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, announced that the treasurer and the committees of the organization would be named within a few days. The plans of the campaign have been partially laid and campaign material now is being sent out broadcast.

The Republican congressional campaign committee will meet in February when Representative W. B. McKinley of Illinois will ask to be relieved as chairman.

New Pension Bills Completed.

When the senate commission on pensions meets Monday to consider the Sherwood general service pension bill. Chairman McCumber will ask the committee to substitute a bill which he has prepared and introduced, which undertakes to grant increased pensions by amending the present law so as to make additions both on account of age and service.

Estimates place the increased cost under the McCumber bill at $22,000,000 annually or an average of $52 per man. Senator Curtis of Kansas, a member of the committee, will also offer a substitute to the Sherwood bill, materially reducing its figures.

Samuel Gompers urged the house committee on labor to report a bill creating a department of labor with cabinet rank.

Washington, D. C.—Republican insurgents met defeat in the house in an attempt to upset Republican Leader Mann's power to name all Republican candidates for places on the house committees.

Led by Representative Norris of Nebraska, who managed the great rules fight of the previous congress, the insurgents tried to set aside Mr. Mann's nomination of Philip B. Campbell of Kansas, regular, to succeed the late E. H. Madison, insurgent, on the committee on rules; and to nominate in his place Victor Murdock of Kansas, insurgent.

Opposed by both Democratic and Republican leaders, the insurgent attempt was beaten by a vote of 167 to 107. Of the 107 votes cast in favor of Murdock, 26 were Republican and 81 Democratic, while 107 Republican votes were cast against the proposed substitution.

That Lodge Amendment.

The Lodge amendment to the resolution for ratification of the arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France has stirred unexpected opposition from Democratic senators. It is favored, however, by three-fourths of the Republican senators, who accept it as a happy compromise of all differences.

The Republican senators are not strong enough to put through the treaties without considerable trouble and some concern was expressed as to the attitude of Democratic senators who heretofore have been classed as friendly to the treaties. Senators Raynor and Williams are favorable to them without any modification. Senator Raynor announced his intention of again addressing the senate on the treaties some day next week.

The text of the Lodge amendment to the ratification resolution is as follows:

"The senate advised and consents to the ratification of the treaty with the understanding to be made a part of such ratification that any joint high commission of inquiry to which shall be referred the question as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under Article 1 of the treaty as provided by Article III thereof, the American members of such commission shall be appointed by the president subject to the advice and consent of the senate and with the further understanding that the reservation in Article 1 of the treaty that the special agreement in each case shall be made by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate means the concurrence of the senate in the full exercise of its constitutional powers in respect to every special agreement, whether submitted to the senate as the result of the report of a joint high commission of inquiry under Article III or otherwise."

Gompers on Sherman Law.

Backing up his demand that th Sherman anti-trust law should be so amended as to exempt labor organizations from its provisions, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who appeared before the senate interstate commerce committee, quoted an interview he had with former President Roosevelt in 1908.

Canterbury Tales Bring $5,000.

New York, N. Y.—A Caxton edition of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, dated 1477, which was the fourth or fifth book printed in England, brought $5,000, the highest bid for any book at the Hoe library auction. George D. Smith of this city bought the book. W. M. Hill of Chicago paid $1,800 for a Caesar, printed in Rome in 1469, and Julius Sondheim, a German dealer, paid $1,000 for a copy of Cicero's "Epistles to Brutus," printed in 1470. The bids amounted in all to $34,202.

Socialist Mayors to Confer.

Schenectady, New York. — Mayor George R. Lunn, socialist, has called into consultation Mayor Seidel of Milwaukee, and others in an endeavor to bring about an up to date revision of business methods in municipal departments. Among them is Morris G. Hillquist, an official of the socialist party of New York. The reforms under consideration include the standardization of specifications for all purchases, the opening of a purchasing agency allowing the city to insure its property.

SHOOTS OLD MAN

J. B. SNEAD KILLS A. G. BRYCE, SR., WHILE LATTER IS SITTING IN TEXAS HOTEL.

EXPLANATION REFUSED

Homicide Comes Week After Reconciliation With the Erring Woman.—Murderer Gives Self Up to Police.

Fort Worth, Texas.—The sensational elopement of Mrs. Lena B. Snead, wife of a rich banker of Amarillo, with A. G. Boyce, Jr., millionaire ranchman, had a sensational development when J. B. Snead, the husband shot and killed A. G. Boyce, Sr., aged father of the man who had eloped with his wife. The shooting was done in the lobby of the Metropolitan hotel, crowded with people at the time. Snead fired five shots at Boyce, four taking effect. He used a 32-caliber automatic and the bullets lodged in the abodmen.

Snead fled by a side entrance and ran to the Central police station, where he surrendered. He refused to make a statement to either newspaper reporters or police. On his death bed, Boyce made a statement declaring that he had seen Snead once before in the lobby of the hotel and had avoided him. The shooting came as a big surprise to persons who had been following the case since the sensational flight of Mrs. Snead and young Boyce from Fort Worth on Nov. 11. Mrs. Snead disappeared from a sanitarium here. Snead and his wife, little more than a week ago, effected a reconciliation and returned to Texas from Winnipeg, where she and young Boyce had been caught. Yesterday afternoon the elder Boyce had just succeeded in getting all indictments against his son dismissed by the county attorney. This it was thought, would end the case.

The elopement of Mrs. Snead and young Boyce attracted attention throughout the country, the search for the missing couple extending from here to St. Louis, thence to Chicago, Atlantic City, New York, Minneapolis, and, finally, to Winnipeg, Man., where they were arrested.

As soon as the couple were arrested Snead's attorneys had indictments returned against Boyce charging abduction, rape and theft. A requisition was applied for, but this Governor Colquitt refused to grant as it was based solely on the question of whether Mrs. Snead was insane at the time she ran away with Boyce. Canadian allenists found her sane and refused to hold her after the arrival of her husband.

Young Boyce was allowed to go free and announced that he would go to Alberta, Western Canada, and go into the cattle business. When he left Fort Worth, he carried exchange to the amount of $5,000 or $6,000 in cash.

Federal Forces Attack Bahia, Brazil, Because of Court Decree.

Buenos Aires, Argentina.—Federal forces under General Setero Menezes have shelled the city of Bahia, Brazil, killing twenty and wounding 100 persons.

The clash is the latest development in the conflict between the federal government and the states, and was prompted by the refusal of the local authorities to accede to the habeas corpus decreed by a federal judge in favor of democratic legislators.

General Menezes at once attacked the legislature and a three-hour battle followed. Many government buildings were destroyed.

SPANISH CABINET QUITS

DISAGREE WITH KING AS TO REPRIEVE OF RIOTER.

The Ministry Realized It Had Made a Grave Political Blunder.

Madrid, Spain.—The Spanish cabinet of which Jose Canalejas y Mendes was premier resigned as the result of a divergence of views with King Alfonso as to the advisability of commuting the death sentence of one of the rioters, who murdered a judge and wounded several court officials in the town of Cullera, province of Valencia, last September. The general strike at that time in Valencia and other provinces involved a plot to assassinate General Weyler, and the king was compelled to suspend the constitutional guarantees.

Realizing that it was a sordid crime and that the accused men were impossible objects of sympathy, the radicals raised a false issue, accusing the government of all sorts of tortures and cruelties towards the prisoners. Consequently the agitation spread with great rapidity and caused grave concern to Premier Canalejas.

The rioters were first tried before a military court last month and six of them were sentenced to death. The case then went to the supreme council of war and marine for revision, and the council condemned all seven prisoners to death. Numerous petitions in favor of a reprieve have been received since the first trial and it was evident that the whole nation strongly desired that the men should not suffer the death penalty. Premier Canalejas advised the king to exercise his prerogative in the case of six of the prisoners, but held that the seventh, Chato Chuqueta, should be made an example of in the interests of law and order.

The agitation had by this time reached formidable proportions, the Barcelona radicals issuing a dec calling for a general strike if Chuque was executed. The premier in his own words then realized that the exclusion of Chuqueta from a reprieve was a political blunder, and, learning that the king was of the same opinion, he went with his colleagues to the palace, where the king declared that he favored a reprieve for Chuqueta.

Premier Canalejas said he deferred to his majesty's judgment and would prepare a decree to that effect without delay, but considering, as he did, that the ministry had made a mistake, it was his duty to hand in his resignation. King Alfonso urged him to reconsider his determination, but he remained firm.

Twenty-six Moros Killed.

Manila, P. I.—Twenty-six Moros were killed while they were attempting to ambush a body of American troops on the island of Jolo. Lieutenant McGee of the second cavalry was shot twice and one American soldier was wounded. Brigadier General John J. Pershing, commander of the department of Mindanao, declared that he believed this fight would mark the end of the armed opposition of the Moros to American rule in the island of Jolo as this band comprised the last of the remaining malcontents.

THE OFFICERS.

President, C. W. Glotfelter, Waterville.

First vice president, Eli S. Warner, St. Paul.

Second vice president, E. J. Stilwell, Minneapolis.

The delegates to the State Agricultural Society, elected by acclamation its officers for the coming year and adjourned.

President Glotfelter was nominated for re-election by C. R. Wilkinson of Lake Elmo, and J. J. Furlong of Austin who had been mentioned as a candidate against him, seconded the nomination and moved to make it unanimous. Mr. Glotfelter responded with a brief speech, in which he promised to make the 1912 state fair better than any before.

E. W. Randall of St. Paul, placed Eli S. Warner, in nomination for first vice president to succeed Reuben Warner, who declined re-election. This also was made unanimous.

J. W. Bragdon, president of the Minneapolis Commercial club, nominated E. J. Stillwell for second vice president. Under the new law he will hold office for two years. L. B. Arnold of Duluth, nominated C. P. Craig and T. J. Meighen, of Preston nominated Robert Crickmore. All were elected unanimously.

On motion of Mr. Furlong, J. H. Beek, of St. Paul, a former vice president of the society, was made a life member.

Miss Jessie Walkup of Pipestone, the first and only woman delegate to the society's annual meeting was called on for a speech. She said she enjoyed her experience immensely. Miss Walkup is county superintendent of Pipestone county, and secretary of the county fair association.

C. E. Brewster of Howard Lake moved that a half day be given next year to considering matters of interest to the county fair managers. This also was adopted.

Development of County Fair.

The resolutions adopted express the thanks of the society to the Twin City business men who advanced money to pay the deficit at the last fair, requested the secretary to furnish each society which is a member of the state society a copy of his report and recommendations a month before the next annual meeting; recommended the passage of a law authorizing cities and villages to make appropriations for permanent improvement at county fairs and authorizing county boards to buy a site for a county fair and lease it to the county society; provided that at the next annual meeting Tuesday and Wednesday shall be given to agricultural papers and addresses, Thursday to considering reports of officers and committees and Friday to election of officers and other business; approved and recommended the passage of the Paige bill pending in Congress providing federal aid for agricultural education and demonstration farms.

The six railroads in Southern Minnesota had granted a rate of a fare and a third for the round trip on the certificate plan provided 100 certificates were turned in. Only ninety-one were presented and consequently the delegates had to pay full fare.

Under the law the new board will hold its first meeting next Tuesday. At that time it will re-elect Secretary J. C. Simpson and Treasurer E. L. Mattson.

SMASHED A CAR WINDOW.

And Adventure Cost Winona Man Five Dollars.

Winona.—The receivership management of the Winona Railway and Light company caused to be arraigned in the municipal court Charles Singer, 19 years old, charged with hurling a brick through one of the car windows during the recent strike. Singer was dismissed after paying a fine of $5. Cases against others who damaged cars during the strike have been dropped.

Rochester High School Dedicated.

Rochester.—Rochester's new high school, which was opened last September, was formally dedicated at a public meeting, held in the school auditorium at which Dean L. A. Weigle of Carleton college, State High School Inspector George B. Aiton and Superintendent C. L. Woodfield of the city schools were the speakers. Secretary John E. McGoven made a statement of the cost of the building and equipment, amounting to nearly $150,000. Dean Weigle of Northfield made the principal address.

STATE EXHIBIT CAR

Land Products Will Be Shown in Iowa and Missouri.

Minneapolis.—Filled with the choicest products from the exhibits that won prizes for Minnesota at the recent land show in St. Paul, the advertising car of the state immigration bureau left St. Paul on a trip through southern Iowa and northern Missouri.

The car was built especially for exhibition purposes. The display is covered with sheafs of grain of all kinds as well as many varieties of hay and grasses arranged artistically. Down the center of the car runs a stand on which are exhibited fresh grains and vegetables. Particularly noticeable is the exhibition of potatoes and onions which are unusually large and perfect specimens. Other fruits and vegetables that are perishable are preserved in bottles. Strawberries and cherries were among the fruits shown while Minnesota celery occupies a prominent place.

Tobacco on Exhibit.

The exhibit destined to attract much attention is tobacco from Sherbourne county where tobacco raising has become an actual industry. Corn raised by Jacob W. Beckman, Cokato, who won first prize in competition against corn growers of the world at the corn exhibit which is given considerable space.

HAROLD KNUTSON

Iron ore from the northern part of the state as well as exhibitions from the co-operative canneries add to the completeness of the exhibit. A number of trophies taken by the state at butter shows are also on exhibit.

The car is to be in charge of Frank M. Eddy, Sauk Center, a former congressman, Harold Knutson, Saint Cloud, and C. S. Benson, Minneapolis. Mr. Eddy will give lectures at the towns visited during the trip, and describe the resources and rich soil of the state to all visitors to the car. Mr. Knutson will not begin the trip until the second week because of his attendance at the Northern Minnesota Editorial association convention at Long Prairie. Until he joins the expedition, James A. Larson, Walnut Grove, will take his place. Mr. Benson will have direct charge of the car itself. H. J. Maxfield, new immigration commissioner will accompany the car part of the time.

From the time the car visits Mediapolis, Jan. 15 until the tour ends at Riverton, Ia., sixty-six towns in the two states will be visited. The tour will end March 30. Every town visited is on the Burlington road.

Grain Storage Increases.

Duluth.—The increase of grain elevator storage at the Canadian head of the lakes continues and the Canadian Northern is preparing to provide more storage space against the movement of the crop of 1912. The Grand Trunk Pacific, which now has a steel tank grain capacity of 4,000,000 bushels at Fort William, has begun the construction of additional tanks and the understanding is, that the road plans to double its capacity according to news received here yesterday.

VAN SANT LEAVES RIVER.

Retires as President of Northern Steamboat Company.

Winona.—The retirement today of Samuel R. Van Sant from the presidency of the Northern Steamboat company, which operates the steamer Morning Star between St. Paul and Davenport, Iowa, in the summer, removes from active steamboat connection on the upper river one of the most conspicuous figures during the lumbering days.

Mr. Van Sant for many years owned and operated some of the oldest rafters, but last year disposed of all of his remaining river possessions with the exception of his interest in the Northern Steamboat company. He served that company as president.

At a meeting of the company at Davenport he declined re-election, declaring his time would not permit of longer river activity. It is announced that the Morning Star will be kept in the St. Paul-Davenport trade again next summer.

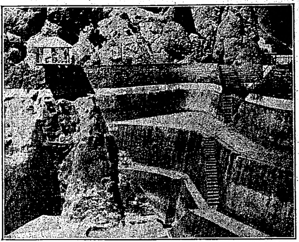
ARREST BOXER'S SECOND

Baudette Jury Finds Participant in Bout Died of Fractured Skull.

Duluth. — A coroner's jury at Baudette found that the death of Andrew L. Anderson of West Duluth, who took part in a boxing contest at Spooner New Year's night, was caused by a fracture of the skull. A blood clot had formed as a result of the fracture. Bert Caldwell, who seconded Anderson, has been arrested and will be taken to Bemidji.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

One of Aden's Famous Tanks



The climate of Aden, the Red Sea port, is dry and intensely hot, and water there is a valuable commodity. The famous tanks of Aden are natural rock cisterns situated in a deep gorge behind the city and were used in the days of medieval prosperity. They have since been greatly improved by masonry additions and are connected by aqueducts to prevent overflow. When an appreciable quantity of rain water is collected in the tanks, it is sold by auction by the authorities and the purchaser retails it to the public.

"CASTLE" ON PUGET SOUND

On the summit of a high hill back of Port Townsend, Washington, the state's port of entry, and overlooking the town, stands a unique building, much resembling a castle. In the early days, when there were no neighboring residences, the structures often underwent searching scrutiny by eyes aboard ship peering through binoculars or field glass, as it does to this day when some sharp-visioned tourist picks it out as something distinct from the ordinary type of building. The "castle," as the structure is called by the people of the town, was built many years ago, in boom times, by an eccentric Englishman, who through his habits and eccentricities was known as a hermit. There are, perhaps, few building locations in the United States affording views as grand as the one where this freak in architecture stands. It stands nearly 300 feet above sea level, immediately overlooking a beautiful little bay with numerous inlets, and beyond great stretches of America's fir-fringed and greatest inland water way, Puget Sound. In the distance are the green foothills, and beyond the majestic Olympic range, snow-capped the year 'round, and behind which old Sol sinks from sight amid a wealth of color month in and out.

After the old Englishman's death, "the castle" passed to the United States, acquired by purchase of land for use as a military reservation. The building is of brick, and is substantially built and well finished within.

REACHED LIMIT OF TORTURE

Real Reason Why Burglar Gave Evening Papers Chance to Use Effective Headline.

A burglar broke into a New York mansion early the other morning and found himself after wandering about the place in the music room. Hearing footsteps approaching, he took refuge behind a screen. From eight to nine the eldest daughter had a singing lesson. From nine to ten the second daughter took a piano lesson. From 10 to 11 the eldest son got his instruction on the violin. From 11 to 12 the younger boy got a lesson on the flute and piccolo. Then, at 12:15, the family got together and practiced music on all their instruments. They were fixing up for a concert. At 12:45 the porch-climber staggered from behind the screen. "For heavens' sake, send for the police!" he shrieked. "Torture me no longer!" And in the evening paper there was the headline: "Nervy Children Capture Desperate Burglar."

Where the Fruit Grows.

Michael Casey, a politician in San Francisco, who has been in office and on the city payroll for many years, was addressing a meeting of his fellow-citizens. It was a labor meeting.

"You men must know," spouted Casey, "that you are the great body politic in this city. You are the roots and trunks of our great municipal tree, while we who represent you in office are merely the branches on that magnificent tree."

"True for you, Mike," piped a man in the back of the hall, "but did ye ever notice all the fruit grows on the branches?"—Saturday Evening Post.

Walking for Nerves.

The nerves suffer from want of pure oxygen. They run like a network all through the skin and when they are overwrought the skin is apt to be dry and colorless. Walking is an excellent tonic for the nerves. It gives them strength to control themselves.

If one has means or leisure, there are plenty of other more enjoyable exercises. But few forms are so beneficial as the regular daily jaunt of four or five miles for obtaining a good complexion.

The only time some people worry is when they worry other people.

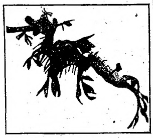
ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

Mr. Priestly of Bristol university has again drawn attention to the remarkable results of the application of high tension electricity to growing crops. Not only is a larger yield obtained, which is important to the farmer, but, in the case of fruit crops, such as strawberries, the fruit ripens some days earlier, a matter of the utmost importance to the market gardener. The present method of electrification is by means of wires stretched some distance above the growing crops. The effects may be described as an intensification of the action of the thundercloud, and might be equally startling to the heedless investigator. The original method of electrification was to water the crops from electrically charged cans, and the effect of this, says the University Correspondent, was similar to that of the thunder shower.

SEA-DRAGON OF AUSTRALIA



Here is one of the wonders of the deep sea, the sea-dragon of Australia. It is so richly ornamented with loose and flapping ribbons of skin that it reminds one much of the fearsome creature that has been adopted as the national emblem of China.

NUMBER 16 SHOE TOO SMALL

A negro of tremendous proportions is reported to have passed through Winchester, Ky., the other day and aroused the interest of the shoe merchants in the eastern bluegrass city by attempting to secure a pair of shoes. He was on his way to join a traveling sideshow and certainly merited a high position, for his altitude was seven feet one inch and weight 277 pounds. When the Senegambian Hercules tried to get a pair of kickers there was nothing doing. Size 16 proved too steep for the Winchester footwear fraternity to furnish, so the showman trudged on with sizable bits of carpet about his feet.

AN 80-MILE PRECIPICE

Capt. C. G. Rawling, a member of the British expedition that recently explored Dutch Guiana, describes what may be the greatest unbroken precipice in the world. It runs, he says, for a distance of 80 miles from Mount Carstenz westward to the Charles Louis mountains. Its greatest sheer height is at Mount Leonard Darwin. The explorers were never in a position to measure with the theodlite a sheer height of this immense precipice exceeding 6,500 feet, but from many views obtained of it while he was climbing Captain Rawling has no hesitation in stating that the greatest perpendicular height is not less than 10,500 feet, or almost exactly two miles.

"CATS' EYES" OF AMOY

Vice-Consul Charles F. Brissel states that "cats' eyes" are abundant in Amoy, and cost about $1 a bushel. It is reported that these are imported into Amoy from Shanghai and Canton and are made from mother-of-pearl and dyed.

CENTENARIANS OF EUROPE

Some curious statistics have been collected by the British imperial health department in the subject of longevity. It appears that there are now about 7,000 centenarians in Europe, and, strangely enough, the climate and conditions most favorable to longevity appear to be the Balkans, for Bulgaria heads the list with 3,883 centenarians (nearly one for every 100 inhabitants), Roumania follows with 1,074, and Servia with 573. Germany boasts only 76 centenarians, as against England's 92; while Denmark makes a very feeble show with only a couple of these veterans. The extraordinary figures given for the Balkan countries make one wonder whether veracity is as flourishing as longevity in the Near East; though presumably the health department has investigated the cases as far as possible.

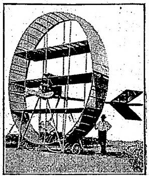
BURMESE SPELLS

Some curious sidelights on the Burman's character are contained on a report on the work of the Archaeological survey in Burmah, says the Times of India. It is stated that the Burman highly prizes the following gems: Ruby, diamond or crystal, pear, coral, topaz, sapphire, cat's-eye, amethyst and emerald. Collectively they ward off sickness or danger. The cat's eye is supposed to secure invulnerability in war. Incantations are muttered over some or all of these stones, and the water in which they are immersed is drunk in order to secure immunity from all evil. Spells are uttered over rubies, and they are inserted as amulets in the flesh of men who desire to be immune from wounds inflicted by sword, spear or gun.

WHERE LADIES SHAVE

Some of the East African ladies shave their heads with small, sharp, razor-like knives, first softening the hair with goat's milk. Other Africans keep it cut off to about two inches in length and slick down with vegetable oils. Girls of Fiji stiffen their locks with tree gums, and soft, fluffy hair is considered a curse. Somehow some of the races that have the stiffest hair try to make it stiffer, and those that have the softest try to make it like down, and still other races do just the opposite.

QUEER AMERICAN AEROPLANE



With a view to solving the problem of stability, an American airman, William P. Gary, has constructed a new three-decker aeroplane which, as our photograph shows, is enclosed in a circle. The motor is between the second and third planes, and the pilot's seat under the third plane. Both engine and seat are attached to a framework. The patent is in the hands of the Brothers Wright, and the machine is said to have gone through its trial trips very well.

"YANKEE DOODLE HOUSE"

Old Fort Cralo, at Rensselaer, N. Y., is better known as the "Yankee Doodle House." It is situated on the east bank of the Hudson river, and was erected in 1772. It was in this building that the song, "Yankee Doodle," was composed. In the hall of this building an arrow-head is imbedded in the staircase. It is said to have been fired by an Indian when this building was used as a fort.

$10,000 IN WOODEN LEG

An old wooden leg may not be much of a legacy, but when it contains $10,000 it is certainly worth having, thinks Jacob Randall, an inmate of the poor farm of Canadian county, Oklahoma. The leg was given to him by Alexander P. Hamilton, a supposed pauper at the farm, just before he died a few days ago. Randall discovered the $10,000 in the stock of the artificial limb.

Queer Rice Mill of Siam

Siam is a country of curious things to western eyes, one of which is here illustrated. It is a peculiar hand-mill, used especially for grinding rice into flour.

Standard statistics of the coffee trade show a falling off in sales during the last two years of over two hundred million pounds. Authenticated reports from the Postum factories in this city show a tremendous increase in the sale of Postum in a like period of time.

While the sales of Postum invariably show marked increase year over year, the extraordinary demand for that well-known breakfast beverage during 1911 is very likely due to a public awakening to the oppression of the coffee trust.

Such an awakening naturally disposes the multitude who suffer from the ill effects of coffee drinking to be more receptive to knowledge of harm which so often comes as a result of the use of the drug-beverage, coffee.—Battle Creek Evening News—Dec. 19, 1911.

Economy to one's purse is not the main reason for using Postum.

It is absolutely free from any harmful substance, such as "caffeine" (the drug in coffee), to which so much of the nervousness, biliousness and indigestion of today are due. Thousands of former coffee drinkers now use Postum because they know from experience the harm that coffee drinking causes.

The bodice has a square yoke of lace edged with a material strap; buttons are sewn on the seam down front of both skirt and bodice; bands of passementerie and material finish the sleeves at the elbow. A soft ribbon bow is sewn on bodice below yoke, this adds a charming finish.

HAT TRIMMINGS ARE RICH

Eastern Ideas Predominate in the New Millinery Decorations of the Paris Models.

Curious and beautiful are the new hat trimmings.

At the millinery openings, exclamations of surprise, of joy, of admiration are heard on every side; women are delighted with the quaint touch that is seen on many of the Paris models.

Egyptian designs worked out in the rich East Indian colors are a favorite mode and will be much worn. Browns in every shade, with a decided leaning toward the golden tones, describe the keynote on a goodly number of the latest importations. Purples, in every tone from the rich and royal to the palest shade of lavander, find their way into the fall styles. Scarlet and the deep rich red tones are to be popular, while black and white, the favorite combination of many women, will be as much in evidence as ever.

Feathers play an important part in the new hat trimmings. Curiously enough, there is a decided absence of the willow plume in the newer models. Can it be that these graceful and beautiful feathers are passe, that fashion makers will discard them altogether?

To be sure, the broad sweeping picture models are often adorned with long willow plumes, but on the smaller hats—and these are still in fashion this winter—the hackle feathers have taken their place. Garlands of bright-colored flowers will adorn velvet and felt hats. These are made of ribbon, silk, velvet, gold and silver cloth, and crocheted with fine zephyr in all the hard bright tones that are found in the old-fashioned crewel work our grandmothers were so fond of.

Tiny blossoms they are, with wired edges and stems of wire covered with wrappings of zephyr. Fur is another note in the trimming of winter hats. Rows of fur, ends of fur, fur tails and little furry heads of animals all go to beautify milady's headgear.

Theater bonnets are trimmed with metal flowers and high-standing aigrets of fine metal wire, gold and silver. Osprey feathers and all sorts of upstanding wings and fancy feathers will be seen on the correct models during the coming season.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Beneath the Big Coat.

Hand-embroidered white satin or white crepe blouses are to be seen this winter constructed upon simple tailor-made styles, with the edges of the collar and sleeves scalloped and buttonholed, a good idea for the girl who can do needlework, both plain and elaborate.

Net blouses are well liked to be worn under heavy coats, should a simple dress of the one-piece order not be preferred. Gossamerlike though they are, they take the place of the fine lingerie blouses very satisfactorily and make a pleasant change.

French Mirrors.

Long, narrow mirrors in French antique gilt frames are exceedingly popular for holiday and wedding gifts, and are shown just now in a variety of pleasing designs. Those with an old French print at the top are the most popular.

MILK WILL CLEAN GLOVES

For White Ones, the Lacteal Fluid Has a Distinct Advantage Over Ill-Smelling Gasolene.

The smell of gasolene on white gloves is so very objectionable to some people they hesitate about using it. It is a possible thing to clean gloves, and do it well, too, without using gasolene. This method is not only good because of there being no odor, it is also easier on the hands. Gasolene is very roughening to the skin. To clean gloves successfully, fill a small basin or bowl with milk. Dip a piece of clean, white flannel in the milk and rub white soap on the flannel as well. Then clean your white gloves thoroughly with this. Be sure all the soiled, grimy spots are gone and finally rinse with clean milk. Do not be alarmed if your gloves turn a gray or yellow color, you have done them no harm. After your gloves have dried you will find them soft and glossy and there will be no unpleasant odor. The expense of cleaning the gloves is small. Several pairs can be cleansed in a pint of milk. White kid shoes and slippers can also be cleaned in this way.

LAW'S INJUSTICE MADE PLAIN

Farmer's Grievance Was That Story Once Accepted Should Not Remain Good.

A story is being told at the expense of an old English farmer who was recently called upon to explain why he had failed to take out a license for a favorite fox terrier dog. "'E's nobbut a puppy," the defendant remarked, in response to a question as to the animal's age. "Yes, yes! So you say. But how old is he?" "Oh, weel, I couldn' tell to a bit," was the reply. "I never was much good at remembering dates, but 'e's nobbut a puppy." On the other hand, it was maintained that the animal in question was a very, very old-fashioned puppy, and the magistrate inflicted the usual fine. Shortly afterward the farmer was met by a friend who wanted to know how he had fared at the police court. "Nobbut middlin'," was the reply. "Did they fine you?" "Yes," responded the victim; "an' 'ang me if I can understand it! Last year an' the year afore that I told the same tale about the same dog, an' it wor allus good enough afore! Who's been tamperin' wi' the law sin' last year?"

IN AGONY WITH ITCHING

"About four years ago I broke out with sores on my arms like boils. After two months they were all over my body, some coming, and some going away. In about six months the boils quit, but my arms, neck and body broke out with an itching, burning rash. It would burn and itch, and come out in pimples like grains of wheat. I was in a terrible condition; I could not sleep or rest. Parts of my flesh were raw, and I could scarcely bear my clothes on. I could not lie in bed in any position and rest. In about a year the sores extended down to my feet. Then I suffered agony with the burning, itching sores. I could hardly walk and for a long time I could not put on socks.

"All this time I was trying everything I could hear of, and had the skill of three doctors. They said it was eczema. I got no benefit from all this. I was nearly worn out, and had given up in despair of ever being cured when I was advised by a friend to try Cuticura Remedies. I purchased Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Resolvent, and used exactly as directed. I used the Cuticura Remedies constantly for four months, and nothing else, and was perfectly cured. It is now a year, and I have not had the least bit since. I am ready to praise the Cuticura Remedies at any time. (Signed) E. L. Cate, Exile, Ky., Nov. 10, 1910.

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Prest., Buffalo, N. Y.

Plummer Pioneer

Edward A. Hermanson,
Editor and Proprietor.

Entered as second-class matter, December 24 1906, at the post office at Plummer, Minnesota, under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Plummer Pioneer is published every Saturday at Plummer, Red Lake County, Minnesota. Subscription Rates: $1.25 per year in advance, 65 cents for six months, and 35 cents for three months.

Local advertising 5 cents a line for each insertion.

Judging by the great number of railroad wrecks this winter it would lead one to believe there is something rotten in the system that needs fumigating.

The announcement of Hon. Alvah Eastmen of St. Cloud as alderman-at-large of Minnesota is generally accepted as a very favorable one in this part of the state. Mr. Eastman is an honest upright and eneagetic gentleman who is fit admirable well for the office and if elected would undoubtedly fill his official capacity to satisfaction.

Rumors and more rumors of railroads to be built in this part of the state within the next couple of years is being published by the press of this section every week. While we would fain credit all of these rumors as authoritive they are possible and the most of them can be accepted as probable. That Northern Minnesota is about to see the commencement of its railroad activities is certain. It is hard to find any place where railroads are as badly needed as in Northern Minnesota and where they could be built more satisfactorily and operated so profitably. Take the lands to the east and northeast where miles and miles of fertile land are berift of an owner for the lack of proper facilities to haul the produce to market. The time is coming, and is not far hence when every acre of land in this section will have its owner and when the lack of proper railroad facilities will be a thing of the past.

The goverment should accumulate a surplus stock of timber against the time when the demand for forest products, in view of the rapidly diminishing supply will be one of the most critical economic conditions confronting the country, in the opinion or Henry S. Graves, chief forester of the United States, as expressed in his annual report submitted to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson.

The application of this policy," he declares, "will not prevent sales of national forest timber to an amount sufficient to make the forest self-supporting.

It seems as if Canada in spite of its turning down Reciprocity has to depend on this country taking a large share of its grain. The storage capacity at Port Arthur and Fort William is taken up so that the farmers of the Canadian Northwest have nowhere to dispose of their grain unless it comes across the line. Many of them have hauled their grain to town and had to wait several days before being able to dispose of it. Those living near enough to the U. S. line have paid the duty and driven across and marketed it on this side. Our railroads have met the difficulty and have made a rate of 18 cents per bushel on wheat from Regina to Duluth which will mean that wheat will be pouring down to Duluth and Superior.—Herald-Rustler.

The oft repeated rumors of the construction of the Soo Line from a point in Southwestern North Dakota thru Grand Forks, and Red Lake Falls to connect with the Duluth extension here is being brought to life again in accordance with the many likely rumors of railroad building in this part of the state. It is evident from the fact that a line has been run over this route that it is possible and altogether probable that a line will be built within a short time. This report can also be strengthened by the well known fact that the Soo company owns many acres of land here which it is holding for some unknown purpose. It can be readily seen from this that the company is planning some extensions here in the near future. The proposed line would open up a vast territory in the fertile grain belt of southwestern North Dakota and furnish direct shipping points to market. While indications point to the possibility that this line will be built the outcome however remains to be seen.

THE TREATMENT FOR AZOTURIA.

Azoturia is a very peculiar affection of the horse, in which the animal shows a special form of lameness upon exercise, after having remained idle for a day or two, writes Dr. G. A. Roberts in American Agriculturist. The cause is not definitely known, and yet the circumstances under which the disease develops are rather constant, such, for instance, as an animal in vigorous condition, fed liberally upon nitrogenous feed, remaining idle over Sunday, a holiday, or at other times.

Upon being taken out the following morning the animal usually shows an excess of energy, but before going far begins to go lame in one or both hind limbs until, if urged further, becomes completely paralyzed behind, going down and unable to rise. He also shows considerable pain, as though he might be suffering from some form of colic, with a profuse sweating. On reaching this point the animal usually ceases to void the urine, which, when drawn, appears a very dark brown or coffee color. The pulse and breathing are somewhat accelerated, and frequently there is considerable nervous excitement. The muscles of the loin and thigh are tense and rigid.

Years ago when the hackney was chiefly in the hands of wealthy amateurs he was ridiculed by partisans of the trotter as an animal that could only show on the line and even in that way for a very limited time. He has proved the contrary and has also proved that he is the superior of any breed of horse living where style, form, action and good disposition are factors. The handsome mare with colt at side is Silfield Venus. She is owned by Reginald Vanderbilt and was a prize winner at the New York state fair.

The treatment should begin as soon as the lameness shows itself. After a few hours of rest, the distress will be over. The more exercise given the animal after the lameness begins, the more severe the trouble, and the more energetic means of treatment required. In a case showing signs of nervous excitement, it should receive two tablespoonfuls of bromide of potassium every three or four hours until becoming quiet. Sweating should be induced by blanketing wrung out of hot water and covered with a dry one. Allow all the water the animal will drink and give it four tablespoonfuls sweet spirits of niter three times a day if bladder is not paralyzed. If unable to void the urine, the bladder must be emptied three times daily. A laxative or purgative should be given early in the disease. If the animal remains somewhat stiff, give a teaspoonful in the feed twice a day of the following: Powdered nux vomica, four teaspoonfuls; powdered sulphate of iron, six teaspoonfuls; powdered gentian root, six teaspoonfuls.

Pure Breds Pay Best.

The farm should have on it all the good stock it will keep and the help you have can give the proper care. The well bred, profitable kind of horses will do the same work—except more of it—that the scrubs are now doing. It is just as cheap and much more profitable to have pure bred beef cattle instead of common stuff. If you are milking a few cows and selling the cream you can have, if you will, cows which produce five or six times as much milk as scrubs. You can have pure bred hogs which make pork cheaper than scrubs, and you can sell a sow or a boar for breeding purposes. A few sheep will help things alone. Not one of these improved kinds of live stock will in any way prevent or interfere with the growing of wheat or corn for market which may just now have your undivided attention. Think this over. Resolve to get a few animals of better than common stock next year. The good ones increase rapidly and soon you'll have all you can keep

Judging from the size of the cream checks the patrons of the Plummer Creamery are receiving we predict that within 5 years there will not be an acre, of good land anywhere within 10 or 12 miles of Plummer to be had for less than $40 or $50 per acre. Red Lake County is fast getting to be known as one of the best dairy counties in the state of Minnesota and the immigration agents and Railroad Companies predict that there in this county this comming year 1911 there will be the greatest movement in land with sales principally to actual settlers from southern Minnesota, Iowa Wisconsin, and Illinois that this country has ever seen and they are certainly in position to know whereof they speak.

Co-operation of The Northwest

In Development and Settling of Country Urged By J. J. Hill.

In a statement issued from the offices of the Northwestern Development league, James J. Hill, chairman of the board of the Great Northern railroad, advocates the strengthening of the organization, co-operation of the Northwestern states and establishment of a central colonization or immigration bureau to aid in the development and settling of the American Northwest. The statement from Mr. Hill is a powerful endorsement of the movement started in Helena, Mont,, last May, when the Northwestern Development league was organized.

"The states of this league spend enough separately on immigration projects to bring in several times as many people each year as they gain: but a considerable portion of it is devoted to enticing settlers from one of them to another," says Mr. Hill. The states in the league are Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon and the territory of Alaska.

Mr. Hill goes on to say: "A most desirable result of this confederation would be the establishment of a common immigration agency, with resources sufficient for a comprehensive canvass of possible settlers, but absolutely impartial as to their location anywhere within this zone between the Mississippi and the Pacific. Substitute one central colonization bureau for seven, and every dollar expended will do the work that five do now.

"This association of seven states and our great undeveloped territory comes into existance in an interesting way. The Northwest Development league is not the creation of the promoter's art. It is not a product of either ambition or jealousy. It is a grouping of business entities having work in common which can be accomplished better united than divided."

Will go After The Business.

For the comming year the state manufacturing plant at Stillwater will place on the market 1,100 binders, 3,200 mowers and 1,500 hayrakes. These machines are nearly all made and it is expected that all will be sold next summer. The state board of control has fixed the price so that the profit to the state from the sale will be $21,756.

The output of twine for the coming crop season will be 17,000,000 pounds. Last year 13,541, 000 pounds were sold the receipts being $941,641. The twine department netted the state a profit of $50,000 last year.—Ex.

For years J. S. Donahue, So. New Congregation

Nor. Evangelicial Luthern Congregation Organized Sunday.

Immediately after the services held by Rev. Palm in the local schoolhouse Sunday evening a business meeting was called for the purpose of organizing a local congregation of the Norwegian Evangelical Luthern church. About half a dozen families were enrolled as members at this time but this number will be greatly increased in a very short time. A constitution was adopted and officers elected as follows:

Secy—Ole Johnson
Treas—Ole Bergdahl
Trustees—Ole Bergedahl, A. J. Alrick and Knut Henderson.

The office of President is generally confered on the clergyman elected to officiate for the congregation. At present no call has been extended for a clergyman but this matter has been left with a committee from the trustees to determine at a latter date. The officers and those interested in the organization of the congregation are elated over their prospects of having a strong congregation before summer sets in. Many who have not as yet been added to the church records have expressed their willingness to become members at a latter date, and the congregation extends their welcome to anyone who are not at present affiliated with any church, to become members of the local congregation. It is the intention, as soon as the organization is put on a solid footing, to lay the plans for erecting a church here.

A Girl's Wild Midnight Ride.

To warn people of a fearful forest fire in the Catskills a young girl rode horse-back at midnight and saved many lives. Her deed was glorious but lives are often saved by Dr. King's New Discovery in curing lung trouble, coughs and colds, which might have ended in consumption or pneumonia. "It cured me of a dreadful cough and lung disease," writes W. R. Patterson, Wellington, Tex., "after four in our family had died with consumption, and I gained 87 pounds." Nothing so sure and safe for all throat and lung troubles. Prices 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by all druggists.

Severen Hanson, of Sisseton, S. D., was in town the first of the week and while here purchased a fine quarter section of land in the town of Garnes. Mr. Hanson expects to be ready to move unto his land by the first of March. He is very well pleased with this section, and Plummer and vicinty in particular. He states that the last year was a very unsuccessful year in his part of the country, the crops being almost a total failure, due mainly to the hot winds that contued almost a month. Owing to these unsatisfactory conditions he decided to locate elsewhere, and being informed regarding the fine lands in this section, decided to investigate, and is very well satisfied with the results he found.

Henry Enderle recived a letter the first of the week from Samual Gibeau Secretary of the Red Lake County Republican Central Committee informing him that he had been appointed an executive member of that body for the territory of Emardville and fraction of Wyandotte townships

An Explanation.

In a letter to the Land office at Crookston under date of January 20, 1912, the Commissioner of the General Land Office forwards a copy of his letter of the same date addressed to Congressman Steenerson, relative to the statutery life of entries in the "Eleven Towns." This ruling considerably modifies the construction heretofore placed on the regulations govering entries in this area and we desire to give the matter such publicity as will correct wrong impressions. The letter is as follows:

Department of the Interior
General Land Office,
Washington, January 20, 1912.
Hon. H. Steenerson,
House of Representatives.
My dear Mr. Steenerson:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 18th inst., asking for information relative to the statutory life of homestead entries made under the act of February 20, 1904, (33 Stat. 45), for ceded Red Lake Indian Reservation lands, it appearing that there is considerally uncertainty among such entrymen, by reason of the two acts extending the time within which the installment payments might be made. One of these extensions was granted by the act of March 26, 1910, (36 Stat. 265), which allowed two years additional time. You will probably remember that sometime after the passage of this act, the matter was taken personally by the Commissioner with Senator Nelson and yourself, and your atention was directed to the fact that the act would probably fail to afford releif to many of the very persons in whose behalf it was enacted, who had made entries during the first sale, and even with the two years additional time, would still be in the default in their installment payments. It was then stated that the act would be constructed by this office to grant two years additional time from its date, thus extending the time, within which payments might be made, to March 26, 1912, and letters subsequently written by this office are doubtless the basis on which the local officers have advised entryman that the statutory life of their entries will expire on March 26, 1912.

The first extension act effecting these lands was that of June 21, 1906, (34 Stat. 325, 326), which applied, with some exceptions, to ceded Indian Reservation lands generally in Minnesota. The instructions thereunder were, of course, generally in nature, and it was stated that the extentions of time for making payments involved a corresponding time in which to make final proof. However, in the case of Red Lake lands, an extension of time to make proof did not necessarily follow, as, while it was required that the installment payments be completed within five years from the date of sale, proof was permitted to be made within six years from date of sale; consequently, the extension of time to make payment simply made the time, within which payment might be made, indentical with the statutory life of the entry.

Constructing the act of March 25, 1910, as granting two years additionol to the time already allowed by law, within which the installment payments might be made, and as proof and payments, as the law then stood, were required to be made at the same time, and within six years from date of sale, the said act necessarly carried with it an extension of time of two years, within which proof need be made on entries affected thereby, and in all such cases the statutory life of the entry would be eight years from its date. Therefore, while this office has, as stated construed said act, to grant releif in those cases where such relief is necessary, manifestly it does not follow that the statutory life of any entry is shortened by reason of said act.

To summarize: Though an entryman may be in default, as the law stands, as to his installment payments and his entry be subject to cancellation for that reason, any entryman under the act of February 20, 1904, would be allowed eight years from the date of his entry, within which, to submit final proof, in the absence of any other objection.

WORK BEHIND the SCENES

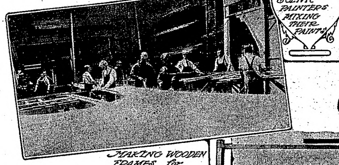
It is the beauty and perfection of modern stage pictures, quite as much as the art of the singers, the musicians, the actors and the actresses that make for the enjoyment of present-day entertainments. Yet it is pretty safe to say that not one in a hundred of us who enjoys an evening at the theater, the opera or the moving picture hall ever bestows a passing thought upon the time and work and money that is represented by the setting of a pleasing "scene." Yet it is in this rather than in any other phase of the entertainment world that we find the evidence of twentieth century progress. Our grandfathers and our great-great-grandfathers may possibly have seen acting as good as any we may witness today, but assuredly they never beheld the make-believe stories enacted before such marvelous backgrounds.

It is indeed a far cry from the days of long ago when the player folk, having no scenery whatever, had to content themselves with draperies and common boards, to the current stage spectacles wherein it puzzles the spectator to determine what is real and what is artificial. Yet as a matter of fact, modern stage scenery, for all that it is so important, is only one of several factors in the creation of the masterly stage pictures of this age. Quite as important are the "properties,"—the furniture, the art objects and the thousand and one other things (not painted, but real) which have places in the stage counterfeits of gardens and palaces and temples and prisons. Even the lighting facilities play an important part. Possibly you can remember the time when the only lighting effects in the theater were found in the burning of "red fire" when Little Eva went to heaven. Now we behold elaborate systems of special lamps and colored globes that reproduce the effect of dawn, sunset, twilight and moonlight, to say nothing of the glare of the noonday sun.

SCENIC ARTISTS AT WORK

SCENIC PAINTERS MIXING THEIR PAINTS

MAKING THEATRICAL "PROPERTIES"



MAKING WOODEN FRAMES for SCENERY

MODEL of A STAGE SETTING

And, as has been hinted, all this challenging of nature costs a pretty penny. Indeed, the modern manager will often spend as much on a single "production" as would have sufficed to pay all the expenses of a theater for an entire year in the old times. An expenditure of $100,000 on painted canvas and tinsel and gilt and costumes is nothing unusual ere the public gets so much as a peep at the gorgeous array, and then when the manager undertakes to transport all this paraphernalia from city to city he finds that he must needs charter special baggage cars, which adds to the expense. Then, too, much time is required to produce such stage pictures. The player folk and the opera singers enjoy long vacations in the summer time, but the scene painters and the "property" manufacturers and the costume makers are never idle. Why, only recently one big firm in New York spent three years in preparation for a stupendous stage spectacle and they even sent their scene painters to the heart of the African desert in order that they might study the sand wastes they were to depict on canvas.

The painting of the scenery might be designated the first step in the preparation for a theatrical or operatic production, as it is, in point of magnitude, one of the most important. The biggest undertakings in scene painting are those in preparation for productions of grand opera as given in our largest cities. The explanation is simple—the grand opera house stages are so much larger than the stages of ordinary theaters or auditoriums that infinitely greater expanses of canvas are necessary to fill the space. Why, just by way of illustration it may be noted that the painted palace which is so conspicuous in the opera "Aida" is sixty-six feet long and thirty-six feet wide. The monster picture of the harbor of Nagasaki, Japan, which forms the background for scenes in the operatic version of "Madam Butterfly" measures 2,700 square feet.

There are many preliminaries connected with scene painting, for the managers and directors of opera and playhouses must approve of the designs and color schemes of the stage pictures ere the painters are allowed to proceed with the execution of the work. In order that his ideas may be approved in advance the head scene painter prepares preliminary sketches just as a portrait painter submits a rough outline sketch to give his subject an idea of the pose he has adopted. The first sketch of a theatrical scene or drop curtain is executed in water colors on a sheet of paper not one-thousandth as large as the original will be, but it nevertheless gives an idea of the arrangement and coloring and enables the director to indicate to the scene painter whether or not he desires any changes made in the plan.

With his water color sketches duly approved the chief of the corps of scene painters proceeds to construct a miniature working model of the complete "set" which he is to evolve. This model, which is for all the world like the toy theaters that are the delight of children, is a big improvement over the water color sketches because it is in effect a working model and not merely a small-scale picture. The latter would be all right as a guide if the task in hand was the painting of a drop curtain or other flat surface, but a stage "set," it will be understood, comprises not a uniform surface of that kind, but is made up of a number of different pieces of scenery, of different types, which are to be placed on the stage at different angles to one another. There is the "drop" or curtain which forms the background of the whole picture and there are also ceilings and "wings" and mayhap even make-believe houses or trees to be set out in the middle of the stage. Now it goes without saying that these different units can be fashioned in proper relation to one another only when the scene makers have a tiny fac-simile to serve as a guide.

There are two different "schools" or methods of scene painting in vogue at the great studios which are maintained as adjuncts of America's leading homes of the drama and of music. Under one plan the scenic artists with their helpers and paint-mixers, stand on what is known as a "scene painting bridge." This bridge, hemmed in on either hand with a great expanse of canvas undergoing decoration, presents, at first glance, merely the appearance of a long narrow room, but upon closer inspection it is seen that the floor where the painters stand is in reality a bridge supported at the ends just as is any suspension bridge. On either side of the bridge one may look down into a great well or abyss and it is into this seemingly bottomless pit that the scenery in the making is lowered as the artists on the bridge complete the decoration of one section of the surface and are ready to turn their paint brushes to a fresh surface. The advantage of such an arrangement, it will be understood, is that it permits work on the largest expanse of canvass without the necessity of folding or rolling up the monster cloth—something that would be disastrous to a coating of wet paint even if it were not objectionable for other reasons.

The second plan of creating stage pictures is known in the profession as painting "on the flat." Under this system the expanse of canvas is not suspended in mid-air as is done before a "bridge," but is stretched on the floor of the studio—a specially constructed building with a floor more than two hundred feet in length. In wielding his paint brushes the artist literally walks over the field of operations, taking care of course to complete the decoration as he progresses so that he will not have to retrace his steps. Whichever method of decoration be employed the painting of the canvas is only a part of the work of preparing scenery. Frames of wood must be carefully and accurately prepared to support the various set pieces and a dozen men are all the while busily engaged in a perfectly appointed carpenter shop preparing these fantastic-shaped backs for the pictures,—the part the public never sees. There are many supplementary operations, too, including the delicate one of sawing out the outline of foliage or stone walls or roofs after the painted canvas has been mounted on the wooden frames.

Extreme versatility is the first requirement of the men who manufacture theatrical and operatic "properties," for they may be called upon at short notice to fashion anything from the "calf of gold" to a bunch of flowers or from a royal throne to a child's doll. Wood and paper and plaster are employed for most of these stage adjuncts, for it is desirable that they be of light weight, though fairly durable. The statues, etc., are all molded in plaster and incidently it may be remarked that some of these stage sculptors are men of exceptional ability. The costume department is another institution "behind the scenes" that contributes to our modern stage pictures and the great opera houses now have not only dressing-making establishments of their own, but jewelry shops, armor makers, who fashion the helmets and coats of mail, and, finally, special bootmakers, who are adepts in making the fancy shoes and slippers that in stage productions reproduce the footgear of all ages. Finally the electricians lend a hand in completing the average stage picture. On the stage of an up-to-date city theater there are as many as 5,000 incandescent electric lights, to say nothing of "spot lights," that resemble searchlights, and this electric system must be supplied with different colored globes in order to carry out the effect of the white light of midday, the ruddy glow of the sunset hour and the pale blue brilliance of the moonlight.

Scientists Do Not Agree

Divide Into Two Camps on the Question of History of the Earliest Known Americans.

"How long were the ruins of the southwest inhabited? and, how dense was the population in ancient times? Some of the best archeologists have strongly insisted that appearances are deceiving. The hundreds, and indeed thousands, of sites of ancient villages in Colorado, the Texan Panhandle, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona, as well as in similar parts of northern Mexico, were not all inhabited at one time, so they tell us. Most represent more temporary stopping places where migratory bands of a people supposed to have been ancestors of the Indians settled for a few years and then moved on. At the outside limit, so say these archeologists, the entire population never amounted to more than a few score thousands, whose civilization was of the lowest and most insignificant type. Other students, fewer in number than the orthodox school, hold that the majority of the ruins were all occupied at the same time and for century after century. They say that the population of the arid southwest must have amounted to many hundred thousands—decidedly more in all probability than the country supports today. Furthermore, if this were so, although the type of civilization may have been most primitive compared with ours, yet it was by no means so low as that of the modern Indians. It must have been of the same grade as that of early Babylonia, Egypt, Palestine or Greece before the art of writing was invented. People who could dwell peacefully for centuries in large, permanent communities, and could build great communal houses and long systems of canals, were by no means untutored savages. Civil order and submission to the will of the majority must have been as well developed among them as among us. Such a view leads one to believe that, if only we could trace it, the history of the primitive Americans would prove quite as interesting, and to us possibly more interesting than that of the early oriental peoples to whom our scholars devote so much time and our millionaires so much money.—Harper's.

LIKE THROWING AWAY MONEY

American Cook Wastes Liquids From Which French Cook Would Make Appetizing Meal.

"Only water," says the American and English cook, pouring off the liquid from asparagus and cauliflower and onions and potatoes, and thereby sending down her kitchen sink that of which a French woman would make an appetizing meal.

In French and Italian kitchens the soup pot stands always on the stove, and into it goes every bit of water from the following vegetables: Onions, peas, beans, turnips, parsnips, carrots, potatoes, asparagus, artichokes, cauliflower and cabbage. The liquid from "greens," such as beet tops, spinach, dandelion and kale cannot be used for soup, but the water from spinach is excellent as a sauce for fish, if slightly thickened and flavored with butter.

The soup pot, receiving all this contribution of savory liquid, does not need the great quantities of meat that make it so expensive an item in American and English economics. The bone from a porterhouse or sirloin steak, well cracked, is sufficient, or, from a leg of lamb that has been cooked rare, or from any roasted or broiled meat.

Endless variations can be made on this foundation of a bone and water. A cupful of dried Lima beans and half a head of cabbage, chopped, together with a bit from the dinner of the day before, like string beans or carrots, will give a very good Milanese soup, of which Italians are so fond. A teaspoonful of Extract of Beef diluted with a quart of the essence of the pot will produce fine consomme. In August, when peas are getting too old and coarse to be eaten as a vegetable, strain a quart of them into the pot, after cooking them thoroughly, add the water in which they were boiled, thicken very slightly, and you will have a puree of peas that cannot be improved upon.

Clear vegetable soup can be produced by putting a cup of finely chopped parsley, onion and celery into the pot and simmering half an hour. "Croutons," little cubes of toasted bread, should be dropped in at the last moment. Rich vegetable soup is made by adding to the pot two or three fresh tomatoes, several onions, a bunch of carrots, two potatoes diced and a few stalks of celery. Any vegetables left from a dinner should be cut into little bits and dropped into the soup pot.

Raw string beans, chopped and cooked an hour in the pot, and a handful of water cress, added half an hour before serving, makes an unusual soup, which is typically French.

TO KEEP PARLOR RUG FLAT

By Use of Cleverly Contrived Snap-Button Exasperating Hummocks Are Eliminated.

An ingenious somebody has thought of a way to keep the parlor rug from humping itself into exasperating hummocks when the bridge table is dragged over it, and the bedroom rug from curling meanly at its edge so that you stumble over it and break your eyeglasses against the door jamb. The new device is nothing more nor less than a cleverly contrived snap-button and catch—much larger, of course, than the tiny affair which tailors use to fasten skirt openings. The button is tacked to the floor and the catch stitched to the wrong side of the ring—and there you are. It is the work of only a moment to unfasten the snap-catch and loosen the rug for a shaking out of doors.

Dry Cleaning for White Articles.

Place the blouse or lace to be cleaned on a white sheet and rub block magnesia over all parts as you would soap. After covering it entirely with magnesia, fold the sheet in many thicknesses around it. Pound on one side, then on the other; this drives the magnesia through the material. Leave in the powder for some hours, repeat the process and shake out-of-doors until entirely free from the powder. The garment will come out thoroughly clean and a little pressing will make it look like new.

Fine illusion may be cleaned in this way; also white felt hats.—Delineator.

A White Plum Pudding.

Beat to a cream a half cup sugar and three-quarters cup butter. Add four eggs well beaten, a saltspoonful salt, two cups milk and a quart of flour mixed with one-half cup shredded citron, one-half cup seeded raisins, one-half cup currants, a teaspoonful grated nutmeg and a teaspoonful vanila. Just before turning into the mold stir in two even tablespoonfuls baking powder. Boil or steam two hours and serve with any good sauce.

Use a Stand For Pie.

Never set a pie on a flat surface when removing from the oven. Use a flatiron stand or wire teapot stand. This prevents steamed and soaked and soggy under pie crust. Three table forks placed so that the tines meet in one point in the center will let the air circulate under when one has not the stand.

Clean the Irons.

When heating flatirons it is a good plan to lift and wipe them after being on the stove a few seconds, as the moisture caused by the first heating causes them to become rusty if they are left until they are thoroughly heated. This will also save the labor of cleaning them when ironing.

RAILROAD MAN WRITES REMARKABLE LETTER.

In 1903 and 1904, I was a terrible sufferer for about five months with kidney and bladder trouble. I could not sleep nights. One doctor said I was going into consumption and gave me up to die. Had two other doctors but received no help from either of them and am sure I would have been in my grave had I not seen your advertisement in the "Marinette Daily Eagle Star." After taking several bottles of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root I was entirely cured.

In the last two years I have been a railroad fireman and have passed two examinations for my kidneys successfully so that I know that my kidneys are in excellent condition now as a result of your great preparation.

Yours very truly,

When the Flag Looks Good.

"I have been in countries where the laboring man had meat once a year; sometimes twice—Christmas and Easter. And I have seen women carrying upon their heads a burden that no man would like to carry, and at the same time knitting busily with both hands. And those women lived without meat; and when I thought of the American laborer I said to myself: 'After all, my country is the best in the world.' And when I came back to the sea and saw the old flag flying in the air, it seemed to me as though the air from pure joy had burst into blossom."—Robert G. Ingersoll.

SURPRISED DOCTOR.
Illustrating the Effect of Food.

The remarkable adaptability of Grape-Nuts food to stomachs so disordered that they will reject everything else, is illustrated by the case of a woman in Racine, Wis.

"Two years ago," she says, "I was attacked by a stomach trouble so serious that for a long time I could not take much of any sort of food. Even the various kinds prescribed by the doctor produced most acute pain.

"We then got some Grape-Nuts food, and you can imagine my surprise and delight when I found that I could eat it with a relish and without the slightest distress.

"When the doctor heard of it he told me to take several small portions each day, because he feared I would grow tired of it as I had of all other food.

"But to his surprise, (and that of everybody else), I did not tire of Grape-Nuts, and became better day by day, till, after some weeks, my stomach entirely recovered and I was able to eat anything my appetite craved.

"My nerves, which had become so weakened that I feared I would become insane, were also restored by the Grape-Nuts food in connection with Postum which has become our table beverage. I appreciate most gratefully and thankfully the good that your food preparations have done me, and shall be glad to answer any letters inquiring as to my experience." HOW THE ELEPHANT TALKS

Elephants are said to make use of a great variety of sounds in communicating with each other, and in expressing their wants and feelings. Some are uttered by the trunk, some by the throat. The conjunctures in which either means of expression is employed cannot be strictly classified, as fear, pleasure, want and other emotions are sometimes indicated by the trunk, sometimes by the throat. An elephant rushing upon an assailant trumpets shrilly with fury.

Fear is similarly expressed in a shrill, brassy trumpet, or by a roaor from the lungs. Pleasure by a continued low squeaking through the trunk or an almost inaudible purring sound from the throat. Want—as a calf calling its mother—is chiefly expressed by the throat. A peculiar sound is made use of by elephants to express dislike or apprehension, and at the same time to intimidate, as when the cause of some alarm has not been clearly ascertained and the animals wish to deter an intruder. It is produced by rapping the end of the trunk smartly on the ground, a current of air hitherto retained being sharply emitted through the trunk, as from a valve, at the moment of impact. The sound made resembles that of a large sheet of tin rapidly doubled. It has been erroneously ascribed by some writers to the animals beating their sides with their trunks.

FIRST STOCKING FRAME

The first stocking frames are said to have been made by William Lee, curate of Culverton, in 1586, and were at first worked by him with the assistance of his sweetheart or wife.

Like most other inventors, he failed to receive a suitable reward for his labor and is said to have died at Paris in 1610, starving and brokenhearted.

The stocking weavers' company, established in 1663, for the next 90 years had almost a monopoly of the business, but Great Britain today makes nearly one-half of the stockings made in the world. Germany is a close second, being famous for the cheapness and excellence of her hose.

What is believed to be the largest tree in the world grew in Southern California and stood over 300 feet high, measuring 90 feet at the base. The section here illustrated weighs 50 tons and is 56 feet in circumference. The concentric rings indicate that the tree began growing in the year 550.

WINE FOR FOWLS

M. Joubert, professor at the agricultural college at Fountainebleau, claims that he has discovered a new and simple method of making hens lay. He feeds them with wine in addition to their ordinary food. The professor has not allowed his discovery to be made known lightly. He has been experimenting with fowls of all kinds for several years and finds the same result in every case. In each case he experimented for the four winter months with two sets of 12 fowls of the same breed, adding bread soaked in wine to the food of one of the two sets of 12. In every case after six separate trials the wine fed hens laid more eggs in the proportion of 20 eggs a month or thereabout.

SMALLEST COW IN WORLD

A restaurant keeper in Paris is the proud owner of the smallest cow in the world—so far as is recorded. The little animal is just over two feet in height and is five years old. She gives good milk, though naturally not in great quantity, and besides attracts many customers to her owner's cafe.

HEAD DRESS OF TEHUANAS

The head dress of the Tehuana Indian women whose home is upon the Isthmus of Tehuantepec in Mexico is of remarkable design and not lacking in attractiveness. It is called a hulpil and is an elaborate lace affair resembling in some respects an Elizabethan ruff. It is worn on special occasions and in different shapes. Sometimes it is not flared out from the head, but is worn hanging down the back. The Tehuana women perform the business functions of the tribe, many of them being small merchants in town upon the Isthmus. The men live in idleness. In this respect they are like Burmese women and there is a striking resemblance between the Burmese and the Tehuanas. The daily costumes of the Tehuana women very much resemble that of the Burmese women. They are truly oriental in their fondness for brilliant colors.

CURIOUS AUSTRIAN CUSTOM

"Flogging the dummy" is a curious custom kept up by the villagers of Austria. A dummy is dressed up in grotesque fashion, and is called the "Luzelwife." It is taken from house to house by the troupe of grotesquely dressed musicians and before each house it is flogged. Then the band plays till the householders emerge with cakes and wine for the crowd.

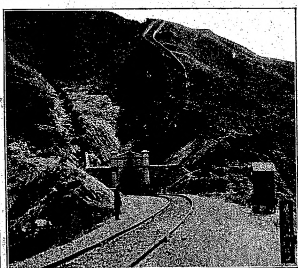
HOUSE OF DIAMONDS

About 20 years ago the diamond merchants of Amsterdam held their market as best they could. The merchants would meet in a cafe, or sometimes in the street, where, drawing their gems from their pockets, they would compare them, chaffer, and conclude their contracts. Those days may be termed the patriarchal age. In time the merchants saw that their precious goods were worthy of a more dignified procedure. They rented premises, which they named "Beurs voor den Diamanten." Business prospering, Amsterdam absorbed about two-thirds of the world's commerce in the precious stones, and the syndicate determined to build their own hall or exchange, and this the minister of the interior has recently opened on the Weesperplein.

NEW MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

A new stringed musical instrument is reported to have been devised by a Japanese violin maker in the city of Nagoya. The invention is named the reikin, and seems likely to supersede the samisen. It has the shape of a guitar, save in the neck, which is the only part resembling a samisen. There are four strings to it, and by manipulation of the keys the instrument can be made to do the work of several samisen. The inventor has played his reikin in an orchestra of Japanese instruments, and showed that it is a success in every way.

Tunnel Under Chinese Wall



All things relating to China are interesting these days, and not the least interesting is the railroad from Peking to Kalgan, which was financed, engineered and built entirely by the Chinese. The line is 130 miles long and there are four concrete tunnels. One of these tunnels passes under the Great Wall, the entrance to it forming the subject of our illustration.

FRIVOLITIES

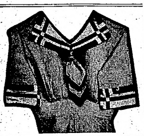
PRETTY FOR NECKWEAR

BORDERED AND LACE-TRIMMED HANDERCHIEFS MUCH USED.

Dress Accessories That Furnish Effective Opportunities—Little Finishing Touches in Dress That Save One From Monotony.

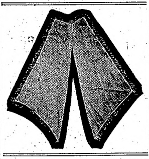
Bordered and lace-trimmed handkerchiefs are put to all sorts of uses in making dress accessories. In neckwear and in trimmings the opportunities for their effective use are many and designers have only just begun to exploit them.

It is by changing the little finishing touches in dress that we are saved from monotony. It would be absurd to have quantities of clothes made up just for the sake of having a variety. Wise is she who has many accessories of dress. Neckpieces, beads, brooches, turn-over collars and cuffs, laces, jabots and revers; things which may be kept clean and which supply the finish and variety which are more noticeable than the gown itself and the most charming elements in the apparel of women.



By choosing a good color in a bordered handkerchief one may have revers at the neck, cuffs and tie border to match, to be worn with a dress having a Dutch neck. For cold weather such a dress is worn over a guimpe. One large handkerchief supplies all the pieces. Among bordered handkerchiefs for men there are many, in good fast colors and several of these sets cost next to nothing.

A pair of coat revers are shown, made of a lace-bordered handkerchief.



The largest size made for women is chosen for them, and not diagonally across. The embroidered corner with tiny initial is an additional attraction. These are edged with a narrow binding of mull or batiste and pinned to the coat. A second handkerchief in this size may be cut into a sailor collar and the two together make a pretty fichu effect.

PRETTY SETS OF LINGERIE

Cupids and Doves Are Embroidered on the Dainty Garments of One Bride.

Openwork wheel embroidery so oft repeated that very little of the background was to be seen is one of the favorite embellishments of a double set of underwear made for a coming trousseau.

Two other sets of finest cambric are embroidered with little Cupids and doves supporting a rope of roses, all rendered in the finest embroidery.

A third set has Malines lace inset upon it, and fine Irish crochet and Valenciennes decorate a fourth.

For some of the little matinee jackets finely pleated chiffon flounces are chosen as an edging and others have scalloped ones oversewn with wool, which looks cozy and of an uncommon appearance upon wool-backed satin.

Completely charming are the coverlets sold to be thrown over the lingerie sets when put out by the lady's maid for morning or evening wear, each one among them a match to the lingerie.

The slips and blouses from the lingerie department of a well-known maker of such frivolities are like gossamer for lightness of weight and show the simplicity of line and design that is absolutely delightful when the finest fabrics are used.

There is a petal pink crepe blouse with a collar and straight yoke of black Chantilly lace, to which decoration is added a little breastpocket trimmed with a fan of black Chantilly.

Another is of the three layer kind, the first of finest sand-colored chiffon and the third of palest blue, with a sandwich between of "age yellow" lace.

DRESSING THE LITTLE GIRL

Artistic Arrangement of the Hair Helps, But Mother's Gown Shouldn't Be Imitated.

Some children do not lend themselves to any sort of artistic dressing. But, on the other hand, there are a great many who do, the arrangement of the hair having a large say in the consummation of a picturesque appearance.

Instance after instance can be recalled where a child with no real claim to beauty has been rendered of most attractive appearance, thanks to a discreet arrangement of the hair. But it seems to those who have the dressing of children very close to heart that we have come to a sort of standstill.

The lack of any really fresh departure is very marked. The same ground is worked year after year, and anything more deplorable than the spectacle of a little girl dressed in a tight skirt, a travesty of her mother's, is nowhere to be found.

The stage may, perchance, essay a scintillation of any fashionable foible, but a girl so dressed will go in with the crowd.

Coats of Broadcloth.

During the last few weeks there has been considerable interest shown in plain black coats of broadcloth, says the Dry Goods Economist. The majority of these coats are of a simple character and are trimmed with braid, velvet or satin and some with real or imitation fur.

FOR THE DRESSING TABLE.

Decorated Hair Brush, Easy to Fashion, Will Add a Great Deal to Its Appearance.

Often on a fastidiously decked dressing table the only article which is unattractive in appearance is the hair brush with a plain wooden back. Many women find that the usual silver backed brush is too soft bristled, and habitually use a plain, inexpensive one because it is stiffer.

A good way to bring them into harmony with the surroundings is to cover the backs of such brushes with brocade or broche silk.

Sandpaper the wood so that it will hold gum or paste. Have the silk cut the exact size and shape of the brush's back and paste is on very smoothly. Finish the edge, after the silk is dry, with a narrow border of gimp or galloon.

Flowered silk to match the other toilet belongings has the prettiest effect.

A brush treated in this way makes an attractive gift. Cretonne and small figured chintz may take the place of silk if they are used elsewhere in the bedroom furnishings.

Linen or plain silk with the monogram of the owner embroidered on it may also be used for these covers.

Protection for Curtains.

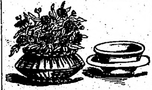
Sew large battenburg rings on sash curtains to run the brass rod through, instead of putting it through the hem of the curtain. These rings will keep the muslin from wearing out quickly, and may be left on the curtains while they are in the wash.

PRETTY BOWL FOR FLOWERS

It Is Only a Common Little White Pudding Basin That Has Been Decorated.

There are often times in a small household when an extra bowl is needed, and is not to be found, and an improvised one such as we illustrate comes in handy.

Our sketch illustrates the way in which one of the ordinary common little white pudding basins may be prettily decorated and made into a bowl that few people would suspect had for a foundation one of those rather unsightly little objects. In the first place a ring of cardboard is cut out, into which the basin is fitted in the manner shown in the right-hand illustration. Soft tissue paper crumpled up is packed above and below the ring, then over this construction a cover of soft silk or crinkled paper is arranged, gathered into a tiny frill at the top and again underneath, and tied round the neck of the basin with a fine silk cord at the base of the upper frill, and this is repeated below at the top of the lower frill. The ends of the silk cord in both cases may be knotted and frayed out into small tassels.



SUFFERED FOURTEEN YEARS.

A Terrible Case of Dropsy and How It Was Cured.

Mrs. W. R. Cody, 603 Tenth St., Lewiston, Idaho, says: "I was so lame and sore I could hardly move. Headaches were frequent and my whole body bloated. I had chills and hot flashes and my ankles swelled so I could scarcely wear my shoes. Kidney secretions bothered me and my nerves were unstrung. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and soon the swelling diminished. The backache and other troubles quickly disappeared, and I was completely cured."

The Thin Girl's Temper.

No thin woman can afford to lose her temper. "Nothing," says a good authority, "will make you so angular or give your face such an undesirable look as the free indulgence of your own will." A girl who was thin to a really painful degree gained 30 pounds in 60 days on the following regime: Twelve hours' sleep a day; a well-ventilated and cold room to sleep in, with plenty of fresh air all night; light down coverlets for warmth and hot-water bags at the feet if they are cold; loose, light clothing at all times, with plenty of space about the chest, shoulders and waist; a diet of cereals, cocoa, fresh fruits or starchy vegetables, potatoes, beans, etc., milk and cream—everything of a warming, fat-producing nature in the way of food; warm baths, though not too frequently.

An Every-Day Creed.

I desire to radiate health, cheerfulness, sincerity, calm courage and good will. I wish to live without hate, whim, jealousy, envy or fear. I wish to be simple, honest, natural, frank, clean in mind and clean in body, unaffected, ready to say "I do not know" if so it be, to meet all men on an absolute equality, to face any obstacle and meet every difficulty unafraid and unabashed. I wish others to live their lives, too, up to their highest, fullest and best. To that end I pray that I may never meddle, dictate, interfere, give advice that is not wanted, nor assist when my services are not needed. If I can help people I'll do it by giving them a chance to help themselves; and if I can uplift or inspire let it be by example. That is to say, I desire to be radiant—to radiate life.—Elbert Hubbard.

$25,000,000 FOR PENSIONS LIKELY

SENATE COMMITTEE WILL PROCEED WITH GREAT DELIBERATION IN REPORTING BILL.

AGAINST SULLAWAY BILL

Will Report a Substitute Which Will Carry An Annual Increase Only One-Third As Large.

Washington, Jan. 20.—It is apparent that the senate committee on pensions will not report the Sherwood bill, already passed by the house, but will report a substitute, drafted, in all probability, along the lines of the bill introduced in the senate by Mr. McCumber of North Dakota, committee chairman.

The Sherwood bill, according to figures submitted by the secretary of the interior, would add $75,651,548 a year to the pension roll, making it aggregate about $235,000,000. The supporters of the bill deny that the amount will be that large, and it is for the purpose of permitting Mr. Sherwood to present his figures that the senate committee has invited him to appear before it.

Bill to Carry About $25,000,000.

The likelihood is that the senate committee will ultimately agree on a bill carrying not to exceed about $25,000,000, maybe less. Such a bill would go through the senate, and in conference the house would probably yield, permitting the senate bill to become law.

Some interesting figures have been compiled for the senate committee on pensions, covering the pension operations of the government from the revolutionary war down to date. With reference to the civil war, these figures show that there were in round numbers, enlistments in the union army aggregating 2,700,000 men. Eliminating all reenlistments, 2,000,000 separate persons wore the union colors during that four years of stress and strain. The total sum since paid them or the dependent members of their families in the way of pensions aggregates about $4,000,000, or in round numbers, $2,000 has gone, out of the federal treasury in the way of pensions, since the close of the civil war, on behalf of every soldier who served on the union side in that war. The average length of service of these 2,000,000 men was one year.

It was estimated that in 1908 there were 705,195 surviving veterans of the civil war, and in 1910, 626,000 This estimate is to the effect that there will be 428,000 survivors in 1915, 251,000 in 1920, 116,000 in 1925, 37,000 in 1930, 6,000 in 1935, and 300 in 1940. According to these figures, the number of survivors will decrease 30 per cent in the next five years.

Washington, D. C.—Senator McCumber of North Dakota appealed to the senate to immediately ratify President Taft's arbitration treaties with England and France without amendment. He argued that the terms of the treaties in no way usurped the constitutional rights of the senate nor did they compel the arbitration of any traditional question of American policy such as the Monroe doctrine or the control of immigration.

Ratification of the treaties, Senator McCumber declared, would give to the cause of arbitration such an impetus that like treaties would soon be made with all civilized nations.

"With a treaty of this kind signed by all the great nations," said Senator McCumber, the war with Tripoli would never have been heard of and the cries of Persia for justice and mercy would not now be ringing throughout the world. The time is coming when no great nation will be able to borrow money from other nations to carry on an unjust war."

Senator McCumber quoted statistics to show that the government's appropriations for the army and navy had increased 230 per cent in 20 years, while the increase of population was 44 per cent.

England's war appropriations had increased 115 per cent in 20 years, he said, while her population had been increasing 20 per cent.

"Who can fail to see what the real end must be? Which country will first become bankrupt or paralyzed in its further efforts? The nations of the old world are being pauperized to defend themselves against each other. The condition is a crime against civilization."

Senator McCumber took the position that no construction of the language of the treaties could bind the United States to arbitrate a question involving the Panama canal.

"We must properly say this is an American question, not an international one, and one which could not be submitted to arbitration," he said.

SENATOR ROBERT TAYLOR

Robert Taylor, senator from Tennessee, is president of a possum club recently formed in Washington, when he gave a possum dinner to a few of his associates.

Washington, D. C.— After Postmaster General Hitchcock had been closeted with President Taft for more than an hour an authoritative statement was made at the White House that there had been no friction between the president and the postmaster general over the latter's proposed recommendation that the government acquire and operate all telegraph lines as an adjunct of the postal system.

Mr. Hitchcock had been summoned to the White House shortly before noon and there had been reports that the president was annoyed over the publication of the matter at this time. It developed, however, that Mr. Hitchcock had called the matter to the president's attention a year ago, but to make a more complete investigation a delay had been decided upon. Mr. Hitchcock had intended to bring the matter up again in recent cabinet sessions, but press of other business had prevented.

It also was said that the postmaster general's recommendation would go to congress according to schedule to receive such consideration as the leaders of the house and senate saw fit and without comment by the president.

Speaker Champ Clark declared that government ownership of the telegraph was too big a subject to discuss until all the details of the postmaster general's plans became known. Democratic Leader Underwood was reticent, and Republican Leader Mann of the house, treated the project gingerly.

Says Project Means Loss.

New York.—Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph company declared that if the government took over the telegraph lines of the country as is desired by Postmaster General Hitchcock, he believed the investment would be unprofitable. He said the cost would be enormous and he did not believe the plan would be carried out as long as there was competition in the telegraph business.

"The step would lead to taking over the telephone lines also," said Mr. McKay. "The British government has found this to be so. Two weeks ago it took over the telephone lines in England at an enormous expense.

"The telegraph and telephone lines in this country are worth from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000. This would include the independent telephone companies, owning nearly $500,000,000 of property and having some 450,000 stockholders. I venture to say that they would be operated by the government at great annual loss, just as in Great Britain, where the losses on the telegraphs alone, up to date, are figured at $175,000,000. Moreover, the government would then be employing hundreds of thousands of clerks, telephone girls, telegraph operators, managers, etc. It would be a colossal political machine."

Long Session of Congress.

Washington, D. C. — Both Democratic and Republican leaders in the house of representatives agree that there is little likelihood of congress adjourning before next August.

Washington, D. The Gamble bill to extend payment for lands on the open portion of these two reservations for a year was also favorably reported.

Wiley Is Vindicated.

Washington, D. C. — Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the chemistry bureau of the department of agriculture, the storm center of the food administration controversy last summer, is given a clean bill of health in the report of the house committee that investigated the charges. In its report the committee sustains Dr. Wiley all along the line except on technical unimportant details. The Republican members of the committee joined with the Democrats in making the report unanimous.

COURSE IN DOUBT

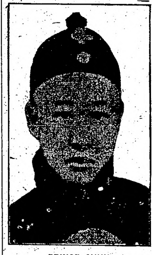
IMPERIAL CONFERENCE AT PALACE OF EMPRESS DOWAGER ACOMPLISHES LITTLE.

YOUNG PRINCE OPPOSED

Manchu Outbreak in Pekin Is Feared—Situation Continues Tense.—Quan Shi Kai Stays Out of Conference.

Pekin, China. — The princes of the imperial clan, a number of leading Manchu officials and several members of the government had a protracted conference with the empress dowager at the palace, but again separated without arriving at a decision on the question of abdication.

The leading princes favored an unconditional abdication of the throne. Three of the younger princes together with Tieh Liang, the former Tartar general at Hankin, would not, however, agree to the court's retirement to Jehol, although they did not suggest an alternative. There was considerable effervescence in Pekin throughout the day among both foreign residents and the Chinese. There were many rumors of the possibility of a Manchu outbreak, which, however, appears unlikely at present.



PRINCE CHUN,
Ex-Regent of China.

The ex-regent, Prince Chun, and the former premier, Prince Ching, visited Premier Yuan Shi Kai and had a long conference with him. It appears the court has not produced the gold it promised to provide and the imperial soldiers do not show any anxiety to fight for glory.

Premier Yuan Shi Kai was invited several times to participate in the conference of the princes but he steadfastly refused as he desired to leave the decision entirely to the court.

The situation continues tense. It seems impossible that Pekin can escape eventually a Manchu outbreak. Soldiers belonging to the imperial body guard openly distributed leaflets summoning the people to defend the constitutional monarchy unto death, but it is unlikely that any persons except the Manchus will fight for the monarchy.

It is currently reported that the irreconcilable prince Tsai Tao, brother of the ex-regent, is inciting the Manchu troops to cause the trouble.

Rebels Ask Powers' Recognition.

Nanking, China. — The republican government has sent an appeal to the powers for recognition. This took the form of a circular which was sent to Washington, Tokio, London, Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg, and was signed by Wang Chung Wei, the foreign minister of the republican cabinet.

The terms of the circular are as follows:

"The Manchu government having entered into negotiations with the Republic of China for the purpose of abdicating its entire sovereign rights, powers and privileges we fervently pray for recognition, in order to avoid a disastrous interregnum.

(Signed)
"WANG CHUNG WEI,
"Foreign Minister.

Demands Are Made.

It appears to be absolutely certain that fighting between the revolutionists and the imperialists will be resumed on the morning of Jan. 28, unless Premier Yuan Shi Kai concedes the demands of the republican government. These demands, which were telegraphed to Premier Yuan Shi Kai at Pekin, are very drastic and substantially as follows:

1. The abdication of the throne and the surrender of the sovereign powers are demanded.

2. No Manchu may participate in the provisional government of China.

3. The capital of the provisional government cannot be established at Pekin.

Guayaquil, Ecuador—Over 1,000 men were killed and wounded in a battle at Yaguache, to the northeast of this city. FREES BANKER MORSE

FIFTEEN - YEAR SENTENCE IS COMMUTED.

Will Leave Army Hospital at Once and Sail for Carlsbad for Treatment.

Washington, D. C. — President Taft commuted to expire immediately the 15-year sentence for violation of the national banking laws under which Charles W. Morse, the New York banker and ice king, served two years in the federal prison at Atlanta. The commutation of sentence, which gives Morse his complete freedom, but which, unlike a pardon, does not restore his civil rights, was granted upon recommendation of Attorney General Wickersham and Surgeon General Torney, U. S. A. According to the surgeon general's report to the president, Morse could not live one month longer in confinement and even at liberty probably would not live six months.

Efforts made for a complete pardon were unavailing and under the law Morse could not be paroled until he had served five years. Under the commutation he will be allowed to leave the army hospital at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta, at once. Recent efforts in his behalf developed the fact that his friends wished to take him to Carlsbad for treatment.

TURKS ARE REPULSED

Severe Battle Rages Several Hours and Losses Are Heavy.

London, England.— Further serious fighting between the Turks and Italians is reported to have taken place in Tripoli. The Italian fleet the night of Jan. 16 bombarded Zoara to punish the Turkish garrison for sniping Italian patrol boats. On the 18th, 2,000 Turks and Arabs attacked the Italian positions at Chigarsh and there was brisk fighting for several hours. The Turks suffered heavily and were repulsed. The Italians lost 48 men, killed or wounded.

Cotton Strike Settled.

Manchester, England — The dispute in the cotton trade which culminated in a lockout affecting about 300,000 men, Dec. 27, has been settled. All the mills will be reopened.

Steamer Sinks In Collision.

Swansea, Wales. — An unknown steamer was sunk with all hands near here, owing to a collision with the Cunard Line steamer Verin, from Liverpool.

Persian Settlement Is Near.

Washington, D. C. — There is still hope of an amicable adjustment of the claims of the 14 Americans who were taken to Persia by W. Morgan Shuster, the deposed treasurer general of Persia. F. E. Cairns, who was left in charge of the treasury office when Shuster left the troubled zone, in a telegram to the state department reported that the negotiations were proceeding satisfactorily and that an adjustment was to be expected in a short time.

ROYALTY IN N. Y.

DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT ARE GUESTS OF AMBASSADOR REID.

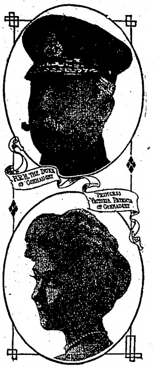
MANY SOCIAL FUNCTIONS

Mrs. Ogden Mills to Entertain.—Party Will Return to Canada on Thursday.—Their Visit Is Informal.

New York, N. Y.—The arrival here today of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and their daughter, Princess Patricia, marked the first visit of British royalty to New York city since 52 years ago, when the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII, traveled from New York to the Far West, where he hunted the buffalo. The leaders of society here have prepared to extend a welcome befitting the royal visitors.

Whitelaw Reid, ambassador to the court of St. James, with Mrs. Reid, will act as host of the ducal party. The party will remain at the Reid's until Thursday afternoon.

The program is not altogether a social one, as the royal visitors desire to avoid the round of public functions which an official visit would make necessary.



H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT
PRINCESS VICTORIA PATRICIA OF CONNAUGHT

The program as at present arranged includes: The Reids give a luncheon at their home with the visitors and several New York friends as guests; sightseeing tours about the city; an informal dinner at the Reid home, with Cardinal Farley one of the guests; a formal dinner at the Reids with several hundred New York society leaders invited to meet the royal guests, followed by a dance; dinner and a musicale at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills (Mr. Mills is a brother of Mrs. Reid); departure for Ottawa.

In none of the arrangements has any particular reference been made to the entertainment of Princess Patricia. She is the first princess of the royal blood of England ever to set foot on the soil of the United States. She is pretty and as democratic a girl as is found in the royal rank in Europe. She was the favorite niece of the late King Edward. She is an accomplished horsewoman, and has shot big game in Africa. It is said that she once refused the proffered hand of King Alfonso of Spain. She has a number of acquaintances in New York and it is expected that during her stay here she will visit several of them.

The ducal party came from Ottawa, on the car Cornwall and York, in which the present king of England traveled through Canada as the Duke of York several years ago. This car is one of the most magnificent ever built.

The royal travelers were attended by Lieutenant Colonel Lowther, military secretary; Captain Rivers-Bulkeley, aide-de-camp, the comptroller of the household; Miss Pelley, lady in waiting, and several servants.

The visit is to be strictly informal and there will be no official recognition of it on the part of the American authorities. It is the outcome of a promise made by the duke to Ambassador Reid some time ago.

To Try to Oust Socialists.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin. — Republicans and Democrats are planning an attempt to overthrow the Socialists at the municipal election in April. Mayor Emil Seidel has already been nominated to head the Socialistic ticket. The allied Republican and Democratic committees are expected to indorse the nomination of Dr. Gerhart, a Republican, former health commissioner of Milwaukee, for mayor. Congressman Cary (Republican) has announced himself a candidate for the office of mayor.

BUTTER GOES EAST

TWO TOP GRADES OF CREAMERY PRODUCT SENT TO NEW YORK, WHERE IT BRINGS BONUS.

THIRD QUALITY AT HOME

Some of Plants In State Receive Premium on Their Output; One Five Cents More on the Pound.

Minneapolis.—Why isn't Minnesota butter sold in Minnesota?

This is a question frequently asked lately by the bedraggled consumer compelled to pay unusually high prices for the dairy product. F. W. McIntosh, secretary of the dairy and food commission, pointed out some reasons yesterday. Here they are:

The best product of the best creameries of the state is sold in New York at anywhere from 1 to 3½ cents above the New York market quotations, which are from 3 to 4 cents higher than Twin City prices.

Many of the creameries receive this premium for their product f. o. b. at their plants, paying no commission or freight.

Those that pay freight and commission reap a profit from ½ to 2 cents a pound more than they would get in the Twin City market, which amounts to a considerable sum on an output running into the thousands of pounds a year.

New York dealers will buy at these prices all the Minnesota creameries will sell.

Pay 15 Cents More a Pound.

Consequently practically none of the "specials" and "extras," the first two grades of butter made by these creameries, is sold within the state. What the Minnesota consumer buys is the third grade, known as "creamery firsts." New York residents pay on an average 15 cents a pound more for their butter than do those of Minnesota, but when they do they receive the best butter made by the best creameries of the state.

To illustrate further, Mr. McIntosh referred to the statistics of the butter made in 1910, the latest available. Of the 96,000,000 pounds manufactured that year, the co-operative creameries made 80,000,000, practically none of which was sold in the state. Of this 80,000,000, nearly every pound of the first two grades, "specials" and "extras," was shipped to New York. Some of the third grade, the "creamery firsts," was sold in the state.

Wednesday the "specials" sold in New York at wholesale for 41½ and 42 cents, in the Twin City at 38 cents; the "extras" in New York for 40½ and 41, in the Twin City at 35; the "creamery firsts" in New York for 38½ and 39 cents, in the Twin City for 32. On the first grade the seller would make 3½ to 4 cents by shipping to the New York market, 5½ to 6 cents on the seconds, and 6 to 7½ cents on the thirds.

Sells at Higher Prices.

According to Mr. McIntosh those shippers who do not sell their product f. o. b. at their plants pay a 2-cent commission per pound to the New York dealers for handling their product and 1½ cents freight. Their butter always sells at least at the highest price in the market, leaving on Wednesday's quotations a margin of ½ a cent profit per pound on the first grade.

But the first grade product of practically every creamery in the state sells at a premium on the New York market running from 1½ cents to 3½ and 4 cents on the average, while there is one in the southern part of the state that receives a bonus of 5 cents per pound. Two creameries at Albert Lea receive premiums of 3¼ and 3½ cents, while the greater majority receive bonuses ranging from 2 to 3 cents.

These bonuses added to the margin of profit in the New York over the Twin City market show why, in Mr. McIntosh's opinion, Minnesota butter is not sold in Minnesota. There have been some who have asked why the dairy and food commission did not step in and stop the shipments outside the state. The answer is: The United States is an open market.

LAND PAPENTS FOR STATE.

Title to Swamp Selections to Be Issued at Once.

Washington, D. C.—A patent for a list of swamp land selections aggregating several thousand acres will be issued to the state of Minnesota. Attorney General Lyndon A. Smith and Assistant Attorney General Stephenson, with Representative Valstead, were at the land office and secured a promise from Commissioner Dennett that the list would go to the secretary of the interior immediately.

AUTOS AT MILL CITY

Enthusiasts Preparing For Big Time February 17-24.

Minneapolis.—Northwestern motor circles are agog over the plans for the coming automobile show to be held in the National Guard Armory Feb. 17 to 24, by the Minneapolis Automobile Show Association, composed of prominent Minneapolis dealers. Never before has the advance interest been so great and the management feels that it has arranged a motor car exhibit that will merit all the interest of dealers and automobile agents.

Literally hundreds of cars will be seen in the huge armory building, electric and gasoline, pleasure and commercial. Every inch of space was contracted for within half an hour's time on the evening the spaces were allotted. Since that time the management has been obliged to refuse space to nearly a score of firms who were late with their applications. Of all the automobile shows ever held in Minneapolis, experts say this one will be the most comprehensive. Sixty-one complete lines of cars and commercial vehicles will be shown and in some of the lines, a "complete" line calls for six or seven models. Special show cars will be shipped here from Chicago where the manufacturers display them the week previous. This means that people of the northwest will have many of the star attractions of the big Chicago and New York shows.

A startling scheme of decoration has been arranged and this, together with singing and band concerts will do much to enliven the eight days of the show. Factory representatives from the biggest concerns in the country are coming in large numbers and advance hotel reservations in Minneapolis indicate that there will be several thousand visitors in town for the show.

PLAN BOYS' SESSION

Prominent Educators Will Speak at Y. M. C. A. for Juniors in Winona.

Winona.—W. G. Cartlich, state superintendent of boys' work in Minnesota, is in Winona making plans for the boys' part of the Y. M. C. A. state convention to be held here February 8 to 11. This will open with a boys' banquet on Friday evening, February 9, at the Central Methodist church. President Milo B. Price of Pillsbury academy at Owatonna, will act as toastmaster and several boys will respond to toasts. From 150 to 200 boys are expected to attend.

At the evening session following, at the Y. M. C. A. building, addresses will be made by Prof. L. A. Headley of Carleton college and David R. Porter, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A. high school boys.

Saturday morning Dr. Milo B. Price will speak on "For the Honor of the School," and J. M. Anderson of Minneapolis on "A Man's Job," and David R. Porter on "The Association Boy."

Saturday afternoon Henry Churchill King, president of Oberlin college, will address the boys on "A Fight for Character." This will be followed by three sectional conferences for high school clubs, for church boys' clubs and for leaders.

Saturday and Sunday evenings the boys will join in the main convention sessions.

On Sunday afternoon there will be a big meeting for boys over 15 years of age, to be addressed by David R. Porter on "The Great Challenge."

REJECT AUTO RISK.

Deerfield Mutual Fire Company Against Motor Car Insurance.

Owatonna. — Three hundred members attended the annual meetings of the Deerfield Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance company, and the following officers were elected: President, John Wilkes; vice-president, Peter Eliason; secretary, E. L. Erdman; treasurer: William Mollenhauer; directors, Frank Kuntz and J. C. Peterson.

Whether or not farmers' automobiles should be insured was a question that brought out an interesting debate. Robert Crickmore and M. T. McCrady maintained that automobiles are necessary articles of modern farm life and not a luxury, but their plan was defeated.

DIVORCEE WANTS PAY

For Acting as Housekeeper for Former Husband.

Duluth.—Mrs. Jacob Stubler, after having obtained a divorce from her husband, Jacob Stubler, and was allowed $50 per month alimony, returned to his house to act as housekeeper and she was to receive $20 per month for her services, according to her complaint in district court, where she is seeking to collect $200 which she claims is due her for such services.

Mrs. Stubler claims to have ten months' salary coming and that Mr. Stubler refuses to pay.

JUDGE QUINN DIES IN WEST.

Sat at Hearing of Younger Brothers at Northfield.

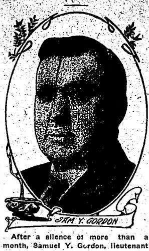
GORDON ANNOUNCES.



After a silence of more than a month, Samuel Y. Gordon, lieutenant governor, made a definite announcement that he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Minnesota. He said he had prepared a statement to this effect which he would make public some day this week.

TO PROBE WHITE EARTH CASE

TO TAKE TESTIMONY IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Rep. Miller Indignant Because No Republicans Are on Committee.

Washington, D. C. — Chairman Graham of the house committee on expenditures in the interior department announced that the sub-committee given permission by the house to make a first hand investigation of the White Earth situation, will go to Minneapolis at once and immediately commence taking testimony.

Quarters for the hearing have been secured in the Minneapolis federal building. It is the intention of the committee, which will consist of Chairman Graham and Representative Henry George of New York, to hold practically all hearings at Minneapolis.

Republican members of the house are objecting to Chairman Graham's refusal to appoint a Republican member of the committee on the sub-committee and charge that Mr. Graham is merely seeking political capital in making the investigation with small intention of getting at the more material facts in the case.

"The Graham investigation," said Representative Miller, "will be an interesting spectacle. Chairman Graham refused to appoint Representative Burke of South Dakota as a member of his sub-committee because Mr. Burke is also a member of the Indian affairs committee and knows something about the Indian situation in the Northwest."

Mr. Miller recently charged that the Graham investigation had been brought about by Special Agent Burch of the department of justice to prevent an investigation of his own alleged mis-administration by the Indian affairs committee.

"This is an investigation," said Mr. Miller, "of Mr. Burch, by Mr. Burch and for Mr. Burch. No others need apply."

Chairman Graham offered to name Representative Mondell of Wyoming on the White Earth committee but Mr. Mondell was unable to accept. Following that Mr. Graham refused to place a Republican on the committee.

"Women of the underworld visit dance halls. Youths and girls take intoxicants there."

Range Poultrymen Organize.

Virginia.—Preliminary steps were taken for the organization here of the Range Poultry association. A dozen local poultry fanciers were present. E. F. Kendall was elected president and J. R. Krogdahl secretary.

Goulet Held as Murderer.

Albuquerque, New Mexico.—Theodore Goulet of Minneapolis, charged with the murder of Alex Knapp, an Albuquerque policeman, was held to the grand jury without bail. Goulet shot Knapp while the officer was taking him to jail.

Four Bridges Authorized.

Washington, D. C. — Representative Nye has secured the passage by the house of bills authorizing the city of Minneapolis to build four bridges across the Mississippi.

NEW NEWS of YESTERDAY

By E. J. EDWARDS

He Saved Uncle Sam's Credit

John A. Stewart Came to the Rescue When New York Bankers Hesitated to Take Bonds Issued in Cleveland Administration.

The late John G. Carlisle, as secretary of the treasury during President Cleveland's second administration, was several times more or less at odds with the New York bankers. That his relations with them were sometimes strained was not either his fault or theirs. It was the inevitable result of the extraordinary financial conditions of the time, which he saw from one point of view and they from another.

Mr. Carlisle's task was trying far beyond the ordinary duties of the head of the treasury department. He had been at the head of the department only a few months when the great currency panic of 1893 occurred, and during the greater part of his administration, panic conditions, which were the result of a reaction from a period of overexpansion and the steady withdrawal of gold from the federal treasury, continued. Mr. Carlisle's chief task was to maintain the gold reserve in the treasury, which was constantly being depleted by the so-called endless chain process, which was merely the use of greenbacks over and over again. The exhaustion of the gold reserve meant that the government would lapse to a silver basis. That was narrowly averted in 1895 by the formation of the Morgan-Belmont syndicate, which sold to the government the gold it needed, and guaranteed to stop the exportation of the yellow metal.

Before that syndicate was organized, however, the government borrowed on two occasions $50,000,000 for the purpose of replenishing the gold reserve. The secretary of the treasury had to negotiate the sale of the bonds for the gold in Wall street. He had very decided views as to what the bankers ought to do in connection with the loans, and he made those views plain. With him it was a question of helping out the government. The bankers, as business men, also had their views as to what they ought to do, and they thought those views were entitled to consideration. Mr. Carlisle succeeded in disposing of the first lot of bonds, nevertheless, but the negotiations left in their wake a certain amount of irritation. Some of the bankers were disposed to think that the secretary had been unduly dictatorial in his attitude toward them.

When the second sale of $50,000,000 of bonds was authorized, the effect of the previous negotiations was discernable. Many of the bankers showed a lack of interest. It seemed likely that they would ignore the secretary when he came to seek their participation in taking up the new issue.

It seemed very likely to one man in particular, and that man was John A. Stewart, the president of the United States Trust company. The more he thought about it, the less he liked it. He sat up the best part of one night thinking about it.

"It would be a national calamity if there should not be a general and hearty response on the part of the bankers to this new offering of bonds," he said to himself. "I will do what I can, personally, to make the bond sale a success."

The next day he got in touch either personally or by phone with all the bankers whom he suspected of being offish or lukewarm.

"I don't know what you are thinking of doing with reference to this new bond issue," he said to them," but it seems to me that there is just one consideration that ought to govern our action in this case and that is patriotism. This is a matter that involves the honor of our government, the maintenance of its credit before the world. If this bond issue is not instantly subscribed to a great blow will be given to our national credit, which we as citizens will lament. I appeal to you not to let any personal feeling, any resentment in any quarter, influence you. In a crisis like this we ought to ignore any such feelings, and to remember that we are American citizens."

In every instance the financiers to whom Mr. Stewart thus appealed responded favorably. The banks and private bankers each took the allotted proportion of the $50,000,000 loan, and by the next day the gold was in the sub-treasury, and the government had escaped lapsing to a silver basis, which Mr. Carlisle had said would be inevitable unless gold was instantly secured.

Crisis For Two Great Railroads

How Joseph E. Sheffield's Sale of Stock Affected the Future of the New Haven and the Boston & Albany Lines.

When the late William Bliss became, in 1880, president of the Boston & Albany railroad, then the biggest transportation line in New England, he went to work very quietly but very energetically to obtain for that railroad a through line from Boston to New York, and make it a competitor of the New York, New Haven & Hartford for through business between New York and Boston, on which the New Haven line, then just beginning to come into the field as a great national system, had a monopoly. With that end in view he made plans to get control of the "Canal" railroad.

The "Canal" railroad was the creation of the late Joseph E. Sheffield, the founder of the Sheffield Scientific school, one of the leading departments of Yale university. The road—officially, the New Haven & Northampton railroad—owed the name by which it was popularly known to the fact that it followed the line of the old New Haven and Northampton (Mass.) canal.. Of itself of minor importance, the Canal railroad became of great strategic value as a link in the projected Boston & Albany through line to New York. Connecting with the Boston & Albany at Westfield, Mass., it would serve to extend the Boston & Albany to New Haven. Thus, the completion of a through line to New York from Boston would involve the construction of only about 70 miles of new railroad, paralleling the New Haven road between New Haven and New York.

In the latter part of 1880 and the early months of 1881 purchases of New Haven & Northampton stock were made in the open market for the Boston & Albany interests. The stock was the selling at from about 50 to 80. A few years previously it had sold as low as 13. The road had not been paying dividends regularly, but only a little before this a dividend of four per cent. had been declared.

There were some vague rumors about these purchases, but they caused the directors of the New Haven no alarm. It is understood that a paragraph which appeared about March, 1991, in a paper published in Springfield, Mass., President Bliss's home, first aroused the New Haven people's suspicions. The writer of the paragraph appeared to have inside information, and the directors of the New Haven by some cautious inquiries quickly convinced themselves as to what Boston & Albany interests had in view.

The discovery gave them a big fright. For years they had been haunted by the bugaboo of a parallel railroad between New Haven and New York, and here it was about to be materialized as a part of a new through line from New York to Boston.

There were some hurried consultations, and then some of the New Haven directors went to see Mr. Sheffield. Mr. Sheffield, who was then a man of advanced age, owned about one-half of the $2,460,000 of the capital stock of the New Haven & Northampton railroad.

"Will you sell your Canal railroad stock?" his callers asked.

"Yes, as my figure."

"What is that?"

"Par value, one hundred dollars a share."

"Very well. We will buy it now."

A few days later, to the great astonishment of President Bliss and the Boston & Albany interests, which had been dickering with Mr. Sheffield for his holding, the stockholders of the Canal railroad elected a new board of directors, a majority of whom were identified with the New Haven system; and the majority of the stock was voted by a capitalist who, as trustee for the New Haven, had bought from Mr. Sheffield, at the latter's own terms, a controlling interest in the Canal road at a cost of $1,229,800.

This was the turning point in the history of these two roads. Today the New Haven practically controls all New England transportation, while the Boston & Albany has lapsed into the condition of a leased railroad, and is now indirectly part of the general New Haven railroad family.

Harriman On Despair's Brink

During the Great Panic of 1893 He Would Have Been Utterly Ruined If Clearing House Certificates Had Not Been Issued.

One Sunday afternoon in the middle of the summer of 1893, the late Frederick D. Tappan, then president of the Gallatin National bank of New York city, and chairman of the New York Clearing House association, received at his country place in the Berkshire Hills, where he was spending the week-end, a telegram from some of the prominent New York bankers associated with the clearing house urging him to come to New York with all possible haste.

The great panic which marked the first year of President Cleveland's second administration was then at its height. The treasury of the United States was being drained of gold by the operation of the so-called endless chain. Money had sought cover, and borrowers were unable to get accommodation even when they had gilt-edged collateral to put up as security. Everywhere there was a mad passion to convert property into gold and hoard it. Men with obligations to meet in cash were in extremities, and it had finally come to be believed that only the issuance of clearing house certificates could relieve the strain and prevent an appalling financial crash. The situation had become strained to the breaking point when that message was sent to Mr. Tappan, and he took the late afternoon train for New York.

"I arrived in New York early Sunday evening and went directly to my house," Mr. Tappan said, when relating this incident to me sometime afterwards. "I had been there only a few minutes when the door bell rang. As there was no one else in the house but the housekeeper, I went to the door myself. I opened it and found Ed Harriman standing there.

"I was shocked at his appearance. He looked more dead than alive. He was ghastly pale, haggard and sunken-eyed, and seemed physically exhausted. I saw in a moment that he was in a terribly nervous state and that it was simply nervous excitement that was keeping him up.

"'Are you going to do something,—are you going to issue certificates tomorrow?' he exclaimed in a breath, without any preliminaries of greeting. 'If you don't, I am a ruined man. I have heavy obligations to meet tomorrow, and I haven't been able to borrow on any sort of security. If the clearing house doesn't act, everything I have will be wiped out.'

"'Ed,' I said, 'you look as though you hadn't had any sleep.'

"'I haven't,' he said. 'I haven't had a wink of sleep for three nights on account of this. I can't borrow a dollar, and my securities are gilt edged.'

"'The thing for you to do,' I said, 'is to go home and go to bed.'

"'Well, but what is the clearing house going to do?' he exclaimed desperately. 'You must do something tomorrow. Unless you do—unless you issue certificates—everything I have will be gone within twenty-four hours, and my prospects will be blasted. I shall be absolutely ruined. You will also have a frightful panic.'

"'I can't say what we shall do, Ed,' I said. 'I have just got here, and haven't seen any one but you yet. But what is the use of your wearing yourself out in this way? No matter what comes tomorrow, you will be better off for a good night's sleep. If worse comes to worst, nevertheless, you can start over again.'

"'Perhaps you are right,' he said. 'I do need some sleep.' I think he suspected from my manner that the clearing house would issue certificates in the morning, and he was comforted. At any rate he went away in a somewhat calmer state of mind.

"At 9 o'clock the next morning it was announced that the clearing house would issue certificates, by means of which financial operations could be carried on and loans secured at the banks. Ed Harriman was down at his office early, and he got through the day all right, meeting all his obligations, which were heavy. The next time I saw him, which was a week or two later, he was as chipper as ever, and from that time his greater career began."

It Was Necessary.

A year or two ago a Vermont town employed a trained superintendent, a college man who knew what a school ought to be, to exercise supervision over all the schools in that town. It was the first time some of those schools had ever been visited in an official capacity by a salaried administrative officer. In one school a little toddler was found studying percentage, learning it by heart.

"You should not teach him percentage," the superintendent said: "he does not know how to add and subtract."

"But I've got to," the teacher answered; "the front part of the 'rithmetic is torn out."

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail, and arriving at the Minor place, Wayne meets Miss Minor and Mrs. Bungay, and later Edith appears. Wayne's detachment is besieged by guerrillas.

CHAPTER XXVIII.—Continued.

All that occurred next was but the impulse of a second. I stood with hand resting lightly upon the mule's neck, his long head drooping sleepily beside my shoulder. I saw Red Lowrie throw up his gun, all his evil nature written in his face, his cruel eyes instantly aflame with anger, and, inspired by the desperation of our case, I stooped suddenly, and blew with all my force into that long, pendant ear. Beelzebub gave vent to one snort of mingled rage and terror, and then let drive, backing into that cluster of choice rascals like a very thunderbolt of wrath, cleaving his way by every lightning blow of those nimble legs, and tumbling men to right and left. There was a yell of fright, a wild scramble for safety, a perfect volley of cursing—I saw Red Lowrie go tumbling backward, a heel planted fairly in the pit of his stomach, and the next instant Craig, swearing like a pirate, was jammed down on top of him, a red gash across his forehead. It was all accomplished so speedily, that it seemed but a medley of heels, of wildly cavorting mule, of scrambling, falling men.

"Fire!" I cried excitedly. "Sock it into them, lads, and follow me!"

There was a quick outburst of flame, a thunderous report, and, without waiting to see or hear more, I sprang forward through the dense smoke, and raced madly toward the front door. Caton panted at my side, and I could hear the heavy feet of a score of men pounding the turf behind us. The rush was so rapid, the noise so great and confusing, I could not distinguish whether we were even fired upon from the rear, but I marked a red flash at one of the windows in our front, and heard behind me a sharp wail of agony.

"If any man drops, pick him up!" I called, and at that moment we sprang up the steps, and began pounding loudly against the door.

"Open up!" shouted the Lieutenant, anxiously. "Brennan, open up, quick! It's Caton with help."

I though it never would open. A volley crashed into us, and Sands pitched down upon his face, clutching at the man next him as he fell. I glanced back anxiously—a dark, confused mass of men, without military formation, were running across the open space toward us.

"'Bout face!" I shouted. "Load at will—fire!"

We poured one scattering volley into them. It halted their movement for a moment, and then the door opened a scant crack.

"Is this you, Caton?"

"Yes; for God's sake, open up!"

The heavy door swung slowly inward, and with a wild rush to be first, we surged headlong into the hall.

CHAPTER XXX.

A Union of Yank and Red.

As the heavy door clanged behind us some one upon the outside began pounding upon it, while with deadly chug a bullet crashed into the oaken panel.

"Donnerwetter!" shouted a deep voice, wildly. "Captain, I am yet out mit der bullets."

With a crash I flung aside the thick iron bar which answered as a lock, and drew in the Sergeant, yet panting heavily from his hard run.

"By Chiminy, dot vas a narrow squeak," he exclaimed, as I released my grasp upon him and hurled the door back into its place.

A dim light swinging suspended from the ceiling of the great wide hall revealed clearly the scene within. As I turned I beheld Brennan for the first time, and his face remains a memory. Standing with his back to the stair-railing, a revolver grasped tightly in either hand, his eyes burning, his countenance flushed with anger, and clouded by doubt, he appeared almost like one distracted. At sight of me he gave up all attempt to control his raging temper.

"What does all this mean?" he demanded hoarsely. "Who are these men? Caton, if you have betrayed us, by God, I will shoot you dead."

"There is no betrayal," returned the Lieutenant, coolly. "These men are friends."

"Friends?" he laughed cynically. "Friends? in that uniform, and you attired in a Rebel cavalry jacket? Friends? that fellow over there?" and he pointed derisively at me with his pistol barrel. "Damn you, but I believe you are all a pack of lying thieves!"

Caton's face burned. He took one step toward him, his hands clinched, and when he spoke his clear voice shook with intense indignation.

"Major Brennan," he said coldly deliberate, "you are my superior officer, but you go beyond all privileges of rank in those words. I say these men are friends; they have sunk the issues of war in order that they may answer the call of humanity. If you dare impeach my motives any further, I shall hurl back the cowardly insult in your face. I will take no such words, sir, from any living man."

Brennan looked at him, his lips struggling with the utterance that would not come. Knowing well the danger of such delay, I hastily pushed aside the ring of men, and fronted him, determined to end this foolishness then and there.

"Major Brennan," I said firmly, ignoring his efforts to silence me, "you must listen to reason whether you wish to do so or not. My troopers are all around you; I have two men to your one in this house, and can enforce my will if necessary. Now mark what I say—we are not here in anger or in war, but to help you in the protection of endangered women. We captured your courier, have dispatched one of our own number into the Federal camp for aid, and have fought our way in here to stand beside you and your men in defence of this house against those ruffians without. You can use us or not, just as you please; it rests with you to say whether we shall be comrades in arms on this occasion, or whether I shall assume command by the power of force which I chance to control."

He seemed utterly unable to grasp my full meaning, to comprehend the situation.

"You mean, you would fight with us? under my command?" he asked incredulously.

"I offer my services under your orders," I replied clearly, "and these men in gray will obey mine."

I actually thought he would extend his hand, but some remembrance suddenly restrained him.

"I—of course, Captain Wayne," he stammered, at length, "I—I must accept your offer. I—I am grateful for it, but I shall insist upon one thing; there must be a final settlement of the personal matter existing between us. I am not willing to waive my rights in this."

"There is no occasion for your doing so, sir," I answered coldly, for I considered the reference at that moment in extremely ill taste. "When our work here has been accomplished, you will find me very much at your service."

He bowed gravely.

"I am exceedingly glad we understand each other," he said. "May I ask the size of your command?"

"Sergeant," I questioned, "whom have we lost?"

"Nelson vos kilt, I dinks; der Kid is not here yet, und Sands vos vounded bad."

"Very well; then, Major Brennan, I tender you sixteen men fit for duty, besides myself. You are doubtless acquainted with the house, and can assign us to positions where our services will prove of greatest value."

He had completely recovered his self-control by this time, and spoke now with the terse sentences of a tried soldier.

"I thank you, Captain Wayne, and will ask you to choose four men and assume command of the east side of the house. Caton, you take the same number for defense of the rear. Captain, what is your sergeant's name?"

"Ebers, an experienced German soldier."

"I should have suspected his nationality. Let him have command of four more, and cover the west windows. I shall defend the front myself, as I have been doing."

"Very well," I answered shortly, for his eyes had remained fixed upon me all the time he was talking. "Take the positions assigned you, lads, and do not permit a man from without to put foot on the veranda. If they once succeed in getting under cover of the porch roof, they will give us plenty of trouble."

The position for defence assigned to my care took me into the dining-room of the mansion—a spacious, almost square apartment, containing three large windows reaching nearly to the floor. The outside blinds had been closed, but the glass in the panes was mostly broken, and there were other evidences that the firing had been both heavy and continuous. I found two soldiers of Brennan's party within, both lying upon the floor, and peering cautiously through the apertures of the blinds. They glanced up at us with undisguised amazement.

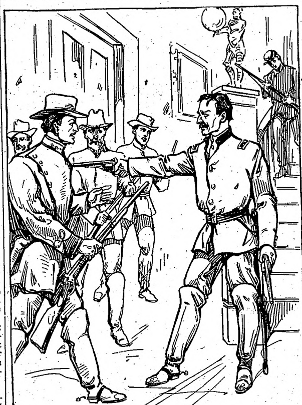
"It's all right, lads," I said heartily. "Never mind our colors tonight; we are all fighting the same way."

I had taken with me Bungay, together with three of my troopers, and after placing them as advantageously as possible, I stretched myself out on the floor, and applying an eye to a convenient opening took careful survey of the situation without. This present cessation of activity was, I felt convinced, only temporary. I did not expect, from all I could now see, that the final assault would take place upon my side of the building. The massing of the main body of the besiegers before the front entrance, together with the presence there of their leaders, was sufficient to convince me that this was to prove the principal point of attack, and from my knowledge of such affairs I decided that probably the first signs of returning daylight would be the signal for a determined assault. The dark interior of such a house as this offered too many defensive advantages which the daylight would largely overcome.

"Have you had some hard fighting?" I asked of the man lying next me, a manly-looking fellow, wearing the yellow chevrons of a corporal of cavalry.

"They pitched in mighty strong at first, sir," he answered civilly. "An' we had so few men they pretty nearly rushed us, fer sure. It was our repeatin' rifles thet drove 'em back."

We relapsed into silence, each intent upon the uncertainty without. As I lay there, gazing anxiously into the darkness, I could not forbear wondering where Brennan had concealed the women to keep them from harm. Would he inform them of our arrival? He could scarcely hope to keep the fact long hidden, for they would certainly see some of my gray-jackets, and ask questions.



"Damn You, but I Believe You Are All a Pack of Lying Thieves!"

"They seem to be peckin' away pretty lively out in front," said the corporal, interrupting my reverie.

"Yes," I admitted. "In my judgment that will prove the main point of attack. How many men did the Major have there before we came?"

"Same as here, sir."

"And four of mine; that makes seven altogether, counting himself, and two of these ought to be posted in the upper story. He's bound to need more; that firing is very steady."

"He's got the women loadin' for him, and that helps some."

"The women?" I asked, staring at him in amazement. "Do you mean to say Mrs. Brennan and Celia Minor are there in that front room?"

"Don't know who they are, sir—two mighty fine lookin' young ladies, an old lady with white hair, an' a big, rough-lookin' female, sir. The last one wus handlin' a gun to beat the band just afore you came."

"And he keeps them there, exposed to all this heavy fire? What can the man mean? Why, Corporal, that constant shooting must have completely shattered the windows. There could be no safety for any one except lying flat upon the floor."

"Well, 'tain't quite so bad as that, sir," he protested, seemingly anxious to shield his officer from adverse criticism. "You see it's a double parlor, with a wall an' foldin' doors atween, an' the women are all in the rear room. Of course, it's almighty dark back there, an' they has to lie pretty close, but blamed if I know of any better place for them. This house hain't got no cellar."

A man groped his way in from the lighted hall, but halted close beside the door, unable to perceive us in the darkness.

"Is Captain Wayne here?" he asked.

"Yes; what is it?"

"Major Brennan has had two of his men hit, sir, and wishes you to spare him three of yours, unless you are hotly pressed."

"All right; there's nothing doing here," I answered, instantly determining upon my course. "Corporal, I shall leave you in command of this side for a few minutes. I believe I can be of more immediate value elsewhere. Bungay, you and Elliott come with me."

The lower hall, having no windows in it, was the only safe place in the building, and here a light had been kept burning. The door which, as I judged, must lead into the back parlor, was closed, and fastened upon the inside. At least it refused to yield to my hand when tried. Another in front stood very slightly ajar.

"Report to Brennan," I whispered into Jed's ear, "and forget to mention I am with you. I desire to investigate matters for myself a few moments."

He nodded to intimate that he understood, and then we crept, one at a time, into the front apartment, hugging the floor closely to keep beneath the range of the bullets which swept every now and then through the broken windows, and chugged into the wall behind us. I was the last to wriggle in through the narrow opening, and rolling instantly out of the tiny bar of light, I lay silent for a moment, endeavoring to get my bearings. I was determined upon just one thing—to obtain speech with the women, learn, if possible, their exact situation, and, if I found it necessary, insist upon their better protection. An insane jealousy of me should not continue to expose them to unnecessary peril.

Brennan was directly across the room from where I lay. I could hear his voice issuing low, stern orders.

"If you'll only keep down you're safe enough," he said gruffly. "There hasn't a shot come within a foot of the sill. The ground slopes out yonder, and those fellows can't fire low. Put the new men at the central window, and let them shoot at every flash they see. Bradley will pass back their empty guns."

I wondered how long our supply of ammunition would hold out with such a fusillade kept up, but ventured upon no protest, for I was already groping my way through the darkness along the inner wall. Furniture lay overturned in every direction, and I experienced considerable difficulty in making progress through the debris without attracting attention. A great square piano stood directly across the entrance to the back parlor, left by the drawing nearly together of the sliding doors. I waited until Bradley had crawled through with an armful of loaded guns, and then entered also, creeping silently between the piano legs. As I did so a bullet struck the case above, and the whole instrument trembled to the impact, giving forth a strange moan, as if in pain.

Some one was groaning in the corner at my left, and supposing the wounded to be lying there, I turned more toward the right, keeping as close as possible to the wall, hopeful I might come in contact with one of the women. I do not honestly know why I did this—really I had no excuse, except my natural distrust of Brennan, coupled with an eager desire to be of service to the woman of my heart. There was little to guide me in the search, as the flame of the discharging rifles did not penetrate here. Once I heard the rustle of a skirt, while a faint sound of whispering reached me from the rear of the room. Then my hand, groping blindly along the wall, touched the lower fold of a dress. It felt like coarse calico to my fingers.

"Mrs. Bungay," I whispered cautiously, "is this you?"

The woman started at sound of my voice, but replied in the same low tone: "Thet's my name; who mought ye be?"

"A friend of yours, and of your husband," I answered, for I doubted it she would recall my name. "Did you know Jed was here?"

"My man? Hiven be praised! But I'll knock ther head off ther little devil if ever I git my hand on him, I will thet. Whar's ther little imp bin all ther time?"

"Hunting for you, and crying his eyes out," I answered, smiling to myself in the darkness. "Where is Mrs. Brennan?"

"Jist beyond me, thar in ther corner."

As she spoke a bullet whizzed past us, having missed the obstruction of the piano. I could feel the wind stirred by its passage, while its peculiar hum told me it was a Minie ball.

"You are too far out from the wall," I protested. "You are in range."

"Can't help it if I be. I'm yere ter take ther guns from ther sojer, an' pass 'em back."

I crept slowly along beyond her, keeping close to the wall, but had progressed hardly more than a couple of yards, when I felt a hand lightly touch me.

"I recognize your voice," said a soft whisper, "and am so glad you are here."

Who can guess the motives that inspire a woman? This was my welcome, where I had anticipated coldness and repellant pride.

CHAPTER XXXI.

A Conversation in the Dark.

In my extreme surprise at the intimate cordiality expressed by her words and manner I failed in utterance. Anticipating coldness, indifference, possibly even resentment at my presuming to approach her, I was instead greeted by an unstudied warmth of welcome that made my heart beat fiercely.

"Surely I am not mistaken," she questioned, rendered doubtful by my silence. "Is not this Captain Wayne?"

"There is no mistake," I hastened to assure her, "but I had anticipated from our last meeting a far less cordial greeting."

"Oh," she exclaimed, with a light laugh, "and is that all? Yet surely, if I was to believe my own eyes I was perfectly justified in my actions then. However, Captain, I have been forced to realize the truth of that situation, and am now disposed to make up to you in kindness for all my unjust suspicions."

"I am more than delighted to learn that cloud is no longer to overshadow us. Miss Minor has made a full explanation, then?"

"You have been completely exonerated, and restored to my good graces."

As she spoke, I became aware that she was busily engaged upon some task, and when she ended I felt the steel of a gun-barrel touch my hand.

"Please pass this to Maria," she said calmly, "and hand me back the one she has."

"You are loading, then?" I asked, as I complied with her request.

"We have all been busy. Isn't it terrible? I was so frightened at first, but now they tell me that you and your men have come, there is no longer danger of those horrible creatures getting in here."

"You knew, then, that I was in the house?"

"I was told some noble Confederates had accompanied Lieutenant Caton back to aid us, but your name was not mentioned."

"Then my appearance must have proven a complete surprise?"

"Yes, and no," she answered frankly. "I was not sure it was you, of course, and I did not venture to ask, but I knew you were in the neighborhood, and that such an act would be in a way characteristic. I was certain you would come if you knew, and I—I, well really, I hoped it was."

In spite of a slight effort at restraint I groped in the darkness until I touched her hand. For the moment she permitted me to retain it, as if unconsciously, within my grasp.

"Why?" I questioned, scarcely relying upon my own voice.

"Oh, one always trusts friends more readily than strangers, and I have seen you in danger before, and possess such confidence in your courage and resource."

"But Miss Minor took particular care to inform me you felt little or no interest in me—that you never even spoke of me except as she compelled you to do so."

For a moment she did not answer.

"How constant the firing continues," she said at last, as I sat struggling dumbly with temptation.

Death Preferred.

A. Stirling Calder, the Philadelphia sculptor, was reminded at the Franklin Inn club, apropos of the Fourth of July and Liberty, of a story about the great Bartholdi statue in New York bay.

"An eminent English critic," he said, "sailing into New York bay for the first time, saw Bartholdi's colossal work and said:

"'Is that Liberty?'

"'Yes,' a friend replied.

"'Then,' said the critic, 'give me death.'"

THE PEEVISH CHILD NEEDS TREATMENT

When a child sulks drowsily, or is fretful, it is usually due to some slight disorder of the digestive organs, and a mild laxative is very often all that is necessary to restore cheerfulness and buoyancy of spirits.

In cases where the use of a gentle, effective laxative stimulant is indicated, many of the best physicians are now prescribing Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This preparation is admittedly the perfect laxative, being mild, yet positive in its action on the bowels, and far preferable to violent cathartics and purgative waters. It is very pleasant to the taste and is an ideal remedy to regulate and strengthen the stomach, liver and bowels. Its easy, natural action makes it especially desirable in the case of children, a dose at bed-time being sure to have the desired result next morning, with no attendant unpleasantness or discomfort.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is sold by druggists everywhere in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If you have never tried this splendid remedy, write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., for a sample. He will be very glad to send a trial bottle without any expense to you whatever.

See Value in Open-Air Schools.

During the year 1911 the greatest percentage of increase among the different forms of anti-tuberculosis work was among the open-air schools for anemic and tuberculous children. On January 1, 1911, there were only 29 open-air schools in operation or provided for in the entire country. On January 1, 1912, there were 91, an increase of 214 per cent. Sixty-two new schools have been established or provided for this past year. This entire number of open-air schools have been established since January 1, 1907.

"Well, George, I hope you are pleased with yourself."

"Suffering Samson, what have I done now?"

"Oh, nothing, of course. What did you say to that aristocratic Mrs. Pingleton?"

"Well, what did I say?"

"And right after I warned you against your awful breaks. You said to her: 'How time flies! I suppose your young hopeful will soon put on long trousers.'"

"'Well, what's the matter with that? Friendly, wasn't it?"

"Friendly! Mrs. Pingleton has but one child, and she's a young woman of 20!"

DISFIGURED WITH CRUSTS

"Some time ago I was taken with eczema from the top of my head to my waist. It began with scales on my body. I suffered untold itching and burning, and could not sleep. I was greatly disfigured with scales and crusts. My ears looked as if they had been most cut off with a razor, and my neck was perfectly raw. I suffered untold agony and pain. I tried two doctors who said I had eczema in its fullest stage, and that it could not be cured. I then tried other remedies to no avail. At last, I tried a set of the genuine Cuticura Remedies, which cured me of eczema when all else had failed, therefore I cannot praise them too highly.

"I suffered with eczema about ten months, but am now entirely cured, and I believe Cuticura Remedies are the best skin cure there is." (Signed) Miss Mattie J. Shaffer, R. F. D. 1, Box 8, Dancy, Miss., Oct. 27, 1910.

"I had suffered from eczema about four years when boils began to break out on different parts of my body. It started with a fine red rash. My back was affected first, when it also spread over my face. The itching was almost unbearable at times. I tried different soaps and salves, but nothing seemed to help me until I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. One box of them cured me entirely. I recommended them to my sister for her baby who was troubled with tooth eczema, and they completely cured her baby." (Signed) Mrs. F. L. Marberger, Drehersville, Pa., Sept. 6, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

PAPER BAG COOKING

WONDER-WORKING SYSTEM PERFECTED BY M. SOYER, WORLD'S GREATEST LIVING CHEF

MEANS ECONOMY IN FOOD.

By Martha McCulloch Williams.

Economy, which is now the cry in all things, from postage to politics, has no more valiant helper than M. Soyer's system of paper bag cooking.

Roasts which have a knack of shrinking horribly in the pan come out of paper bags almost the size which they came from the butcher, and possessed of their full food value. They will have been cooked in vapors of their own essence—the best part of them will not have run out, to dry on the pan bottom, and smell most appetizingly, but be in large measure lost to the palate. There will be gravy in the bag, to be sure—gravy fit for a king.

In case of fish, the results are even better. Pan-cooking wastes a fifth, a fourth, sometimes even a third of a fish.

Vegetables also taste better, and are better, for bag cooking. Bag cooking preserves in them their essential salts, which boiling takes away.

Because all manner of seasoning is thus conserved and driven into the food care must be taken to use seasoning lightly.

Here is a way of using up cold dinner meat that hearty children will relish, and even the man of the house not disdain. Cut the meat in slices, neither too thick nor too thin, and as broad as possible, butter them, sprinkle them well with salted flour, and a very little pepper. Lay in a well-greased bag, side by side, then place upon each a tomato, peeled, hollowed out, dusted inside with sugar, salt and pepper, then stuffed. Boiled rice is a good stuffing, so is cooked macaroni or spaghetti cut small. Bread crumbs fried brown are likewise tasty. Season the stuffing well and mix through it all the snippets and trimmings of the meat. Use either butter, bacon, or cold boiled pork, well minced, to enrich the stuffing. Scatter between the tomatoes the scoopings from their insides. Place in bag, seal it, and cook in a hot oven about twelve minutes.

Quick Potatoes.—Take a large white potatoe for each person to be fed. Peel, slice thin, drop in cold water for five minutes, then drain, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and pack compactly in a well-greased bag, adding a tablespoonful of stock or milk and water, for each two potatoes. Seal, and cook twenty minutes. Boiled potatoes can be used, and take only half as long.

Baked Apples.—Wash well, but do not peel, cut out specks and bruises, core, fill the bottom of the core-space with a lump of butter, over which pile sugar, and add a bit of cinnamon. A clove stuck in the side may take the place of the cinnamon. Seal inside a well greased bag, and bake eighteen to twenty minutes in a fairly hot oven. Serve with sugar and cream or a hard sauce.

ELIMINATES MANY KITCHEN TROUBLES.

William Shakespeare, it may be, had not cooking in mind, when he set his witches chanting:

"Double double toil and trouble!
Fire burn and caldron bubble."

Nevertheless, the fact remains that the burning fire, the bubbling caldron are sources of double trouble to womenkind. Therefore, they should rise up and call blessed M. Soyer's system of paper bag cooking, which has come newly to their help. It saves the bubblings of the caldron, and thereby the troublings of the cook. This in many, many ways. Perhaps the most instantly apparent one is—the fact that there is no caldron to be washed or scoured when the flesh is weariest.

So, also, are the roasting pans and those for frying, likewise the broiler. Paper bags can do the work better—and be thrown away when they have served their turn.

But do not make the mistake of taking it for an accomplished cook. It is a help toward helping yourself, nothing more.

Beef or Veal Loaf.—To each pound of raw minced lean meat, add an ounce of finely minced suet, half a small minced onion, a dust of pepper, a pinch of salt mixed through a scant spoonful of flour, and a light sprinkle of powdered herbs. Mix the seasoning well through the meat, shape it into a flat, round cake, rub butter plentifully on the outside, put into a greased paper bag, seal and bake in a hot oven, allowing fifteen minutes to the pound. A few slices of tomato put in the bag helps to make tasty gravy. A spoonful of tomato catsup may be used instead.

Baked Onions.—Parboil for fifteen minutes Spanish or Bermuda onions, chill them in cold water, then cut a V out of the hearts. Fill the space with butter, after dusting it well with salt and pepper, put the onions in a bag with a lump of butter and a very little water, seal and cook twenty minutes in a hot oven, or thirty minutes in a very moderate one.

Paper Bag Cooked Bridge Luncheon

By Nicholas Soyer, Chef of Brooks' Club, London.

Broiled Chicken.
Mushrooms. Asparagus.
Olives. Radishes. Celery.
Pudding a la Mayence.
Black Coffee. Crackers. Cheese.

Broiled Chicken.—Split the chicken down the middle of the back, spread flat, and put a skewer in each side to prevent it from curling. Beat up a very fresh egg, with a pinch of salt, black pepper to taste, an ounce of melted butter, a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce or something similar, and a teaspoonful of made mustard. Mix well. With a brush glaze the chicken with the mixture. Place in a greased bag with bread crumbs around and over it. Be careful that the skewers do not tear the bag. Seal up tight and cook thirty-five to forty minutes in a very hot oven.

Mushrooms.—Peal and wash the mushrooms, brush them lightly over with melted butter, dust with salt and pepper, and put into a buttered bag with a lump of butter, a little water, and a spoonful of lemon juice or port or sherry wine. Seal tight and cook in a hot oven twelve to twenty minutes.

Asparagus.—Trim and scrape as for boiling, wash very clean. Tie in bundles and put into a buttered bag, with a little salt and half a gill of water. Seal and cook thirty-five to forty minutes in a hot oven.

Pudding a la Mayence.—Rub half a pint of breadcrumbs through a fine wire sieve, add to them a tumblerful of wine and water, half and half, the rind of a small lemon, washed, dried and grated, three heaped tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, and an ounce of butter. Mix well, pour into a buttered souffle dish, add the beaten yolks of two eggs, and the strained juice of the lemon. Beat the whites of the eggs to a very stiff froth, add powdered sugar to taste, and a pinch of salt. Color with a few drops of green spinach coloring, or pale pink with a little carmine or cochineal, pile on top, place in bag, put in a very moderate oven, and bake till the meringue is firmly set.

PAPER BAG COOKED BREAKFAST DISHES.

Eggs an Tomatoes.—Butter a bag thickly, put into it half a pint of tomato catsup and butter the size of a walnut. Cook in hot oven ten minutes. Cut a square from the center of the bag, break into it, one at a time, four eggs. Cook for three or four minutes. Dish up. Cut away all the top of the bag and serve.

Kippered Mackerel with Fine Herbs.—Cut salt mackerel into fillets, lay them in a deep earthen dish, and cover with boiling water. Leave in water half a minute. Take out, wipe dry, dust with coarse black pepper, and put on top of each fillet half a teaspoonful of minced parsley, and chives of onion, and a bit of butter the size of a small walnut. Grease a bag well, put in the fillets, seal, and cook for twenty minutes in a hot oven. Serve hot, with brown bread.

Marechal of Lobster and Eggs.—Take the white and claw meat of a lobster, chop it small and set aside. Rub the brown meat smooth in a basin with a bit of butter and a good dust of white pepper. Add gradually half a bottle of tomato catsup. Work all well together. Put into a bag four slices of bacon. Do not seal the bag. Cook the bacon four minutes, then take out, and put in the lobster and tomato mixture, seal and cook for eight minutes. Cut open the bag on top, put in the white meat, and make hot for four or five minutes. Lower the gas very much for this last cooking—the white meat must only get very hot, as cooking toughens it. Serve in a very hot dish, garnished with the slices of bacon.

Eggs a la Tripe.—Rub together an ounce of butter and an ounce of flour, cook smooth in half a pint of milk which has been flavored lightly with mace. Add to it two large thinly sliced onions, cooked in a bag with a little butter, and six hard-boiled eggs cut in halves lengthwise. Pour gently into a well-greased double bag, and make very hot in the oven for ten minutes. Serve as quickly as possible, on a very hot dish.

Eggs on Strassburg Croutons.—Cut the crust from four even-sized squares of stale bread, butter them thinly, dust lightly with pepper, and spread with a layer of foie gras. Cook for five minutes inside a well-greased bag, then cut open the bag and break an egg on each square of bread. Dust the eggs on top with pepper and a very little salt and cook for another four minutes. Serve immediately on a very hot dish.

Eggs a la Bechamel.—Cut four hard-boiled eggs in halves lengthwise, put them into a thickly greased bag with a gill of cream, salt and pepper to taste, and a tiny dust of powdered mace. Cook five minutes in a moderate oven, and serve hot on squares of lightly buttered toast.

FAMOUS FARM SAUCES

OLD RECIPES HANDED DOWN THROUGH GENERATIONS.

Many Have Been Patented and Acquired World-Wide Reputations Such as Originators Never Dreamed of—Tomato Mustard.

Country farmhouses years ago possessed a good many other treasures besides their tallboy chests and their carved oak presses, although most of these treasures seem to have vanished nowadays.

In the days before every village market town had its city products, and itinerent peddlers were the chief salesmen, they thought, in fact, a great deal of their own old recipes for home-made sauces. They were made according to directions which were handed down through generations, and formed the special pride of many a busy housekeeper. As a matter of fact, many of the old recipes have become patented, and the original has acquired a world-wide reputation such as its originators would never have foretold for it.

Among the forgotten recipes is one for tomato mustard, which is worthy of the consideration of those whose stock of tomatoes is greater than can be used for cooking and salads.

To two gallons of tomatoes three peppers should be added when minced, and these must be placed in a large preserving pan with a tablespoonful of freshly ground black pepper, an ounce of powdered ginger, a quarter of an ounce of cloves, half an ounce of mixed spice, two ounces of salt and the grated rind of a lemon. These ingredients should be well minced together and boiled for an hour to an hour and a half. At the end of that time the contents of the pan should be allowed to cool, and when cold an ounce of curry powder and an ounce of powdered mustard added, with a breakfast cupful of vinegar. This mustard mixture should be bottled and corked down tightly.

Another sauce which is equally excellent to eat with cold roast or boiled meat is also made of tomatoes.

To a gallon of tomatoes a full breakfast cupful of minced red peppers and a large cupful of minced onion should be added, the tomatoes having been cut up very small. Half a pound of brown sugar, in half a teacupful of salt—or less if this is considered too much—a small teaspoonful each of powdered ginger, cloves and cinnamon, can be worked in with half a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg and rather less of powdered mace. To all these should be added a pint and a half of vinegar, and the ingredients turned into a preserving pan and boiled for three hours.

Hot and Cold Tartare Sauces.

Cold—Put the yolk of one egg into a bowl with one teaspoon of dry mustard, one level teaspoon of salt and just a little bit of cayenne pepper. Stir with a wooden spoon until smooth; then add one-half cup of salad oil and three tablespons of lemon juice or vinegar, a few drops at a time, stirring quickly all the time. When the sauce is thick and smooth add one tablespoon each of choped parsley, capers and gherkins and one teaspoon of very finely chopped onions. Keep cool until wanted for use. Serve with cold fish.

Sauce Tartar (hot)—One tablespoon vinegar, one teaspoon lemon juice, one-half teaspoon salt, one tablespoon of walnut catchup or table sauce, two tablespoons butter. Mix vinegar, lemon juice, salt and catchup together and heat over hot water. Brown butter in another pan, and strain into the other mixture. Nice for broiled fish.

Baking Powder Biscuit.

Sift together three times one quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a teaspoonful of salt. Rub in quickly and thoroughly with the tips of the fingers one tablespoonful of lard and butter mixed. Add slowly one cupful and a half of milk. Mix lightly, with little handling. Turn out on the molding board, roll into a sheet a half-inch thick, cut out with a small round cutter, and lay in a greased baking pan, so they will not touch. Bake in a very hot oven for about twenty minutes.

Clean Shelf Papers.

The next time you are cleaning the pantry shelves, fold at least three newspapers the longest way of the full sheets. Place them on the shelf with the fold in front and fit snugly. The next time you want a clean paper slip the edge of a knife along the fold of the outer sheet and remove the soiled top. The remainder of the sheets will be left intact for future use, and much time and labor will be saved to the housewife.

Chocolate Jumbles.

One-half pound of chocolate, one pint of molasses, one cup of sugar, one cup of butter, one teaspoon clove, one teaspoon cinnamon, one teaspoon allspice, two teaspoons soda, one cup hot water, three eggs, flour enough to roll without sticking.

Cider Apple Sauce.

Boil down the cider, use newly dried apples, pared and quartered if sour, allow one-fourth their weight in sugar or use late sweet apples, pared and quartered, very little or no sugar. Cook slowly, and be careful not to break the fruit in stirring.

THE HOME LIFE OF THE SETTLER

WESTERN CANADA AFFORDS ALL THE COMFORTS AND MANY OF THE LUXURIES.

A young lady of Wisconsin secured a certificate at the Milwaukee office of the Canadian Government, and on presenting this to the ticket agent of the railway at the Canadian boundary line she secured a ticket at a reduced rate which carried her to Edmonton, Alberta, from which point, about forty miles, she had friends. This was a couple of years ago, and the young lady is now married to one of the promising young farmers of the district.

In writing of her trip to the Milwaukee representatives of the Canadian Government she says: "I enjoyed my trip up here very much, and expect to go out to our homestead in the Pembina district next spring." To the housewife the information that she has "put up twelve quarts of raspberries" is important, as they "picked them themselves," and they might have picked ten times the quantity if they had required them, for there is no country where wild fruit grows in such abundance. The letter goes on to say, and this is interesting from a woman's standpoint, "the country is very beautiful." Speaking of the friends with whom she went up to live, she says: "They certainly have a beautiful farm and house"—they had been there about four years, also going from Wisconsin—"they have about twenty acres of oats and barley, five acres alfalfa, three acres potatoes and I don't know how many of vegetables. I think they have about forty acres under cultivation altogether. They are now draining a slough which they will afterwards plow and put into fall wheat. They also have a large herd of cattle, and Mrs. C. has about 100 chickens. They make on an average of 30 pounds of butter every week. I never saw such grand cream."

Now these people are enjoying life in Alberta; they have a splendid climate, excellent prospects, and are happy that they are part and parcel in the working out of the upbuilding of a new country, that will take its place amongst the progressive countries of the century. Numbers of letters that express satisfaction as extreme as the one quoted appear in literature sent out by the Canadian Government and which may be had on application to any of its agents.

Not a Lively Fish, at Best.

One of the porters on the train out of Salt Lake City was an impassive-looking negro, who had a ready, if inaccurate, answer to almost any question put him by the passengers. It was hard to tell whether he believed all that he said or whether he was having fun with his questioners.

One man, on first catching sight of the lake, asked if there were any fish in it.

"No, sah," said the porters, "dere ain't no fishes in dat lake, sah. Dey done tried ter see ef dey couldn't have fishes in dare, but dey wouldn't stay alive. De fishes dat stayed alive de longest was salt mack'r'l, but dey wa'n't very prosp'rous, sah."—Youth's Companion.

Her Logic.

It was the week before Christmas. Emery and his younger sister, Mildred, were debating very seriously the reality of Santa Claus.

"There isn't any Santa Claus," said Emery, with finality.

"Why, there must be," insisted his sister. "How could they make pictures that look just like him?"

The Plummer Pioneer is published every Friday at Plummer, Red Lake County, Minnesota. Subscription Rates: $1,25 per year in advance, 65 cents for six months, and 35 cents for three months.

Local advertising 5 cents a line for each insertion.

Gov. John Burke, of North Dakota, has been indorsed by North Dakota Democrats as one of the Democratic "white hopes" for the presidency at the comming election.

There are no "House for Rent" signs to be seen in our town. That is proof of growth and prosperity, and also an indication that more homes ought to be provided for the people who would move here, if houses could be rented. A number of cozy and attractive cottages that can be rented at a reasonable figure is what we need.

With this week's issue the Plummer Pioneer adopts Friday as its day of publication instead of Saturday as heretofore. We consider this change advisable for various reasons, but mainly for the fact that many of our readers are unable to get their paper by Sunday and some times not before Monday or Tuesday. By publishing the paper Friday our readers should get their paper Friday night or Saturday at the latest.

"Booze," as a word connected with taking strong waters, dates back two centuries, and in the spelling "bouze" may be found at even as a remote a date as 1300. "Fresh," in its signification of forward, comes from 1803. "Some pumpkins," popular slang in bucolic circles, is of ancient lineage. "Gab" has been slang for a century. "Stag," on the fence between slang and English, has survived generations. In the "Knickerbocker Magazine" of 1856 we find an author telling of "a party of old bricks who are keeping up a small stag party at the end of the room." "Squelch" in the 17th century was in good use. Of two words in vogue to express drunkenness half a century ago, "tight" is much alive, while "whittled" has been dropped. There are no fixed laws to gauge the life of slang or to predict its entrance into the language. Will "high-brow," for example, find its way into the mouths of grandchildren yet unborn, or will it take its place in the ranks of obselete curiosities?

Judging from the size of the cream checks the patrons of the Plummer Creamery are receiving we predict that within 5 years there will not be an acre, of good land anywhere within 10 or 12 miles of Plummer to be had for less than $40 or $50 per acre. Red Lake County is fast getting to be known as one of the best dairy counties in the state of Minnesota and the immigration agents and Railroad Companies predict that there in this county this comming year 1911 there will be the greatest movement in land with sales principally to actual settlers from southern Minnesota, Iowa Wisconsin, and Illinois that this country has ever seen and they are certainly in position to know whereof they speak.

Andrew Letvig left for St. Hilaire last Friday, for a few days visit with his home folks.

January seems to be determined out go as it came with a cold snap.

Mike Kolski, transacted business over at Red Lake Falls, and other points last Tuesday and Wednesday.

Auaan Nistaud, from Prince Albert Canada, has been a visitor at the Nestaud home here for a few days.

Andrew Letvig moved his well machine down into Hickory, last Thursday, and is now busy drilling a well for Carl Waldron.

A. O. Stavness, purchased a nice team of horses while at Thief River Falls last week.

Ben Kirste made us a short visit the other evening.

Mr. E. A. Nisstue, County Supt of schools returned home last Saturday for a couple of days visit with family.

Alfred Nelson, one of the prosperious young Hickory bachelor transacted business over at Highlanding last week.

The Knut E. Syversrud family are now all on the way to recovery.

Geo. Liemers, was down at Thief River a couple of days this week and served on the jury.

Pete Gustafson, was down to Plummer last Monday with a load of grain.

Frank Lundeen, transacted business at Plummer last week.

C. O. Swanson, from Hickory, was up this way on business matters last Tuesday.

On last Tuesday, the farmers held meeting over at Oklee for the purpose of organizing a Farmers Co-Operative Elevator at that place. Mr. E. J. Van Horn President of the Right Relationship League of Minneapolis was also present for to give the farmers a talk along the lines of Co-Operation. After some time was spent in discussing the matter, the meeting was called to order and here Olaf Tande, was drawn as chairman of the meeting, and W. A. Swanson, was chosen as Temp. Secy. It was then duly moved and seconded that we proceed and organize right then and there which was done the Co-Operation, to be known as the Oklee Farmers Co-Operrtive Elevator Company with a captial stock of ten thousand dollars and also providing for a five dollar membership fee extra and limited at two hundred shares at fifty dollars per share. The following board of officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year. President Olaf Tande, Vice President Theo Veitch, Secy. L. J. O'Neil, Treasurer, C. H. Halverson, and M. E. Hyland as one of the board of directors whom all qualified, and the articles of incorporation are now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds, and the Oklee Farmers Co-Operative Elevator Company is now ready to do business.

It seems to be a rather divided sencoucing now as to the amount of what the shares should have been. Some seem to be under the impression that the shares should have been twenty five dollars. But however let not this cause any delay, as the move is made in the right direction, and every farmer tributary to this market center bas sanctioned the move, therefore reconsider this matter with yourselves, as to the amount of the shares, and then take into consideration the inconviences that we were obliged to put up with this season already, to say nothing about the account that has been extracted from our net earnings outside of lawful dockage, which if these figures could be brought before you would without doubt make us all think twice. But it is now up to us to say whether we are going to keep up this donation any longer or not. In the first place, can we afford to? We are all aware of the existing conditions for this year, both as to the matter of donation, and also as to the inconviences that we have been obliged to put up with for the lack of storing capacity with the present Elevator, and are we still going to ignore these facts, or shall we get together and try and improve the existing conditions, and then provide for the future, which at this time lacks encourment in every way, and we have ever reason to look for a most beautiful harvest for 1912. And it behooves us now to take this matter into consideration, and not take the chance of facing a blockade, which will mean a great loss to the farmers, in this community. In conclusion will say, that in order to do this, we must become united, and your support is respectfully solicited at this time, so by all means lend us a helping hand.

12 to 9 The final Score

Thief River "Clique" Wins in Thursday's argument by a close Margin.

Manager Rice and his war horses were up to Thief River last Thursday evening and had it out with the new athletic association at that place. Altho the Thief Riverites go a shade the best of the argument the teams are very evenly matched, and is said to have played an excellent game.

At the end of the last half the score was a tie, both teams having run up a score of 9, and an extra quarter was annexed to the game to "saw" of the tie. In this quarter Thief River made one basket and on a foul by one of the local men another point was made which netted them three additional points. The score at the close of this last quarter was 12 to 9 in favor of the Thief River team.

A return game is being negotiated for in the near future and arrangements may be made to have the Gully team come down at the same time so as to make the event a double-header

The game of basket ball played between the Erskine quintette and the local team is reported to have been the fastest game ever witnessed here. The score was even all through the game and both teams exerted every muscel to gain the desired lead. At one time the locals made a lead of 3 scores but as the game progressed Erskine made the score up and from then on the score was held close. In the last quarter a lot of hard playing was done by both teams but Erskine finally landing the game by a 13 to 12 score.

Scotland Is Leased.

John E. Lee of Hanley Falls, to take over Popular Hostilary

Mr. and Mrs. John Lee and little son, of Hanley Falls, were in Plummer the first of the week and while here Mr. Lee made arrangements to lease the Hotel Scotland, to succeed H. H. Finrow who leaves shortly for Montana.

Mr. Lee expects to take charge of the hotel March 15 and is now at his home at Hamley Falls, making preparations to move with his family here shortly. Mr. Lee has had many years of experience in the confectionery and restaurant business and will undoubtedly continue to keep up the high standard of this hostilary established by its former management. The Finrow family expects to depart for Lewiston, Mont., as soon as the new propiretor takes possession. It is with keen regret that our residents learn of their departure from our midst. They have during the many years in business here made the acquaintance and gained the friendship of almost every resident in this section of the State who are loth to see them leave.

Had A Good Time

Masque Ball the Scene of Many Funny Faces Last Friday Evening.

A fine time was had by every-one who attended the masquerade ball at the city hall Friday evening. A very large crowd was present and in addition to those masqued a large number of spectators were also present.

Miss Lou Green captured the prize for the best dressed lady while Hans Hugget easily walked off with the honors for being the best looking man. Miss Tina Noterman, captured the prize for the funniest dressed lady, while Miss Elsie Brekke, who surprised her friends by her appearance in male "togs" took the first prize for the funniest man. The music which was furnished by the Lillo orchestra was good and everyone had the time of their life.

S. A. Stid, of Mason, Mich., will never forget his terrible exposure to a merciless storm. "It gave me a dreadful cold," he writes, "that caused severe pains in my chest, so it was hard for me to breathe. A neighbor gave me several doses of Dr. King's New Discovery which brought great relief. The doctor said I was on the verge of pneumonia, but to continue with the Discovery. I did so and two bottles completely cured me," Use only this quick, safe, reliable medicine for coughs, colds, or any throat or lung trouble. Price 50c and $1.00. Trail bottle free. High Price For Butterfat

During the month of December the Emardville Creamery paid to its patrons 43½ cents per pound for butter fat, the higest price paid for butter fat by any creamery in this section. It is unusual that this price is ever reached and is an additional indication of the prosperity of the local creamery due mainly to its excellent management.

Nick Pahlen, of Red Lake Falls, was in town a couple of days as a guest of his brother, Jack, while enroute to his claim in Mayfield township, where he went to get things in readiness for the spring work.

Population of State

An Increase of 18.5 per cent in last Ten Years Shown in Census Bulletin.

According to the census bulletin just issued the population of Minnesota is given as 2,075,708. Compared with a population of 1,751,394 in 1900, this represents an increase during the last decade of 324,314, or 18.5 per cent. During the same period the total population of continental United States increased 21 per cent. The growth of the state during the last decade, although substantial, was slower than during any previous decade. The following table shows the population of Minnesota at each Federal census from 1850 to 1910, inclusive together with the increase and per cent of increase during each decade, in comparison with the per cent of increase for continental United States as a whole.

Minnesota was organized as a territory in 1849 and appears in the Federal census report for the first time in 1850. During the decade 1850-1860 its population increased from 6,077 to 172,023, and during the 30 years 1860-1890, the growth continued at a rapid rate. For each succeeding decade during this period the absolute increases were greater although the percentage increases declined from 155.6 to 67.8. In the decade 1890-1900 the percentage increase dropped to 33.7 and in the following decade to 18.5, the absolute increases as well as the rate showing a decline at the censuses of 1900 and 1910.

The rate of growth for the state has been higher than for the country as a whole during every decade except the last. During the decade 1890-1900 the rate for the state was about one and one-half times that for continental United States. In the earlier decades the excess was much greater.

We have heard of unique and likewise seemingly impossible feats being formed by domestic as well as wild animals but we have never read or heard of in either ancient of modern times of a horse trying to climb a tree before. We could fain credit the story but have it from reliable authority that such an animal exists, and, worse yet, right in our midst. The proud owner of this wonderful species of the animal kingdom is Gudor Hagen, the popular manager of our farmer's store. The unique characteristic of this wonderful horse was not even known to its owner until one evening this week when he was returning home from a sleigh ride and when the horse refused to go any farther, but instead proceeded to climb one of the tallest trees he could find [illegible] Gudor naturally, refused to allow this performance; words that we dare not print was said to the horse by his master which was followed by a few lashes from the whip. At this point the horse thot it time to "skeddadle" and breaking away from the cutter he made his way home as fast as ever he could. On seeing the horse return to town without its owner, Gudor's friends became uneasy. Some intimated that perchance a horrible accident had befell him. Some even went as far as to suggest that as this was Leap Year probably he was being corrolled by one of his admirers and while busy "spooning" failed to discover the loss of his horse, and while so occupied would possibly freeze to death. Finally as the minutes draged along into hours and no signs of Gudor his friends became desperate and it was decided to hire a livery rig to go out and look for him. It was not long before he was discovered trotting along with the cutter behind a la Dan Patch mode. He was brought back to town where he was made to explain the cause of his predicament and hence the revelation of the wonderful tactics of the wonderful horse.

He Won't Limp Now.

The score was even all through the game and both teams exerted every muscel to gain the desired lead. At one time the locals made a lead of 3 scores but as the game progressed Erskine made the score up and from then on the score was held close. In the last quarter a lot of hard playing was done by both teams but Erskine finally landing the game by a 13 to 12 score.

Scotland Is Leased.

John E. Lee of Hanley Falls, to take over Popular Hostilary

Mr. and Mrs. John Lee and little son, of Hanley Falls, were in Plummer the first of the week and while here Mr. Lee made arrangements to lease the Hotel Scotland, to succeed H. H. Finrow who leaves shortly for Montana.

Mr. Lee expects to take charge of the hotel March 15 and is now at his home at Hamley Falls, making preparations to move with his family here shortly. Mr. Lee has had many years of experience in the confectionery and restaurant business and will undoubtedly continue to keep up the high standard of this hostilary established by its former management. The Finrow family expects to depart for Lewiston, Mont., as soon as the new propiretor takes possession. It is with keen regret that our residents learn of their departure from our midst. They have during the many years in business here made the acquaintance and gained the friendship of almost every resident in this section of the State who are loth to see them leave.

Had A Good Time

Masque Ball the Scene of Many Funny Faces Last Friday Evening.

A fine time was had by every-one who attended the masquerade ball at the city hall Friday evening. A very large crowd was present and in addition to those masqued a large number of spectators were also present.

Miss Lou Green captured the prize for the best dressed lady while Hans Hugget easily walked off with the honors for being the best looking man. Miss Tina Noterman, captured the prize for the funniest dressed lady, while Miss Elsie Brekke, who surprised her friends by her appearance in male "togs" took the first prize for the funniest man. The music which was furnished by the Lillo orchestra was good and everyone had the time of their life.

High Price For Butterfat

During the month of December the Emardville Creamery paid to its patrons 43½ cents per pound for butter fat, the higest price paid for butter fat by any creamery in this section. It is unusual that this price is ever reached and is an additional indication of the prosperity of the local creamery due mainly to its excellent management.

Nick Pahlen, of Red Lake Falls, was in town a couple of days as a guest of his brother, Jack, while enroute to his claim in Mayfield township, where he went to get things in readiness for the spring work.

Population of State

An Increase of 18.5 per cent in last Ten Years Shown in Census Bulletin.

According to the census bulletin just issued the population of Minnesota is given as 2,075,708. Compared with a population of 1,751,394 in 1900, this represents an increase during the last decade of 324,314, or 18.5 percent. During the same period the total population of continental United States increased 21 per cent. The growth of the state during the last decade, although substantial, was slower than during any previous decade. The following table shows the population of Minnesota at each Federal census from 1850 to 1910, inclusive together with the increase and per cent of increase during each decade, in comparison with the per cent of increase for continental United States as a whole

Minnesota was organized as a territory in 1849 and appears in the Federal census report for the first time in 1850. During the decade 1850-1860 its population increased from 6,077 to 172,023, and during the 30 years 1860-1890, the growth continued at a rapid rate. For each succeeding decade during this period the absolute increases were greater, although the percentage increases declined from 155.6 to 67.8. In the decade 1890-1900 the percentage increase dropped to 33.7 and in the following decade to 18.5, the absolute increases as well as the rate showing a decline at the censuses of 1900 and 1910.

The rate of growth for the state has been higher than for the country as a whole during every decade except the last. During the decade 1890-1900 the rate for the state was about one and one-half times that for continental United States. In the earlier decades the excess was much greater.

We have heard of unique and likewise seemingly impossible feats being formed by domestic as well as wild animals but we have never read or heard of in either ancient of modern times of a horse trying to climb a tree before. We could fain credit the story but have it from reliable authority that such an animal exists, and, worse yet, right in our midst. The proud owner of this wonderful species of the animal kingdom is Gudor Hagen, the popular manager of our farmer's store. The unique characteristic of this wonderful horse was not even known to its owner until one evening this week when he was returning home from a sleigh ride and when the horse refused to go any farther, but instead proceeded to climb one of the tallest trees he could find along the roadside. Gudor, naturally, refused to allow this performance; words that we dare not print was said to the horse by his master which was followed by a few lashes from the whip. At this point the horse thot it time to "skeddadle" and breaking away from the cutter he made his way home as fast as ever he could. On seeing the horse return to town without its owner, Gudor's friends became uneasy. Some intimated that perchance a horrible accident had befell him. Some even went as far as to suggest that as this was Leap Year probably he was being correlled by one of his admirers and while busy "spooning" failed to discover the loss of his horse, and while so occupied would possibly freeze to death. Finally as the minutes draged along into hours and no signs of Gudor his friends became desperate and it was decided to hire a livery rig to go out and look for him. It was not long before he was discovered trotting along with the cutter behind a la Dan Patch mode. He was brought back to town where he was made to explain the cause of his predicament and hence the revelation of the wonderful tactics of the wonderful horse.

Keeping the Boys and Girls on the Farm

RECEIVING PRACTICAL INSTRUCTION FROM HIS ELDERS

JUVENILE OYSTER FARMERS

IN these days when the public prints and the popular mind are filled with the subject of the "back to the soil" crusade which has been sweeping over the country it might be supposed that the enthusiasm for farm life was universal. And yet, oddly enough, the problem of keeping the boys and girls on the farm is, in some sections of the country, only little less acute than it was a few years ago when the cities bade fair to drain the rural districts of all the best of its young blood. However, it is only fair to say that the crisis has been passed in this drift from the country to the city. The tide has turned not only as shown by the migration of many city folk countryward, but yet more significantly by the growing content with which an increasing proportion of the young people who have been born and reared in the country elect to remain in their native environment when the time comes for them to strike out for themselves.

It should be pointed out, just here, though, that the considerations that are prompting an increased percentage of rural youth to stay by the time-honored vocation of their forefathers are not all the purely sentimental ones that influence so many city folks to seek the country as a place of residence. It is undoubtedly true that the average individual is prone to under-estimate the advantages and exaggerate the disadvantages of his own situation and environment. And it is equally true that "far away fields look green," literally as well as figuratively speaking. Consequently the city resident, sick of stuffy apartments and noisy, dirty streets, working for a wage or salary, is prone to find a dream of paradise in the prospect of being his own boss in the cool, quiet country. The country girl or boy, on the other hand, must inevitably look at the situation through the opposite end of the telescope. He or she is familiar from experience with the hard work of the farm which the inexperienced city dwller has given scarce a thought to in advance and many of the distractions of city life which have palled on the urban resident who turns his eyes farmward possess the charm of novelty for the untraveled young people of the farm.

Boys and Girls Sticking to the Farm.

That despite this state of affairs a constantly increasing proportion of the country girls and boys are choosing to stick by the farms is highly significant and betokens a change of material conditions as well as an altered mental state. And, speaking of material things, or had we better say financial conditions, it might as well be put down first and foremost that one of the main factors in inducing country bred youth to remain in the country is the increased prosperity that has come in recent years to tillers of the soil. In the old days when almost every farm was heavily mortgaged and the son or daughter of the household saw little ahead but a life-time struggle wtih debt it was no wonder that they turned to paths where life, if not easier, was certainly more pleasant and allowed a more equal division of the time betewen work and play.

But now, with the farms on a sound, profitable basis and the average rural couple able to start their married life on a farm of their own,—wholly or partially paid for,—there is not so much attraction in the jobs which the city affords the unskilled worker,—the $12 or $15 a week at which the street car conductor must start or the $5 or $8 a week that is offered to the new recruit among the shop girls of the big city stores. Even if a country youth is allured by the lights and life and glamor and gaiety of the large city he is now compelled, by that sound, practical common sense which is the heritage of the average farmer boy, to stop and consider whether it is worth the sacrifice demanded in dollars and cents, to say nothing of the sacrifice of health, to which perhaps he gives nary a thought.

Prosperity Has Brought Improved Conditions.

The farmers who have given serious thought to the problems of keeping their girls and boys with them or near them on the farms have been quick to appreciate the advantages of the improved conditions of recent years and they have followed up the advantage that prosperity has given them by making it easy for a young man to get title to a tract of his own or for the daughter of a household to have a dowry of broad acres when she marries. We can all remember how the farmer of yesterday, even if he was pretty "well fixed," thought that his son ought to be perfectly content if he had a showy turnout in which to take his best girl for the traditional Sunday afternoon ride. Ideals have changed rapidly in this respect and a great light has broken in upon the wide-awake farmers. The prosperous tiller of the soil has come to realize that if he wishes to have his son remain in the neighborhood he must either give him a tangible interest in the home place or else arrange matters so that the young man can strike out as master of his own holding, even though it be a comparatively small one to start with.

Rural Free Delivery of Much Benefit.

Much has been said regarding the extent to which the rural free delivery of U. S. mail has contributed to keeping boys and girls on the farm and its influence has probably not been exaggerated. For all that the average young farmer prizes the boon of receiving his daily paper on the same day on which it is printed, it is probable that rural free delivery has meant even more to the young women than it has to the young men.

The circulating rural libraries have been another contributor to content on the farms and so have the rural telephones which enable the young people to keep in close touch with one another and enable them to arrange social festivities on short notice,—something that was absolutely impossible under the old conditions when every farmhouse was more or less isolated from all the other dwellings of the country side. The advent of the modern musical instruments has been another tremendous help in rendering the country young people self-sufficient. The player piano has done wonders but perhaps the greatest transformation has been wrought by the modern graphophones, phonographs nad talking machines with the facilities they afford for ready-made concerts and recitals of sacred music and accompaniments for singing in the home and dance music for the frolics in barn or parlor.

The latest and one of the most potent of all the contributors to content in rural communities is the moving picture. The time will come when every farm household can have its nightly moving picture entertainment in its own home (enjoying the delights of foreign travel and the relaxation of funny plays) but in the meantime the installation of moving picture shows in every town and village has given the rural young people the best kind of a substitute for the one form of amusement that in the past they thought could only be had in the cities.

The moving picture fad has also made it possible for the young people to enjoy an evening of relaxation, whenever they happened to feel in the mood or whenever the state of the weather is favorable to a drive "to town." In the old days the opera house in the average small town had a theatrical attraction not more than once or twice a week, and even if the young people on the farm could make it convenient to make the trip on such an occasion they were more than likely to be confronted with "The Two Orphans" or "Ten Nights in the Bar Room" or "East Lynne" or "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or some other classic that they had seen so many times that they knew the story backward and forward. Now we have the moving pictures open every night with a nightly change of the little plays on their programs. Their programs are concluded, too, at an hour that enables the farm young people to be at home and in bed in reasonable season and finally this innocent amusement costs only a fraction what a visit to the "town hall" or the opera house did in the old days when the traveling troupes held sway.

To jump at one bound from the frivolous to the serious, it may be noted that our modern agricultural colleges are also doing a tremendous work in keeping the young people on the farm. First of all, they give to the farmer boy and girl an added appreciation and respect for the vocation which awaits them and incidently kindle ambition by disclosing how much money can be made in farming if the farmer will get down to business and use scientific, progressive methods. Quite aside from this consideration however is the one that after a three or four year course at an agricultural college, with all sorts of excursions and social festivities on the side, a farmer lad or lassie is more likely to have had his or her "fill" of such diversions and be ready to come back home and settle down to the serious business of life than is the country-bred junior who has never been off the farm and has never had any opportunity to gratify that love of a good time that is instinctive with all young people.

A Sad Event.

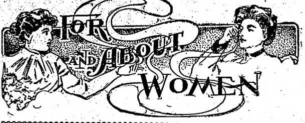
The irrepresible "Tody" Hamilton, who is held to know as much about circuses as any human being could, tells of the misfortunes of an Ohio man who attempted to pilot a "one-tent show" through the middle west.

This owner lost a number of valuable animals, by accident and otherwise; so that it was with considerable sympathy that one of his keepers undertook the task of "breaking gently to the old man" the news of further disaster. The keeper accomplished this with much tact, as follows:

"Mr. Morgan, you remember that laffin' hyena in cage No. 8?"

"Remember the laughing hyena?" repeated the owner. "What the deuce are you driving at?"

"Simply this, Mr. Morgan: He ain't got nothin' to laugh at this mornin'."—Lippincott's.



DRAPING THE WINDOW

NEED NOT BE CONSIDERED MUCH OF A PROBLEM.

So Many Materials to Select From That the Task Is Now Comparatively Easy—Some Conventional Designs.

To drape windows artistically and not exclude any of the very necessary light often becomes a serious problem.

So many inexpensive yet exceedingly attractive materials are displayed that the task becomes comparatively easy.

For the nursery windows there are many appropriate designs, depicting scenes from the Mother Goose rhymes or Alice in Wonderland.

Any material may be used, from common yellow muslin to linen crash.

Two straight pieces form the sides. These are joined by a valance across the top of the window. The curtains are hung from a narrow brass rod.

To prevent the dust from collecting, they are hung without a heading.

Any soft, neutral coloring is attractive for the stenciling. Old delft-blue against a rich cream background would be charming.

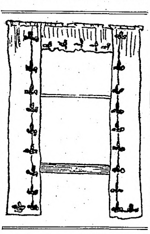
Ofttimes the window is narrow and we desire to have it appear wider. The straight curtains hung from the sides have this tendency.

The curtain may start from the very edge of the window frame and extend beyond the width of the drapery. This gives an added width of a foot or less, as desired.

The conventional design of blocks may either be stenciled at home or purchased at the shops.

A narrow rod of brass is used and the draperies are hung from small brass rings. This makes a dainty, simple dressing for the narrow window.

It is often difficult to treat the latticed window effectively. Perhaps this suggestion will prove a help. The window in itself is a decorative feature, therefore the draperies should be plain. Soft curtains of swiss or muslin edged with a tiny ruffle of the same make a quaint, pretty finish for the latticed window.

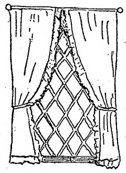


They are usually caught back with a cord or narrow band of the same material.

Another suggestion for the plain window is to have the draperies extend twelve or fourteen inches below the sill. A valance joins them at the top.

The narrow rod may be of brass or painted wood. The curtains are hung from small brass rings.

Pretty French cretonnes or poplins make attractive draperies. Plain colors may have bands of cretonne to border them. The flowers or design may be carefully cut out and appliqued on the curtains.



For those who do not care to make the draperies, an endless variety may be had at the shops.

These curtains launder beautifully, and are thoroughly practical from every point of view.

There is absolutely no excuse for not having attractive windows when simple draperies, costing a painfully small sum, may be had with very little trouble.

FITTING CORSET TO FIGURE

One of the Secrets of Success in Dress, According to Expert Who Should Know.

This is the season of the year when we are plunged into a very debauch of clothes.

Of course the foundation of all good dressing lies in the corset, and the woman who wishes to be well dressed takes the precaution of buying good stays. Fashions in this line change almost as often as they do in our outer garments, and to have a fashionable figure one must have a newly-fashioned corset.

Just at present La Mode adheres more firmly than ever to a perfectly straight appearance below the waist. From that point the lines are carried as straight as the stream of a waterfall.

Of course, it takes a great deal of skill to fashion a corset of this kind. Those who have taken this task upon themselves faced the fact from the first that difficulties were in the way of combining comfort with the extreme length which fashion demands. But these difficulties seem to have been successfully surmounted in the new corsets and models are made to suit all figures.

The secret of success in fitting on a corset, so says one expert, is to fit the stays to the figure, not the figure to uncongenial stays.

LACE USED ON EVERYTHING

At Least, There Are Few Articles of the Costume on Which It Is Not Found.

With the emphasis laid on revolutionary modes and styles of the empire, lace has assumed a place of importance that it were well to consider in planning frocks or ornate dresses for afternoon and evening.

Ruffles of lace have been placed on the lower edge of skirts under the tunic. There is little fulness in these new skirts. The straight silhouette, although decidedly removed from the hobble line of last season, must be adhered to and, therefore, the ruffles must be scant.

Many long sleeves show ruffles at the wrist. Fine laces are used for this, giving soft folds of white over the hand.

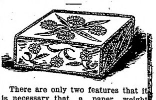
Lace is used for jabots, plisses, revers and collarettes on blouses. Wide and narrow bands and edgings are equally popular. Frills of black and white lace fall down the fronts of cloth frocks. They are in the majority of cases adjustable, and one dress, therefore, can show many little touches by the mere removal and replacing of a frill.

The use of lace on evening hats is decidedly noticeable. High, puffed crowns of allover Valenciennes lace, of coarser varieties or of Irish lace in combination with valenciennes are used on models that have lightness of weight and fresh colorings for their chief recommendations.

Wraps are trimmed with heavy laces edged with fur. Hoods of lace lined with shirred chiffon or soft plaitings of silk are in demand; and you may be sure that the French modistes always meet a demand.

Lace scarfs, beaded and trimmed with bands of chenille embroidery, are shown in many of the little shops in which accessories of dress are emphasized. By the way, how many "little shops" there are over in Paris!

NEAT PAPER WEIGHT



There are only two features that it is necessary that a paper weight should contain. The one is that it should be heavy, and the other is that it should be as ornamental as possible. A very capital paper weight can be made with the aid of any ordinary empty wooden match box, filled with shot or small stones, or anything of weight; and then entirely covered with some dainty remnant of silk or satin on which some pretty floral design has been either embroidered or painted. When this has been done, to complete the weight, it should be edged with a fine silk cord, chosen in some contrasting shade of color. In our sketch may be seen an ornamental little article of this kind, made in the manner directed.

A badly torn nail is kept safe from further injury by a strip of sticking plaster reaching well down on the nail and over the fleshy part of the finger.

MY LADY OF THE NORTH

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail, and arriving at the Minor place, Wayne meets Miss Minor and Mrs. Bungay, and later Edith appears. Wayne's detachment is besieged by guerrillas. Brennan and his men arrive and aid in repelling the invaders.

CHAPTER XXXI.—Continued.

"A mere waste of powder, I fear," was my reply, given thoughtlessly. "When the rush finally comes we are likely to be without sufficient ammunition to repel it. I hardly expect those fellows out there will ever leave without a determined effort to carry the house by storm. I have no doubt they are simply drawing all this fire in the hope that our ammunition will thus be uselessly expended. It is an old army trick, and one I am surprised to see so experienced an officer as Major Brennan yield to. In my judgment they will make an effort to rush us as soon as there is sufficient light."

"But why not warn him?"

"Major Brennan would scarcely welcome any interference on my part."

"But surely, as a soldier, he must value the advice of another soldier?"

"Possibly you forget," I explained, striving to speak as lightly of it as might be, "that there is a lack of friendship between Major Brennan and myself."

"Still?" she asked. "Truly I thought that might all be over. Even if it survived until now, this noble act of yours in coming to our defense should have earned you his gratitude. He—he has never once mentioned your name to me since that night."

"Not even when I came here with my troop, I believe?"

"No; yet I did not connect that fact with the other. I supposed it a mere oversight, or that he believed the mention of your name would not greatly interest me. Surely, Captain Wayne, you are not keeping open this unhappy wound?"

"On my word, no; but I regret to confess it is very far from being closed."

"He—Major Brennan does not know, then, that you are here now with me?" She evidently hesitated to ask this question.

"Certainly not," in surprise at her apparent innocence. "You cannot have supposed I had been sent here by him to talk with you?"

"I—I did not know. I do not think I realized," she stammered, vainly seeking for words with which to make clear her bewilderment. "I imagined you might have come at his suggestion to see that we were amply protected. This is all so very strange. He does not even know you are here with us?"

"No," I admitted reluctantly. "Perhaps I have no excuse even for being here at all. My duty as a soldier is certainly elsewhere, but I could not rest content until I knew you were in a position of safety. Believe me, Mrs. Brennan, I have intended no indiscretion, but I was informed by a soldier that you were being held here under fire."

Her hand touched mine impulsively, and it was warm and throbbing.

"I can merely thank you with all my heart, Captain Wayne, and assure you I both understand and appreciate your purpose. But truly I do not wish any trouble to occur again—you will go back to your post, will you not? You can serve me best in that way, and retain the gratitude and admiration I have ever felt for you."

"At once, Mrs. Brennan," I returned earnestly. "I realize I have done wrong in ever coming here as I have. It is my first act of disobedience to orders in all my military life. But tell me first that I have forfeited neither your confidence nor your friendship?"

She paused a moment, then added quickly, as though in sudden rush of feeling: "No friend stands higher in my esteem than you—now please go, Captain Wayne."

As I crept back through the darkness, passing beneath the piano into the front room, which was filled with the choking fumes of powder, my mind was a chaos of emotions impossible to analyze. The very depth of love which drew me to her operated now in restraint. God alone knows the struggle in the darkness as I continued to move slowly away from her and toward the door. So deep was my agitation, so intense my thought, that I scarcely realized I was creeping along barely beneath the dead line of those bullets which constantly swept the apartment. Their crashing into the wall was almost meaningless, and I barely noted either the dense smoke or the fitful flashes of flame as the little garrison returned shot for shot. It was Brennan's voice—how hateful it sounded then—which recalled my attention.

"Mapes," he said, with the sharp tone of wearied command, "take a crack at that fellow over yonder by the big tree; he must be in range. You men, I verily believe, shut your eyes when you shoot, for there hasn't a man dropped out there in the last half hour."

I had reached the door by this time, but paused now, determined to venture one word of expostulation at his recklessness.

"Major Brennan," I said, speaking sufficiently loud to be audible above the uproar, "do you not think they will attempt to charge the house?"

"Not while we keep up this fire," he returned coldly, evidently recognizing my voice.

"I grant that, at least while darkness lasts. But you have just complained that your men were doing but small execution, and is there not danger of exhausting our stock of ammunition by such a useless fusillade?"

"It will last until our fellows get here—that is, if your man was ever really sent for aid, as you say."

There was a thinly veiled sneer in the words as he spoke them, but I curbed my temper.

"Well, in my judgment, sir—and I tell it you because I deem it a duty—" I retorted plainly, "you are making a grave mistake which you may realize when it becomes too late to rectify it. Possibly I have no right to criticise one who is technically in command, yet I am serving as a volunteer, and the conditions are peculiar. I not only remember the scene witnessed by me in the lines yonder, but also recall the fact that we are here to fulfil a sacred duty—the defense of helpless women from outrage. A fatal mistake upon our part would be horrible."

"Very well, sir"—and his tone was rough and overbearing—"then kindly recall your soldierly instincts to another little matter. I chance to command here by authority of rank, and hold myself responsible for the proper defense of this portion of the house. I believe you have already been assigned your duties; if you will attend to them I shall be greatly obliged, and whenever I may desire your valuable advice I shall take pleasure in sending for you."

I turned away in silence and strode back to my post, white with anger. The dining-room remained as I had left it, and when I lay down in my old position and peered out through the broken blind I could mark no change in the appearance of our besiegers.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Hand to Hand.

The faint gray light of early dawn rested upon the outside world, and through the fleeting shadows of the mist I was able to distinguish much which before had been shrouded by the black curtain. In front of the window where I rested, the grass-covered lawn sloped gradually downward until it terminated at a low picket fence, thickly covered with vines. A great variety of shrubs, which during the night had doubtless afforded shelter for sharpshooters, dotted this grass plot, while beyond the fence boundary stood a double row of large trees. To the far left of our position the burnt stable yet smoldered dully, occasionally sending up a shower of sparks as a draught of air fanned the embers, but there were few signs of life visible. For the moment I even hoped our enemies might have grown discouraged and withdrawn.

"What has become of the guerillas?" I asked in wonderment, turning as I spoke to face the Federal corporal who lay on the other side of me. "Is it possible they have given up?"

"I think not, captain," he replied respectfully, saluting as he would one of his own officers. "They were there just before the light came, and I saw a dozen or more stealing along behind the fence not five minutes ago. See, there is a squad of them now huddled together back of where the stable stood."

"Screw your eye close to the corner of the pane," I ordered hurriedly, "and see what you make out toward the front of the house."

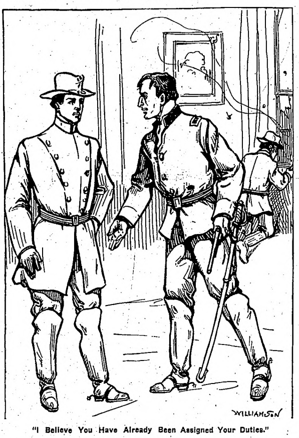
"There's men out there sure, plenty of 'em," he reported slowly. "It looks to me mighty like the end of a line of battle, right there by that big magnolia tree. Anyhow, there must be all of twenty fellows lying close together between there and where the corner of the house shuts off my view. I don't see none this side anywhere, unless it's a shooter or two hiding along the fence where the vines are thick."

"That's it, my lad," I exclaimed, heartily, getting upon my feet as I spoke. "We can stand up now, there's no danger here, but there will be music for all of us presently. Those fellows are getting ready to charge us front and rear."

There were five in the room. I could see them only indistinctly, as the morning light was not yet sufficiently strong to penetrate clearly to where we were, but I was able to note those present—the corporal and his wounded companion, with Hollis and Call of my troop.

"Let the wounded man remain and guard those windows," I commanded. "He would prove of small value in a hand-to-hand struggle, but can probably do some shooting. The rest come with me."

I led them forth into the wide hallway, which extended the full length of the house, with a broad flight of stairs just forward of the center, gradually curving and leading to the second story. The suspended light was yet burning as we came out, but flickered wildly as if in a strong draught of air, and I noticed that the constant rain of bullets during the night had badly splintered an upper panel of the door. Halfway down the broad hallway, and partially obscured by the turn of the stairs, a door stood slightly ajar upon the right hand. Conjecturing this might be where the defenders of the eastern exposure were lying, I peered within. The blinds were tightly drawn and I was able to perceive little of its interior, excepting that the walls were lined with books.



"I Believe You Have Already Been Assigned Your Duties."

"Ebers," I called, thinking he must be there, "are you in charge here?"

"I vos, captain," came the instant reply, and he at once emerged from the darkness.

"Have the enemy kept you busy?"

"Der vos some shooting, und Hadley he got hurt bad, but der fellers is all gone."

"Bring your men fit for duty out here in the hall, and have them join my party. How many have you?"

"Der is four, captain."

He drew back, and as he disappeared some one came hastily toward us along the hallway from the rear.

"What is it, Caton?" I asked anxiously, as I recognized him.

"They are forming to rush me, I think," he answered. "I need a few more men if I can get them."

"They are preparing to assault front and rear at the same time," I answered. "They are massing now, and in my judgment Brennan will have to face the brunt of it. The front of this house is greatly exposed, and will prove extremely difficult to defend if they come against it with any force. How many men do you absolutely require to hold your position? Remember, the women are all in the front part of the house, and we must protect them at all hazards; come with me. There are times when a higher law than that of military despotism should control our actions. I am going there, orders or no orders. Ebers can command your detachment and accomplish all the service you possibly could. Your rightful place is between these ruffians and the woman you love. How many additional men will be required to make the back of the house secure?"

"I feel like a new man, Wayne," he said thankfully, "and I know you are right. Four more would be sufficient, besides the one in command."

"Good! Ebers," I said, as my portly sergeant again emerged from out the darkness, "take your four men back to the kitchen and assume command. The guerillas are preparing to make a rush there, and you must drive them back by a rapid fire. Hurry along now."

The little group had barely vanished beyond the glow of the light when from without our ears were suddenly assailed by a wild, exulting yell that bespoke the charge.

"There they are!" I cried. "Now, lads, come with me!"

The dull, gray, chilling dawn revealed a room in utmost disorder, the windows shattered, the blinds cut and splintered, the walls scarred with bullets and disfigured with stains of blood, the furniture overturned and broken. A dead soldier in gray uniform lay in the center of the floor, his life-blood a dark stain upon the rich carpet; a man with coat off, and blue shirt ripped wide open, was leaning against the further wall vainly endeavoring to staunch a wound in his chest. Brennan was upon one knee near the central window, a smoking gun in his hand, a red welt showing ghastly across his cheek. All this I saw in a single glance, and then, with the leap of a panther I was beside him, gazing out into the morning mist, and firing as fast as I could handle my gun.

Through the shifting smoke clouds we could see them advancing on a run—an ugly, motley line, part blue, part gray, part everything—yelling as they swept forward like a pack of infuriated wolves, their fierce faces scowling savagely behind the rifles. It was half war, half riot—the reckless onslaught of outcasts bent on plunder, inspired by lust, yet guided by rude discipline.

I knew little of detail; faces were blurred, unrecognizable; all I seemed to note clearly was that solid, brutal, heartless, blasphemous line of desperate men sweeping toward us with a relentless fury our puny bullets could not check. Reckless ferocity was in that mad rush; they pressed on more like demons than human beings. I saw men fall; I saw the living stumble over the dead. I heard cries of agony, shouts, curses, but there was no pause. I could mark their faces now, cruel, angry, revengeful; the hands that grasped the veranda railings; the leaping bodies; the rifle butts uplifted to batter down our frail defenses.

As trapped tigers we fought, hurling them back from the windows, slashing, clubbing, striking with fist and steel. Two lay dead across the sill before me, cloven to the very chin, but their bleeding bodies were hurled remorselessly aside, while others clambered forward, mad from lust of blood, crazed with liquor. With clubbed guns we cleared it again and again, battering mercilessly at every head that fronted us. Then a great giant of a fellow—dead or alive, I know not—was hurled head-long through the opening, an inert, limp weight, that bore the two soldiers beside me to the floor beneath his body. With wide sweep of my gun I struck him, shattering the stock into fragments, and swung back to meet the others, the hot barrel falling to right and left like a flail. They were through and on me! Wild as any sea-rover of the north I fought, crazed with blood, unconscious of injury, animated solely by desire to strike and slay! Back I had to go; back—I trod on dead bodies, on wounded shrieking in pain, yet no man who came within sweep of that iron bar lived. I loved to hear the thud of it, and I fronted those glaring eyes, my blood afire, my arms like steel. Through the red mist I beheld Caton for an instant as twenty brutal hands uplifted, and then hurled him into the ruck beneath their feet. Whether I fought alone I knew not, cared not. Then some one pressed next to me, facing as I did, wielding a sword like a madman. We had our backs against the piano, our shoulders touched; before us that mob swayed, checked for the moment, held fast by sudden overpowering dread. I glanced aside. My companion was Brennan, hatless, his deep-set eyes aflame, his coat torn off, his shirt ripped open to the waist, his bare breast red with blood.

"No shootin', damn ye!" shouted a voice, hoarsely. "No shootin'; I want that Reb alive!"

Through the swirling smoke I recognized the malicious face of Red Lowrie as he pushed his way to the front. To me it was like a personal challenge to combat.

"Rush them!" I muttered into Brennan's ear. "Hurl them back a bit, and dodge under into the next room."

I never waited to ascertain if he heard me. With one fierce spring I struck their stunned line, and my iron bar swept a clear space as it crashed remorselessly into them. The next instant Lowrie and I were seemingly alone and fronting each other. A wild cat enraged by pain looks as he did when he leaped to meet me. Hate, deadly, relentless, glared in his eyes, and with a yell of exultation he swung up his long rifle and struck savagely at my head with the stock. I caught it partially on my barrel, breaking its full force, and even as it descended upon my shoulder, jabbed the muzzle hard into his leering face. With a snarl of pain he dropped his gun and grappled with me, but as his fingers closed about my throat, something swirled down through the maze, and the maddened brute staggered back, his arms uplifted, his red beard cloven in twain.

"Now for it, Wayne!" shouted Brennan. "Back with you!"

With a dive I went under the piano. I heard the sliding doors shut behind us, and almost with the sound was again upon my feet.

"To the stairs!" I panted. "Brennan, take the women to the stairs; those fellows are not in the hallway yet, and we can hold them there a while."

In our terrible need for haste, and amid the thick, swirling smoke filling that inner room almost to suffocation, I grasped the woman chancing to be nearest me, without knowing at that moment who she was. Already the rifle-butts were splintering the light wood behind us into staves, and I hastily dragged my dazed companion forward. The others were in advance, and we groped our way like blind persons out into the hall. By rare good fortune it was yet unoccupied, and as we took the few hurried steps toward the foot of the stairs I found my arm was encircling Celia Minor. The depth of despair within her dark eyes and the speechless anguish of her white face, swept for an instant the fierce rage of battle from my brain.

At that moment the mob, discovering our direction of escape, jammed both doorways and surged forth howling into the hall.

"Up!" I cried, forcing her forward. "Up with you; quick!"

I paused a scant second to pluck a saber from beside a dead soldier on the floor, and then with a spring up the intervening steps, faced about at Brennan's side on the first landing.

"We ought to leave our mark on those incarnate devils here," he said grimly, wiping his red blade on the carpet.

"Unless they reach the second story from without, and take us in the rear," I answered, "we ought to hold back the whole cowardly crew, so long as they refuse to fire."

It was a scene to abide long with a man—a horrible nightmare, never to be forgotten. Above us, protected somewhat by the abrupt curve of the wide staircase, crouched the women. Two were sobbing, their heads buried in their hands, but Maria and Mrs. Brennan sat white of face and dry-eyed. I caught one quick glance at the fair face I loved—my sweet lady of the North—thinking, indeed, it might prove the last on earth, and knew her eyes were upon me. Then, stronger of heart than ever for the coming struggle, I fronted that scene below.

Through the rising haze of smoke I looked down into angry faces, unkempt beards, and branished weapons. The baffled rascals poured out upon us from both doors, crowding into the narrow space, cursing, threatening, thirsting for revenge. Yet they were seemingly leaderless, and the boldest among them paused at the foot of the stairs. They had already felt our arms, had tested our steel; and knew well that grim death awaited their advance.

But they could not pause there long—the ever increasing rush of those behind pressed the earlier arrivals steadily forward. Grim necessity furnished a courage naturally lacking, and suddenly, giving vent to a fierce shout, they were hurled upward, seeking to crush us at whatever sacrifice, by sheer force of numbers. We met them with the point, in the good old Roman way, thrusting home remorselessly, fighting with silent contempt for them which must have been maddening. I even heard Brennan laugh, as he pierced a huge ruffian through the shoulder and hurled him backward; but at that moment I saw Craig knock aside a levelled gun and press his way to the front of the seething mass to assume control. His face was inflamed, his eyes bloodshot; drink had changed him into a very demon.

MEDICAL SCIENCE SAYS:

By John Nelson Goltra, A. M., M.D.

DO YOUR DRINKING AT MEAL-TIME.

The time to drink water is at meal-time, rather than between meals. Drinking between periods of digestion interferes with the stomach's natural rest. This very important principle is also overlooked and violated when we eat candies and fruits between meals.

Water is not believed to call into operation the activities of the digestive glands in the same way that all other liquids as well as solids do, but the disposal of water does undoubtedly excite the muscular movements of the stomach.

We need much water. Large amounts are being constantly given off by evaporation from the skin, exhalation by the lungs, and excretion through the various organs. But we also take in great quantities of water in ways we never think of. Bread, for instance, contains moisture in the proportion of about 39 per cent. for the Vienna or French type, and 35 per cent. in homemade bread. In cooked meats the percentage of water ranges from 40 to 50, while in many vegetables and most fruits the water content is from 90 to 95 per cent.

Still, we need more, and the desire to drink while eating is a physiological as well as natural one. About the only restriction is that we must not make a sluice-box of our mouths, and use water as a conveyor to carry on food which we have not taken time to masticate. There is practically no danger of our drinking enough at meal-time to "dilute the gastric juice," as has sometimes been declared.

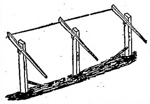
CLEAN SMALL RUGS AT HOME

Work Not Hard and Is a Saving of Expense—Never Wash Them on the Floor.

It is better to clean small rugs at home than to send them to professional cleaners. Small rugs should be taken to the grass plot and there beaten well with a light whip or rug beater. Do not turn over and beat on the wrong side, as that breaks the rug. The beating on the surface brings the dirt to the top, and this should then be swept off, sweeping with the nap, not against it, as this wears out the rug. Also when laying large rugs lay them so that when they are swept it will always be with the nap. A badly soiled rug may be washed. Do not attempt to wash large rugs while on the floor. This method has been widely advertised and appeals to the housekeeper because she need not take up her rugs, but the water soaks through and, having no way of escaping, dries up, leaving a layer of mud between the warp, which gradually rots the threads, while the carpet looks bright on top. After a rug has been well beaten the soiled parts may be washed out with a solution of soap bark or borax and water, using an ounce of bark to a gallon of water. The rugs are laid flat for this purpose, and if done carefully and the rugs then wiped off with a cloth wrung out of hot water, until dry, they will be clean and bright and in no wise injured by the washing.

Clothes-Line Elevator.

Set good, heavy posts for the ends, three feet in and three feet out of the ground. Have the posts neat and smooth so they will not soil the clothes if they should blow against them. Take a piece of 2x4-inch hard wood five feet long for the lever. Fasten to the post near the top with a three-quarters-of-an-inch bolt. Two feet next to the line and three feet for the lever. A block holds the lever in position while the clothes are being put on. A button holds the lever upright when the line is hoisted. It is not necessary for the center post to be as heavy as the end ones.



Fillet of Beef.

Take out the bone of the joint (save for soup), make a deep incision between the meat and the "flap" which your butcher will skewer around the fillet. Fill this and the hole left by taking out the bone with force meat or crumbs, chopped salt pork, chopped thyme and parsley, grated lemon peel, pepper, salt and the juice of a lemon. Bind the fillet into shape with tapes, cover the top with a paste of fine flour and water, bake twelve minutes to the pound, putting a cup of boiling water into the pan. When done, pull off the paste, dredge with flour and baste well with butter. The meat should have been very freely basted while cooking. Dish the meat when browned; season and thicken the gravy, boil up and pour into a loaf.

Cream of Beet Soup.

Boil unpeeled beets until tender, scrape them, chop fine and rub through a colander and proceed as with cream of spinach soup. This is a pretty as well as a good soup.

ABANDON POSTS

END OF "EXTRAVAGANCE AND INEFFICIENCY" IS URGED IN REPORT TO CONGRESS.

BY SECRETARY STIMSON

Stations in North and South Dakota Are Among Those Condemned. —Fort Snelling "Might Be Retained."

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of War Stimson, acting upon an exhaustive report from the general staff, has decided that no less than sixteen, and probably eighteen, existing army posts should at once be abandoned "in order to put an end to the extravagance and inefficiency resulting from improper distribution of the mobile army."

The posts condemned are: Apache, Ariz.; Boise barracks, Idaho; Brady, Mich.; Clark, Texas; George Wright, Washington; Jay, New York; Lincoln, North Dakota; Logan H. Roots, Ark.; McIntosh, Texas; Mackenzie, Wyoming; Madison barracks, New York; Meade, South Dakota; Niagara, New York; Ontario, New Rork; Wayne, Mich.; Whipple barracks, Ariz.; William Henry Harrison, Mont.; and Yellowstone, Wyo. Of Fort Apache it is said a possibility of Indian trouble near this post still exists and that Fort Jay might be retained as headquarters of the eastern division and as the site of the eastern military prison.

Posts to Be Retained.

There is another formidable list of posts which, while not recommended for immediate abandonment, are declared not to be located with a view of securing economy of administration and supply, or a full measure of military effectiveness. Consequently their garrisons will not be increased and ultimately will be withdrawn to such concentration centers as congress may authorize. These posts ars: Ethan Allen, Vermont; Plattsburg barracks, New York; Robinson, Nebraska; Missoula, Montana; Logan, Colorado; Douglas, Utah; and D. A. Russell, Wyoming. The latter post is shown to have cost to date $4,925,486. It is said not to be located with a view to maximum economy or strategic effectiveness.

Special Stations to Go.

The principal object is to dispose of the present small army with distinct reference to its mission in case of war. This first involves adequate forces for foreign garrisons, which cannot be reinforced from the United States after the outbreak of hostilities. With the remainder of the army a mobile force is to be organized and distributed among about eight great strategical points in the United States instead of scattered in forty-nine posts, as now.

Two or three of these groups would be on a line between the St. Lawrence and Atlanta, covering the Atlantic seaboard; two or three groups would be on the line between Puget Sound and Los Angeles, covering the Pacific seaboard; at least two groups between the Great Lakes and the Rio Grande, serving as first reserves for either seaboard and for the development of the national guard and volunteer forces to be organized in the interior.

By the concentration of the army in eight posts, it is declared, the annual cost of maintenance of the army would be reduced about $5,500,000.

Snelling Mentioned.

Next comes a process of heavy elimination, for it is declared that probably one only of the following posts should be retained, Benjamin Harrison, Indiana; Columbus barracks, Ohio; Fort Sheridan, Illinois; Fort Des Moines, Iowa; Crook, Nebraska; Omaha, Nebraska; Leavenworth, Kansas; Riley, Kansas; Snelling, Minn.; Jefferson barracks, Missouri. Snelling and Jefferson barracks might be retained if it were decided to make them stations of all arms.

Four lucky posts recommended for retention are: Fort Sill, Oklahoma, which is peculiarly adapted for use as a school of artillery and musketry fire; Forts Bliss, Texas and Huschuca, Arizona needed as cavalry outposts for some time on the southern border, and Fort Myer, Virginia, where it probably will be necessary to retain a small garrison near the national capital for escort duty and other ceremonial purposes.

The report declares that succeeding secretaries of war have been hampered in getting rid of useless and expensive posts by local and political influences. It is declared that no less than $30,000,000 has been spent on such posts in the last ten years and every dollar so expended became an argument against their abandonment.

Washington, D. C.—The tariff revision fight opened in the house when consideration of the metal tariff bill was taken up as the first of the measures which the Democratic leaders will attempt to force through congress. Attacked by the Republican side as a departure from Democratic pledges, and as likely to be destructive to American labor and industry, the bill went through five hours of stormy debate which will be resumed again.

Replying to charges that the Democrats had abandoned the farmer by not putting agricultural machinery on the free list in the bill, Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee retorted that it was not a part of the metal schedules of the tariff.

No Protection Needed.

"The iron and steel industry does not need any protection," he said. "We have put these rates just as low as we can and still secure a fair amount of revenue for the support of the government. We are not attempting to protect the profits of the steel manufacturers any more than we would try to protect the profits of the banker, the baker or the grocer."

Representative Dalzell of Pennsylvania representing the Republican minority on the ways and means committee, demanded of the Democrats why they had not first introduced the wool revision bill. The metal shcedule he said, was cut to the bone in the Payne-Aldrich law of 1909; while the Democrats had declared that the wool tariff was the most unreasonable of all in the tariff code of the country."

Mr. Dalzell paid his compliments to another Democratic leader, Governor Woodrow Wilson. He quoted an article of Governor Wilson's which credited the majority members of the ways and means committee of the house with power to control the making of all tariff bills and the determination of what amendments, if any, would be permitted in consideration of the bill.

A crowded house listened for two hours to the opening speech by Representative Palmer of Pennsylvania, who explained the bill on behalf of the majority members of the ways and means committee.

Mr. Palmer said the measure would stimulate competition, by permitting a slight increase in imports of metal products, and would thereby somewhat lower prices. He denied it would have any effect on wages, or upon established industries in the United States.

Representative Hill of Connecticut said the placing of typewriters, linotype machines, cash registers and other patented articles on the free list, as proposed in the bill, would result in the removal of American plants to foreign soil where the goods could be made cheaper, while the patents would prevent any reduction in the selling price in the American market. Representative Palmer asserted there would not be such an outcome.

The debate was limited to speeches for the bill by Representatives Palmer, Bartlett (Georgia), and Underwood, and speeches against it by Representative Dalzell, Crumpacker, (Indiana) and Austin, (Tennessee.)

Washington, D. C.—Many Chinese laborers have foiled the United States immigration authorities within the past year, gaining admission to the country in the guise of merchants, students or teachers, according to the annual report of Daniel J. The report shows that during the last fiscal year the net gain by immigration was 512,085.

Steel Bill Passed by House.

Washington, D. C. — The steel tariff reduction bill was passed by the house on practically party lines. All attempts of the Republicans to amend the measure failed. The bill as it will go to the senate will carry an average reduction of tariff duties on all metal articles of about 35 per cent from the rates of the Payne-Aldrich law now in force. It is expected, if it becomes law, to increase imports by $25,000,000 and reduce revenues about $900,000.

LYNCH 5 REBELS

AMONG VICTIMS IS FORMER PRESIDENT OF REPUBLIC AND TWO BROTHERS.

REVOLT SNUFFED OUT

Action Follows Assassination of Executive Chosen by Troops. Disorders Began with Estrada's Death.

Guayaquil, Ecuader. — A mob broke into the Quito penitentiary in spite of a double guard and lynched Generals Elay Alfaro, Flavio Alfaro, Medardo Alfaro, Ulpiano Paez and Manuel Sorrano, all prominent revolutionists.

With the putting to death of General Elay Alfaro, ex-president of Ecuador, his brother, General Flavio Alfaro, ex-minister of war and commander-in-chief of the revolutionary forces; General Medardo Alfaro, who is believed to have been a brother of the two other Alfaros, and Generals Paez and Manuel Sorrano, the leading lights in Ecuador's latest revolution have been snuffed out.

This revolution, although it had been long brewing, began in reality a few days following the sudden death on Dec. 22 last of President Emilio Estrada.

Last Thursday at Guayaquil General Pedro Montero, who was proclaimed president of the troops after the death of Estrada, was shot and beheaded by a mob which later burned his body.

The shooting of Montero took place in the court room where the general had just been tried by court martial and sentenced to 16 years imprisonment for his connection with the revolt. The people evidently annoyed at what they considered a too light sentence, rushed into the court room and after riddling Bontero's body with bullets, dragged it into the open. Then they decapitated it, built a bonfire and threw into the flames the torso and head of the man who once was a popular hero in Ecuador.

Eloy Alfaro and Generals Paez and Montero were captured Jan. 22 at Guayaquil. Flavio Alfaro had been wounded in a battle a few days before the fall of Guayaquil. Medardo Alfaro was captured Jan. 25.

Severe fighting followed the outbreak of the revolt and continued with varying successes until Jan. 19, when the revels suffered a bad defeat at Yaguache, northeast of Guayaquil.

The Parisian singer and Pilcer were both members of the Winter Garden Company in New York early in the winter and both left the same time. Mlle. Deslys sailed for London on the Baltic on January 17, and Pilver was a passenger on the same steamship.

M. W. A. INCREASE RATES

MEASURE CARRIED HEAD CAMP BY A 460 TO 207 VOTE.

New Plan Increases Assessments of Members Under 54, 50 to 100 Per Cent.

Chicago, Ill.—The head camp of the Modern Woodmen of America adopted the proposed readjustment plan, increasing the life insurance rates of the society, and closed the adjourned regular meeting here. The measure was carried by a vote of 460 to 207.

The re-rating proposal was made by the head officers after notice from 16 states that they had adopted a uniform fraternal insurance bill which had been drafted by state insurance experts at Mobile, Ala., and thereafter known as the Mobile bill. This notice warned the society that certain requirements would be made before a continuation of business would be permitted.

Figures showing the condition of the society were prepared by head officers and the statement was made that in 1914, under present plans, the lodge would be unable to pay $300,000,000 of its liabilities, or about $535 of a $1,000 policy. State insurance commissioners spoke for the measure, which was opposed by many speakers as a plan not in accord with fraternal insurance ideals.

The plan adopted which will be in force after one year, will increase rates of members under 54 years old by from 50 to 100 per cent. Members over 54 may not be assessed more than $3 each assessment for each $1,000 and not more than 12 assessments and one special assessment may be made each year. If the $3 is more than the member can pay he may pay $2 and the other dollar will be deducted from the face of his policy.

Kansas May Secede.

Kansas City.—The Modern Woodmen of America in Kansas are threatening to secede from the order, on account of the increase in insurance rates made at the convention in Chicago. There are 1,000 members of the order in Kansas.

A meeting to discuss the situation will be held in Kansas City, Kas., next Friday night.

FOR A SPECIAL SESSION

Speaker Ingram Says Black River Falls Situation Is Acute.

Madison, Wisconsin. — Following a long conference with Governor McGovern, Speaker Ingram said the situation at Black River Falls is much more acute than press reports have indicated. He did not know whether the governor would call a special session of the legislature, he said, but personally he believed the exigencies of the situation demand such action.

PLACE BLAME FOR WRECK

Operator, Flagman and Railroad Company Held Liable.

Centralia, Illinois. — The coroner's jury, inquiring into the Illinois Central wreck at Kinmundy, Ill., brought in a verdict placing the blame for the death of J. T. Harahan and three others upon Henry Schneiderjohn, operator at Edgewood, and Harry J. Broecker, flagman on train No. 25. The jury also found that the railroad company erred in permitting trains to run so close together.

Canada Seeks Preference.

Ottawa, Ontario. — Delegates from most of the British West Indies, will arrive in Ottawa on March 27, to confer with the Canadian government on proposals for closer trade relations between the dominion and the island. A similar conference with commissioners from Australia is now being arranged. According to figures prepared here a small preference given to Australia by Canada over the United States would, in a few years, increase trade with Australia from $1,000,000 or less to about $10,000,000.

DARROW INDICTED

LABOR ATTORNEY WHO CONDUCTED McNAMARA CASE TO STAND TRIAL.

RELEASED ON $20,000 BAIL

Knew of Impeding Accusations.—Denies He Had Any Knowledge of Attempts to Influence Jurors.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Two months of uncertainty and suspension ended for Clarence S. Darrow, the noted union labor attorney, when the county grand jury, which for four weeks has been investigating allegations of corruption in connection with the trial jury in the McNamara dynamiting case, returned two indictments charging him with bribery.

Two of the counts charge Darrow with the bribery and attempted bribery and attempted corruption of Robert Bain, the first juror sworn to try James B. McNamara. The remaining counts allege the bribery and corruption of George N. Lockwood, a venireman summoned in the McNamara case.

Bert Franklin, the detective who actually passed the bribe money to Bain and Lockwood, is accused of the same offenses in information filed some time ago in the superior court and his trial has been set for Feb. 27.

The maximum penalty that could be imposed upon Darrow for conviction on all counts is 30 years' imprisonment and fines aggregating $10,000. He is under $20,000 bail.

Knew of Charges.

Darrow had several days' notice of the impending accusations and he retained Earl Rogers, an attorney who directed the first work of unearthing evidence against the Times building dynamiters and who later, as a special prosecutor, had charge of the grand jury investigation which resulted in the filing of the first dynamite indictment against Bryce (James B. McNamara), Schmidt and Caplan last year. Judge C. F. McNutt, formerly of the Indiana superior bench, and associate counsel in the McNamara defense, also was retained by Darrow. Mrs. Lecomto Davis, wife of one of Darrow's associates in the McNamara case, and Col. Charles S. Young, a friend of the accused lawyer, supplied the bail fixed by Judge N. P. Conrey, who sat for Presiding Judge George H. Hutton.

DUKE OF FIFE IS DEAD

Brother-in-Law of King George Passes Away in Egypt.

London, England.—The Duke of Fife brother-in-law of King George V of Great Britain, died at Asewan, Egypt.

The tragic end of the Duke of Fife's ill-starred voyage to attend the consecration of the cathedral at Khartum, erected as a memorial to General Gordon, was a startling surprise to the British public. Although he showed no effects of his experience in the wreck of the steamship Delhi on his arrival in Egypt, the duke's exposure and shock resulting from that event, he contracted a chill at Wadi-Halfa, in the Egyptian Sudan, a week ago and was unable to proceed. The deepest sympathy is everywhere expressed for the princess royal, who accompanied her husband to Egypt.

The Duke of Fife was one of the pioneers with Cecil Rhodes in the early history of South Africa. He was greatly liked for his public spirit and his philanthropic and other useful work for the country.

STREET CAR COLLISION.

In St. Paul, Results in the Injury of Twenty Persons.

Motorman Swanson said that the air brakes refused to work. The only other serious collision the local system ever had occurred at the same spot 24 years ago this month.

URGES NEEDS OF PUBLIC DOMAIN

Immediate Legislation Is Imperative, Says the President.

ASKS NEW LAWS FOR ALASKA

Rules Governing Acquisition of Arid or Semi-Arid Lands Should Be Modified—Commission on Cost of Living.

Washington, Feb. 2.—A special message on the work of the interior department and other matters was read to Congress today.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

There is no branch of the Federal jurisdiction which calls more imperatively for immediate legislation than that which concerns the public domain, and especially the part of that domain which is in Alaska.

The progress under the reclamation act has made clear the defects of its limitations, which should be remedied. The rules governing the acquisition of homesteads, of land that is not arid or semi-arid, are not well adapted to the perfecting of title to land made arable by government reclamation work.

I concur with the Secretary of the Interior in his recommendation that, after entry is made upon land being reclaimed, actual occupation as a homestead of the same be not required until two years after entry, but that cultivation of the same shall be required, and that the present provision under which the land is to be paid for in ten annual installments shall be so modified as to allow a patent issue for the land at the end of five years' cultivation and three years' occupation, with a reservation of a government lien for the amount of the unpaid purchase money. This leniency to the reclamation homesteader will relieve him from occupation at a time when the condition of the land makes it most burdensome and difficult, and at the end of five years will furnish him with a title upon which he can borrow money and continue the improvement of his holding.

I also concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior that all of our public domain should be classified and that each class should be disposed of or administered in the manner most appropriate to that particular class.

Leasing of Government Lands.

The chief change, however, which ought to be made, and which I have already recommended in previous messages and communications to congress, is that by which government coal land and phosphate and other mineral lands containing non-metalliferous minerals, shall be leased by the government, with restrictions as to size and time, resembling those which now obtain throughout the country between the owners in fee and the lessees who work the mines, and in leases like those which have been most successful in Australia, New Zealand, and Nova Scotia. The showing made by investigations into the successful working of the leasing system leaves no doubt as to its wisdom and practical utility. Requirements as to the working of the mine during the term may be so framed as to prevent any holding of large mining properties merely for speculation, while the royalties may be made sufficiently low, not unduly to increase the cost of the coal mined, and at the same time sufficient to furnish a reasonable income for the use of the public in the community where the mining goes on. In Alaska, there is no reason why a substantial income should not thus be raised for such public works as may be deemed necessary or useful.

Would Build Trunk Line Railroad.

I am not in favor of government ownership where the same certainty and efficiency of service can be had by private enterprise, but I think the conditions presented in Alaska are of such a character as to warrant the government, for the purpose of encouraging the development of that vast and remarkable territory, to build and own a trunk line railroad, which it can lease on terms which may be varied and changed to meet the growing prosperity and development of the territory.

I have already recommended to Congress the establishment of a form of commission government for Alaska. The territory is too extended, its needs are too varied, and its distance from Washington too remote to enable Congress to keep up with its necessities in the matter of legislation of a local character.

The governor of Alaska in his report points out certain laws that ought to be adopted, and emphasizes what I have said as to the immediate need for a government of much wider powers than now exists there, if it can be said to have any government at all.

Lower Colorado River.

There is transmitted herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior setting out the work done under joint resolution approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the expenditure of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to be expended by the President for the purpose of protecting lands and property in the Imperial valley and elsewhere along the Colorado river in Arizona. The money was expended and the protective works erected, but the disturbances in Mexico so delayed the work, and the floods in the Colorado river were so extensive that a part of the works have been carried away, and the need for further action and expenditure of money exists.

Water-Power Sites.

In previous communications to Congress I have pointed out two methods by which the water-power sites on non-navigable streams may be controlled as between the state and the national government. It has seemed wise that the control should be concentrated in one government or the other as the active participant in supervising its use by private enterprise.

The Secretary of the Interior has suggested another method by which the water-power site shall be leased directly by the government to those who exercise a public franchise under provisions imposing a rental for the water power to create a fund to be expended by the general government for the improvement of the stream and the benefit of the local community where the power site is, and permitting the state to regulate the rates at which the converted power is sold. The latter method suggested by the Secretary is a more direct method for Federal control, and in view of the probable union and systematic organization and welding together of the power derived from water within a radius of 300 or 400 miles, I think it better that the power of control should remain in the national government than that it should be turned over to the states. Under such a system the Federal government would have such direct supervision of the whole matter that any honest administration could easily prevent the abuses which a monopoly of absolute ownership in private persons or companies would make possible.

For some years past the high and steadily increasing cost of living has been a matter of such grave public concern that I deem it of great public interest that an international conference be proposed at this time for the purpose of preparing plans, to be submitted to the various governments, for an international inquiry into the high cost of living, its extent, causes, effects, and possible remedies. I therefore recommend that, to enable the president to invite foreign governments to such a conference, to be held at Washington or elsewhere, the congress provide an appropriation, not to exceed $20,000, to defray the expenses of preparation and of participation by the United States.

Commission on Industrial Relations.

The extraordinary growth of industry in the past two decades and its revolutionary changes have raised new and vital questions as to the relations between employers and wage earners which have become matters of pressing public concern. Industrial relations concern the public for a double reason. We are directly interested in the maintenance of peaceful and stable industrial conditions for the sake of our own comfort and well-being; but society is equally interested, in its effectively civic capacity, in seeing that our institutions are effectively maintaining justice and fair dealing between any classes of citizens whose economic interests may seem to clash.

The magniture and complexity of modern industrial disputes have put upon some of our statutes and our presen mechanism for adjusting such differences—where we can be said to have any mechanism at all—a strain they were never intended to bear and for which they are unsuited. What is urgently needed to day is a re-exami-

Misbranding Imported Goods.

My attention has been called to the injustice which is done in this country by the sale of article in the trade purporting to be made in Ireland, when they are not so made, and it is suggested that the justice of the enactment of a law which, so far as the jurisdiction of the federal government can go, would prevent a continuance of this misrepresentation to the public and fraud upon those who are entitled to use the statement in the sale of their goods. I think it to be greatly in the interest of fair dealing, which ought always to be encouraged by law, for congress to enact a law making it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to use the mails or to put into interstate commerce any articles of merchandise which bear upon their face a statement that they have been manufactured in some particular country when the fact is otherwise.

Delicate Criticism.

A woman well known in New York for her exquisite taste as well as knowledge of the decorative and architectural history of the world called on the wife of a multi-millionaire who had recently built and furnished a Fifth avenue mansion at great cost.

"This," said the hostess proudly, as she threw open a heavy door, "is my Louis Quatorze room." The visitor gazed about her for a moment and then made answer: "What makes you think so?"

Saved.

"Dearest," she asked, taking advantage of the fact that it was leap year, "will you be mine?"

For a moment the young man feared that he was up against it. Then, struck by a happy thought, he replied: "You will have to ask mother."

Reply in Kind.

"If you had a leap year proposal from a pretty girl, what would you do?"

"I'd jump at it."

DULUTH IS CALLED LOSER

SAYS TWIN CITIES BENEFITS BY LAKE AND GRAIN RATES.

Minneapolis, Not Being Ready to Testify, Secures Adjournment to Washington.

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 27.—At the resumption of testimony in the lake-and-rail case before Commissioner James Harlan before the interstate commerce commission, G. Roy Hall, traffic expert for the traffic commission of the Duluth Commercial club, submitted data intended to prove that the natural head of the lakes commercially had been moved 150 miles inland to Minneapolis and St. Paul. Duluth, he alleged, had been discriminated against by a 15c differential "since the building of the first railroad into this territory"—the old Lake Superior & Mississippi railroad which was organized, he inferred, by Minneapolis capital, and defaulted in 1875. This line made the 15c differential and it has come down that way to the present time, he stated.

Because of this 15c differential Minneapolis and St. Paul have had an enormous commercial advantage over Duluth, he continued. Because this condition has existed for many years, Mr. Hall went on, there seemed no reason why it should continue.

He attacked the "free storage of freight in railroad warehouses which has become an institution" and asked that the custom be abolished.

"The city of Duluth asks the commission to ignore the cry of the railroads, the boat lines, and the Twin City jobbers of 'Let Us Alone,'" he said.

"The whole scheme of lake-and-rail rates is fictitious," he averred.

Duluth's case was brought to an end yesterday. Summed up it is that the whole structure of lake-and-rail rates is discriminating against Duluth and preferential to the Twin Cities.

Subpoenas are out for rate men of western railroads, but they have not been found.

The hearing was adjourned until Feb. 16, at Washington.

Duluth had submitted its testimony and had presented its exhibits when Minneapolis, claiming they were not ready, asked for an adjournment.

Commissioner Harlan then stated that if the case were not of such vital importance he would demand that the Minneapolis testimony be put in here and now, but that he believed the commerce commission would not want him to force such an issue. Therefore, he adjourned the hearing until Feb. 16 at Washington, when Minneapolis will give its testimony.

ARRESTED IN WINONA

Martin Lehane Charged With Robbing Mail Pouch.

Winona.—Martin Lehane, a fugitive for three weeks, who was wanted by the local police and federal inspectors in connection with the theft of a mail pouch at the St. Paul railway station here, was arrested at his home after making a desperate attempt to escape.

Lehane left the city immediately after the disappearance of the mail bag, beat his way to St. Paul and thence to Chicago. He has had a severe experience during the recent cold weather. His feet and hands are frozen. Lehane returned to the home of his parents tonight and a short time later the residence was surrounded by the police. When he dashed from the house he was subdued and taken to the station. The police believe he will be able to explain the disappearance of the valuable mail bag from the station platform, although he denies all knowledge of the theft.

AGENT ATTACKED

E. B. LINNEN, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT OFFICER, SAYS RED MEN VICTIMIZED.

SEVERAL ARE ABSENT

Congressman Mondell Would Resign From Sub-Committee Now Here—Favoritism Charged to Simon Michelet While Agent.

Minneapolis, Minn. — The tempo- Minneapolis, Jan. 27.—The temporary absence of several witnesses who are wanted by the representatives of the department of justice for testimony relating to the four township timber sales at Crookston in 1900 and the alleged combine of bidders there, gave a new turn to the department's case at the Indian hearing before the congressional investigating committee.

The department representatives undertook to show that congressional legislation since 1900 had in its chronological order given lumber interests an opportunity to increase their grasp on reservation timber.

That it gave opportunity for unfair treatment of a part of the Indians on the reservation was a supposition advanced and supported by a report of Edward B. Linnen, an interior department officer, which had never before been made public.

In the report old charges were revived against Simon Michelet, former agent of the White Earth reservation. Gus Beaulieu and Ben Fairbanks were declared to have failed to discriminate between mixed and full bloods in making purchases of timber, and other employes of the agency were charged with questionable practices. J. E. Perrault and J. T. Van Metre being named.

Charges Against Michelet.

The charges against Michelet were that he had favored Indians, whom the report did not name, in the allotment of the additional 80-acre tracts under the Steenerson act; that he had sold a government lot on the reservation on which a reservation was situated for $35; had sold copies of government records and made copies of tract books showing all lands and allotments on the reservation; and that he had allotted the government saw mill reserve on the reservation to favored individuals.

Voluminous correspondence between officers and men of the reservation and officials of the department of the interior was read to show the course of action taken by the department and its inspectors with regard to the reservation scandals, particularly the charges of favoritism to individual Indians in the making of allotments following the Stenerson act. A report by Inspector James McLaughlin to the secretary of the interior commending the conduct of Michelet at the time of the sale of timber under the Steenerson act, was read by Mr. O'Brien. Mr. Burch said after the hearing that an endeavor would be made to impeach the report.

Mr. Graham made public a letter from Representative Frank W. Mondell of Wyoming, in which his resignation from the sub-committee sitting in Minneapolis was offered. Mr. Graham replied that he had not the power to accept the resignation, but must leave it to the entire committee.

Michelet Denies Charges.

Simon Michelet was disinclined to discuss at length the statements made in the investigation, pending a completion of the hearing, except to enter an emphatic denial.

"I don't know that I care to discuss the matter," he said. "It is easy, by insinuation, to bring men's names into a case, and in such a way that a reflection is conveyed. There appears to be a disposition to drag in everybody and everything in order to make up a case, regardless of whether the statements can be substantiated or not. So far as I am concerned, the records show for themselves. When the testimony is all in, it will be clear there is nothing to these insinuations."

OUT OF PEN—IN JAIL

Former Stillwater Inmate Held at East Grand Forks for Fraud.

East Grand Forks.—Although free from the Stillwater penitentiary less than two weeks, Albert Parsons is again in jail here and faces another term, the charge against him being that of obtaining money under false pretenses. Parsons is accused of operating a telephone game, extracting money from several East Grand Forks business men by using the names of prominent farmers in the district, asking them to give Parsons a small amount of cash and that they would pay the amount back when they came into the city. Between ten and fifteen are said to have been fleeced in this manner.

Parsons served the penitentiary sentence for forgery, and was convicted in this county.

Fire Routs Fifty Families.

Minneapolis. — Fifty families fled from a three-story brick tenement on Nicollet Island, when a fire broke out in the basement flat of Rev. Mr. Lewis. Women seized their children and many, half dressed, in the midst of the afternoon toilet, ran into the street. Smoke poured through the windows and up the stairs, filling the entire building. Spontaneous combustion in a pile of coal and wood in the basement started the fire. The fire department extinguished the flames before any damage was done.

MANY PRETTY GIRLS

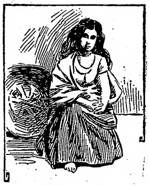
Mexican Town Has 3,000 of Them and Only 500 Men.

Although Amazonian in Tendencies and Assume All Hardships, There Are Many Beautiful Young Ladies Among Them.

Mexico City.—There is a town in Southern Mexico which boasts 3,000 women and but 500 men. Not only this but the women have the reputation of being the prettiest in the world. They are not only pretty but they are Amazonian in their tendencies and assume all the hardships of life as well as the responsibility of finance and municipal government. In fact this south Mexican town, Tehuantepec by name, is the place of them all most dominated by the influence of woman, yet the region in which most deference is paid to man. The cause of all of which being the discrepancy in the numbers of the two sexes.

Tehuantepec is on the isthmus of the same name at the point where Mexico is narrowest just above Yucatan. The town is at the highest point where the waters of the Atlantic are separated from those of the Pacific. It is an Indian town and its inhabitants were living comfortably here when Europe knew not of the existence of America. They are a handsome, clean, intelligent, prosperous people who today lead lives that might be envied by the effete in the cities that are termed most civilized.

The first impression of the tourist is the beauty of the women. Near the station of the railway that was two years ago completed across this isthmus, is the market place in the center of the town. Here are the women selling their goods. No man is to be seen. About the market place are stores and in these also woman is supreme. It is impossible to find a man about the place engaged in any sort of activity. The women think too much of the men to allow them to work.



A Tehuana Belle.

It is because of tribal wars and the cruelty of the Diaz regime that the men of the tribe are almost extinct.

DEATH COMES TO SEEKER

Man Who Asked Permit to Kill His Wife and Family Dies Soon After Getting Work.

Louisville, Ky.—Death which he so eagerly sought a few weeks ago while out of work came unexpectedly to John M. McCord the other day when he was killed at one of the barns of the Louisville Street Railway company, where he had secured employment only a few days ago.

A few weeks ago McCord walked into the office of Prosecuting Attorney Harry Robinson of the police court and startled that official by asking to be given a permit to kill his wife and three children and end his own life.

He said he has been without work for a number of months and that his family was in destitute circumstances.

Having tried in vain to secure work, McCord said he had concluded to kill his family and then end his own life, but he did not wish to break any law in so doing and desired to know if he could not secure a permit that would legalize the act.

McCord was placed in custody, but was later released after the authorities had investigated conditions at the man's home and supplied the immediate wants of his family.

A few days ago McCord secured employment washing cars in one of the barns of the Louisville Street Railway company. Yesterday afternoon he was struck by a car backing into the barn and knocked into a repair pit, receiving injuries that resulted in death a few minutes later.

Barber's Posthumous Joke.

Elizabeth, N. J.—The champion wit of Elizabeth, even while dying, planned a joke which he could spring in death.

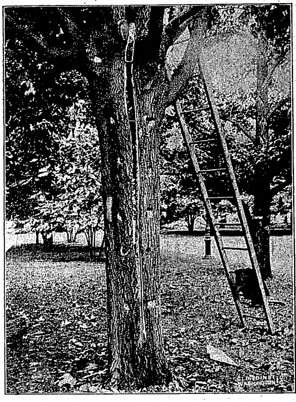
He was George Selperi, an Italian-American, and for many years conducted a barber shop at 432 Front street. His original sayings attracted much patronage and he was reputed as being wealthy.

Selperi's last request was that a silver plate bearing an inscription be placed on the top of his coffin. When his many friends gathered to pay their last respects they did not know whether to be amused or shocked when they read the inscription:

It said: "You're next."

Things Queer and Curious

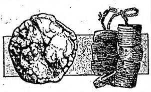
Work of the Tree Surgeons



Up to date methods are being employed in and about Washington to save from decay and death the handsome trees of the capital city. The government's expert tree surgeons fill with cement the cavities in the trunks and have been successful in presrving a number of trees that were planted by presidents of the United States in years long past.

CURIOUS FOREIGN BREADS

Two curious breads, one Turkish and the other Japanese, the first delicious and the second not recommended, are shown in the accompanying illustration from Popular Mechanics. The Turkish bread, which is "oven-flopped" and is shaped like certain kinds of American biscuits, is claimed to have an exquisite, appetizing, grain-like flavor, found very seldom in American breads. In making it the baker takes a piece of dough, deftly whirls it around atop his finger for a moment to give it a pancake form, then throws it "flop" into the oven against one of the heated walls. It adheres there for a moment, bakes, expands, drops automatically onto its other side on the oven floor, and, just as it is browning nicely, is dragged out at the moment another is "flopped" in. The time consumed in the baking is about two minutes. The Japanese bread, strung on a string like buttons or Chinese money, is much used with tea drinking and in soups.



MILLION PIECES IN TABLE

A table made up of 1,000,000 pieces of wood, inlaid on a foundation of white pine, required one year for S. P. Wood, of Joplin, Mo., to construct, and won a blue ribbon at the Interstate exposition. More than a score of native and foreign woods went into its makeup, the outside surface being a design colored by bits of varicolored woods, some of which were not more than a sixteenth of an inch long. It has been estimated that at least 1,000,000 pieces were required for the table. Several blocks in the top which caused speculation as to the kind of wood used were made of shavings of many blocks. Wood never took a lesson in inlaid work. He has been a carpenter all his life. Another small table containing, a specimen box for ores of the district, is also an interesting curiosity. On the front is a picture of a canoe being propelled by a man. All colors are natural woods, the man's fingers being each a separate piece.

CAMERA PROTECTS VAULT

Besides the usual burglar alarms that protect bank vaults a snapshot camera has been introduced. Automatically it will take the burglar's picture as he looked while in the act. The flashlight photograph will both serve to identify the man and furnish evidence of his guilt.

UNWILLINGLY RIDES A DEER

Roy Hansbury, while hunting in Northern Wisconsin, wounded a deer, but it got onto its feet while Hansbury was astride of it and a wild ride began that continued until the hunter was dislodged.

SOME STRANGE TIMEKEEPERS

To ascertain the time at night the Apache Indians employed a gourd on which the stars of the heavens were marked. As the constellations rose in the sky, the Indian referred to his gourd and found out the hour. By turning the gourd around he could tell the order in which the constellations might be expected to appear.

The hill people of Assam reckon time and distance by the number of quids of betel nuts chewed. It will be remembered how, according to Washington Irving, the Dutch colonial assembly was invariably dismissed at the last puff of the third pipe of tobacco of Governor Wouter Van Twiller.

A Montagnis Indian of Canada will set up a tall stick in the snow when traveling ahead of friends who are to follow. He marks with his foot the line of shadow cast, and by the change in the angle of the shadow the oncoming party can tell, on arriving at the spot, about how far ahead the leader is.—Harper's Weekly.

MUSIC AND LONGEVITY

A Dr. Roggers has been studying the effect of wind instruments on the life of musicians. The average life of the wind instrument artist is 63, while that of others is 62. Thirty-four per cent. of the former category attain 70 years. Performers on the flute in Dr. Roggers' "echelle de longevite" reach on the average the age of 61, while the hautbois executant lives two years longer. Buglers go two years better, and the clarinet player lives till he is 65. He of the cornet only fails the allotted span by one year. The ophicleide artist beats them all. His time of life is from 75 to 80. There should be no hesitation after this.

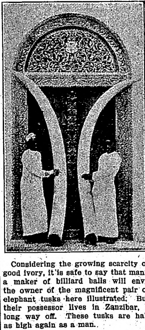
GODDESS OF FREEDOM'S PAL

Al Porch, the old rigger at the capitol building in Washington, is the most intimate associate of her majesty, the Goddess of Freedom, who stands upon the very dome of this building, which harbors the national congress. There are electric wires to be rigged on the bonnet of the goddess and occasionally she is to be given a bath and a coat of paint. When these necessities arise it is Al Porch who is sent aloft to meet this difficult situation. This mounting into the very presence of Freedom is no mean task. Rarely is it accomplished in any other method than that of scaling ladders. For 60 feet before the top of the statue is reached the ascent must be made on the outside ladders. This is true when anyone but Al Porch makes the ascent. But the rigger has long made the very pinnacle of the capitol his playground. He has practically lived here for 43 years. The upper dome of the capitol has come to be a passion with him. A spry little man of 64, he runs about these great heights as ordinary men walk about the streets. He is to the capitol what the famous hunchback was to Notre Dame. Once he fell from a position at the foot of the goddess and was dashed from projection to projection down the statue base. Altogether he fell 50 feet and with one arm broken, clung with his legs dangling over the abyss below, which would have meant certain death if his hold had given way. Yet later he climbed one after another of the pillars that support the statue in an attempt to capture an escaped canary birl, and finally succeeded. Many times since he has scaled the statue to its very top without the help of a ladder. He does this by working himself into the folds of the garments of Freedom and so braces himself as to get inexplicable holds.

BEES MAKE GREEN HONEY

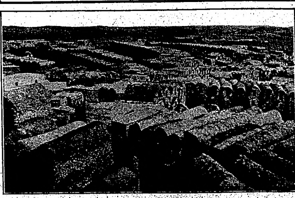
Bees that make honey as green as pistachio ice cream have been discovered operating from the biological laboratory of the College of the City of New York. Amateur sluething has failed to track the bees to the source of their green coloring matter. The bees are branded with a red spot upon their backs and another red spot upon their breasts, and all students who see any of these red spotted bees are to rush to the biology department with the news, giving the exact spot at which the bee was discovered.

MAGNIFICENT PAIR OF TUSKS



Considering the growing scarcity of good ivory, it is safe to say that many a maker of billiard balls will envy the owner of the magnificent pair of elephant tusks here illustrated. But their possessor lives in Zanzibar, a long way off. These tusks are half as high again as a man.

Troglodytes of Tunisia



Back in the mountain ranges of Tunisia are various tribes of "troglodytes" or cave-dwellers, living today about the same as did their ancestors many centuries ago. A typical town of these people is Medenine, which consists of thousands of cave-shaped dwellings, made of native cement and stone, superposed upon each other to the height of four or five stories. The Arab name for these curious houses is "rhorfa." Medenine acts as a high storehouse for about 20,000 people, semi-nomads, living in the great plains, people of the tribes of Ourghamma. The town has been built in great ovals or horseshoes, each tribe or district to itself to prevent stealing. Armed men guard these precincts.

IN LEISURE MOMENTS

DESIGNING OLD BEDSPREADS IS THE LATEST FAD.

Two Ideas That Are Both Popular and Effective Are in Strip or the Diamond Design of Twine or Monk's Cloth.

Young girls have found a way to keep their nimble fingers busy in the making of rather odd bedspreads, appropriate mostly for the rooms of bachelor brothers, friends or even uncles.

Of these new bedspreads there are two kinds—those made of twine and those made of monk's cloth. Both are popular and effective. It is a matter of taste with a young girl whether she wishes to crochet a twine bedspread or to sew together and roughly embroider one of monk's cloth.

The twine bedspreads have taken the place in the working of neckties for crochet work. Happily they are not all made in one piece, but of many small squares or diamonds, according to the design, which are sewn together later. It is therefore an easy matter to carry about in the workbag one or two pieces in process of making and to take them out whenever an opportunity offers for a little light crocheting.

The so-called twine used for these bedspreads comes in large balls like those of ordinary twine, and can be purchased at either fancy or department shops. The needle should be of a size that handles well the particular thickness of twine necessary for the selected design.

Some girls are making these bedspreads in strips after designs long known in connection with afghans, and prefer them to the those that are made out of numbers of small squares or diamonds. The strip design gets rid of the labor of sewing the many small pieces together. It is also equally pretty. The designs made in small squares or diamonds are really more elegant, for they follow patterns suggestive of cluny lace and are done with finer twine than those in strips. They are more for the young girl's own bedroom than for that of the bachelor brother. The successful note about such work is that it produces an immediate stylish effect. And once made such bedspreads last forever.

Beef Roll.

Chop two pounds of lean beef very fine; chop and pound in a mortar half a pound of fat bacon and mix it with the beef. Season with pepper and salt (it will not require much salt), a small nutmeg, the grated rind of a lemon, the juice of a quarter of it, a heaping tablespoonful of parsley minced fine, or it can be seasoned with an additional tablespoonful of onion, or no onion or parsley, but with summer savory or thyme. Bind all these together with two eggs. Form them into a roll, surround the roll with buttered paper, which tie securely around it. Then cover it with a paste made of flour and water. Bake two hours. Remove the paper and crust. Serve it hot with tomato sauce or brown gravy.

Honey Loaf Cake.

Cream half a cup of butter; then add one-half cupful of sifted granulated sugar and one-half cupful of strained clover honey and cream again. At this point stir in two eggs without separating and beat until the mixture is creamy and lemon color; then add one pint of flour, in which sift one rounding teaspoonful of baking powder and one teaspoonful of caraway seeds; pour into a greased shallow loaf pan and bake in a moderate oven for about twenty-five minutes.

Jerusalem Artichoke Soup.

Three slices of lean bacon or ham, half head of celery, one turnip, one onion, six artichokes, one tablespoonful butter, one quart boiling milk, salt and cayenne pepper to taste. Put the bacon and vegetables, which should be cut in thin slices, in a stew pan with butter; cover with water and let them stew gently to a smooth pulp; strain through colander; then add the boiling milk with seasoning. Serve with square of leavened bread.

Mock Bisque Soup.

Mix to a smooth paste one tablespon of flour with two heaping tablespoons of butter, add one quart of boiling milk, a little at a time to prevent lumping. Stew one can of tomatoes until they can be strained easily and, if very acid, use one-half teaspoon of soda; pour into the thickened milk, seasoning with salt and pepper and serve very hot.

Stuffed Prunes.

Children will eat these when they do not care for the sauce. Take the prunes, wash and soak over night. Use the same water and simmer until tender, letting most of it boil away. When prunes are cold remove stone and put in half a walnut, then roll in granulated sugar and set away on platter until dry. Nice for lunch.

Cake-Making Hint.

After getting the ingredients together, before mixing the cake, warm the bowl by pouring into it boiling water. Let stand a few minutes, then pour out and dry. It must be warm enough to soften, but not melt the butter.

BURN BUILDING TO KILL GERM

Only Way to Get Rid of Them, and Occasion Was Made a Good Object Leseson.

A ramshackle building in Winston-Salem was recently burned at the request of the local Anti-Tuberculosis league, because it was said to be alive with tuberculosis germs and could not be properely fumigataed.

For days before the building was burned huge placards announcing the hour of destruction were hung about in prominent places. Among other things the placards said: "Within the past 15 months two men who sold fruit, etc., here have died of tuberculosis, but unconsciously left millions of tuberculosis germs by careless spitting. The building is so open that it cannot be effectively fumigated. The only practical means of dsinfecting is by fire."

At the appointed hour, while millions of tuberculosis germs were being burned, 5,000 pamphlets telling how to prevent consumption, were distributed to the crowd looking on.

Real Woman-Hater.

A will of a confirmed woman-hater, writes Virgil M. Harris in "Ancient Curios and Famous Wills," is that of a rich old bachelor who had endured much from attempts made by his family to put him under the yoke of matrimony, and who wrote: "I beg that my executors will see that I am buried where there is no woman interred, either to the right or to the left of me. Should this not be practicable in the ordinary course of things, I direct that they purchase three graves, and bury me in the middle one of the three, leaving the two others unoccupied."

Cremation Among the Franks.

An interesting archaeological discovery was made lately near Brecht (Belgium), where the remains of what was evidently a Frankish cemetery have been found. The main interest in the discovery lies in the fact that clear traces are to be seen in the cemetery of cremated remains, as well as of bodies buried in the ordinary way, whereas hitherto it has always been believed that cremation was not practiced amongst the Franks.

GRAND TO LIVE

And the Last Laugh Is Always the Best

"Six months ago I would have laughed at the idea that there could be anything better for a table beverage than coffee," writes an Ohio woman, "now I laugh to know there is.

"Since childhood I drank coffee freely as did the other members of the family. The result was a puny, sickly girl; and as I grew into womanhood I did not gain in health, but was afflicted with heart trouble, a weak and disordered stomach, wrecked nerves and a general breaking down till last winter, at the age of 38, I seemed to be on the verge of consumption.

"My friends greeted me with 'How bad you look! What a terrible color!' and this was not very comforting.

"The doctors and patent medicines did me absolutely no good. I was thoroughly discouraged.

"Then I gave up coffee and commenced Postum. At first I didn't like it, but after a few trials and following the directions exactly, it was grand. It was refreshing and satisfying. In a couple of weeks I noticed a great change.

"I became stronger, my brain grew clearer, I was not troubled with forgetfulness as in coffee times, my power of endurance was more than doubled.

"The heart trouble and indigestion disappeared and my nerves became steady and strong.

"I began to take an interest in things about me. Housework and homemaking became a pleasure. My friends have marveled at the change and when they enquire what brought it about I answer 'Postum, and nothing else in the world.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

PAPER BAG COOKING

WONDER-WORKING SYSTEM PERFECTED BY M. SOYER, WORLD'S GREATEST LIVING CHEF

INSURES ECONOMY OF FUEL.

By Martha McCulloch Williams.

Paper bag cooking economizes fuel—the fact is demonstrable, beyond a doubt. Particularly if the fuel is gas. The figures to follow are given for gas, but are easy of translation into coal heat or even oil.

The oven of a gas range turned on full, burns twenty feet of gas an hour for each flame-bar. Commonly there are two bars—thus, the hourly consumption at full head is forty feet. The giant burner on top likewise, at full head, consumes twenty feet an hour, the small burners, each ten feet. Thus a stove in full commission for pot and pan cooking consumes ninety feet an hour.

Now, for paper bag cooking the oven must be lighted and turned on full for eight minutes before anything goes into it; it must also burn full strength forseven minutes longer. Thus, it consumes ten feet of gas at the outset. Turning out one burner to reduce the heat one-half at the end of the seven minute period reduces consumption to fifteen feet for the rest of the hour, making a total of twenty-five feet against forty. But roasting does not demand that a burner goes full—turning it down might save five feet in the hour. Thus the net hour-saving of gas on the oven account is ten feet.

But there are other accounts. By help of paper bags, you can not merely roast in the oven, but cook at the same time a couple of vegetables and bake a pie or pudding. With a small roast you may even cook three vegetables, thereby leaving unlighted three upper jets, which would mean a saving of thirty feet of gas an hour.

Cooking thus solely in the oven means a saving of fifty feet of gas an hour.

Nor is this even all the story. Mysteriously, things cook more quickly in bags than out of them. The saving in time is one-fifth to one-sixth. Putting this at the lowest, and estimating the whole range consumption of gas at ninety feet, there is a saving of fifteen feet. Add them to the fifty feet already in credit, and the sum is flattering, indeed, to the paper bag.

A Little Story of Pie Baking.

I had baked a pie a la Soyer and found it good. Notwithstanding, I resolved to show myself exactly the worth of the bag-cooking.

I made up puff paste enough for three pies, rolled out the crusts and filled a pan, using cooked fresh peaches for a filling. I put it on to cook, in its naked majesty, noting the time accurately. It took ten minutes to roll crusts, fill, and put in a greased bag the second pie. The oven was so hot by that time that I slacked the heat a minute after putting in pie number two. After twenty minutes—thirty minutes from putting in the first pie—I looked in the oven. The naked pie was cooking creditably enough, yet was pale-faced, and the crust still dentable to the touch. Further, there were bubbles of syrup along sundry spaces of the edge.

I turned on a little more heat and left the two pies to cook fifteen minutes longer. The naked one was then a pale, delicate brown on top, with rather a hard undercrust. The bag was brown all over and so crisp the corners crumbled at the touch. But from it came a pie beautiful to behold—light, not pale brown, crisp and flaky as to crust, ready to leave the pan at the first tilt, for a plate.

GETS THE GOOD OUT OF FOOD.

Eating serves a double purpose—the giving of pleasure, the keeping up of strength. Ill-cooked food reduces both to a minimum—hence the proverb: "God sends meat and the devil sends cooks." Possibly his satanic majesty now and again nods. It must have been in such a somnolent interval that he let M. Soyer's system of paper bag cooking get by him. For unquestionably it is in the way of reducing ill-cooking at least one-half. Thereby it will help to feed fat all the nations of the earth.

The use of cooking is to change the nature of food substances, making them at once better tasting and more digestible. Heat works by developing flavors and transforming substances. Its most important office is, however, to break down fiber, animal and vegetable, to such a degree as to render it easily digestible. If it is to do this it must be properly applied. That is to say, gently, regularly.

Simple food, well cooked, is the foundation of happiness—and paper bag cooking means good cooking.

It follows naturally that the paper bag is especially useful in preparing food for delicate persons, and growing children. Here follow some dishes that have helped build up weak and wasted people. That they will be likewise good for children, especially delicate ones, admits of no doubt.

Pigeon Roast.—Take a squab, a squab-chicken as small as possible, or a quail, dress it whole, stuff lightly with toasted bread crumbs, adding a raisin or two, or shreds of tart apple. Season very lightly inside before stuffing. Rub a little more salt outside, but only a little. Rub also with soft butter, not melted, and dredge very lightly with flour. Then wrap in bacon, sliced as thin as possible, and put into a buttered bag with a half teaspoonful of water. Seal and cook in a hot oven twenty to thirty minutes, depending on the size. The squab-chicken may require thirty-five minutes.

Shredded Wheat and Tomatoes.—Pour upon each shredded wheat biscuit required a teaspoonful of melted butter. Lay the buttered biscuit in a well-buttered bag and pile upon them thick slices of peeled tomatoes, well seasoned with sugar, salt, black and red pepper. Seal and cook for ten minutes. Serve on hot plates. A pleasing variant for children is to use instead of tomatoes, bananas peeled, cut in cubes, covered with sugar and lemon juice, and cooked for eight minutes. This can be served with cream.

Dishes for Invalids and Children

By Nicholas Soyer, Chef of Brooks' Club, London.

Sweetbread Mackenzie.—Blanch and trim a good-sized sweetbread, make a little mirepoir of vegetables, paying attention to the color of the vegetables, and seeing that they do not brown. Cut the sweetbread across the center, but do not halve it. Pound one ounce of pistachios and lay them in the slit of the sweetbread. Cover the sweetbread with the prepared vegetables and place in a well-buttered bag. Cook in a slow oven for thirty minutes. Dish the sweetbread, place the other ingredients in a fine sieve and lightly press the gravy through, on to the sweetbread.

Chicken Quenelles.—Take the breast of one fowl, add a pint of white sauce, and a piece of butter the size of a walnut. Pound well, mix in one egg, pass through a hair sieve. Place in a basin, add a quarter pint of cream and stir well. Form into small quenelles with a spoon, place in a buttered bag, lay carefully on the broiler, and cook for six minutes in a hot oven.

Chicken and Rice Tea.—Chop up half a raw chicken, wash a tablespoonful of rice in cold water, and mix with the chicken. Wash a teaspoonful of pearl barley, and add with a quarter-pint of cold water. Put all together into a small paper bag, and cook forty to forty-five minutes in a slow oven.

Filletted Poultry for Invalids.—Mince fine a carrot, turnip and onion, add a little minced ham, a pinch of sugar and salt, and lay at the bottom of a small well-buttered bag. Slice the breast of a fowl—cooked—lay the slices upon the prepared vegetables, which were cooked before mincing, sprinkle with oiled butter, seal and cook six minutes in a slow oven. Dish the fillets, put the vegetables in a sieve and press the gravy from them over the fillets.

Beef Tea.—Put one pound of beef steak in a paper bag, seal it, and cook for twelve minutes in a moderate oven. Open the bag on a dish and you will find natural gravy about the meat. Cut up the steak, press out all juice from it, strain, season to taste, and serve at once in a hot cup. For chicken tea, cut up half a fresh fowl, break the bones with a chopper, put in bag with two tablespoonfuls cold water, seal and cook forty-five minutes in a slow oven. Strain into a hot cup, season and serve.

SAVORIES FOR SUPPER.

Fish Roe a la Soyer.—Place half the roe on top of a piece of buttered toast, put peeled mushroom on top, add salt and pepper to taste, and a little piece of butter. Place the other half of the roe on top of the mushroom, add a little cayenne pepper, a pinch of grated cheese (Parmesan, or any other kind), a few bread crumbs and another piece of butter. Place in buttered bag, seal up and place on broiler. Allow ten minutes in a hot oven.

Savory of Lobster.—Cut a small lobster from head to tail. Cut the flesh into small dice. Put in small stewpan with one tablespoonful of white sauce, one tablespoonful of cream; add salt and cayenne or other pepper to taste, and one teaspoonful of grated Parmesan. Mix up well, and place in the cavity of the shells. Put a little grated Parmesan on top, and a little bread crumb and butter. Put in a paper bag. Place on broiler. Allow ten minutes in hot oven.

Savory Oysters.—Take two tablespoonfuls of white sauce, one teaspoonful of grated cheese, one tablespoonful of cream, the liquor from the oysters and seasoning to taste. Take half a dozen deep oyster shells. Put a little of the above mixture at the bottom; then put the raw breaded oyster in the middle. Add a little more of the sauce on top, with a little bread crumb and a small piece of butter. Place your buttered bag on the broiler, put your oysters carefully inside, seal up and allow eight minutes in a very hot oven.

ENDED THE SPELLING LESSON

Bobby's Education, Under Aunt's Tutelage, Afterward Proceeded Under Different Lines.

Miss Thompson, whose form nature has endowed with all-too-ample curves, was giving her little nephew a lesson in spelling the other day. He had spelt b-e, be, and h-e, he, and now she was trying to get him to tell her what m-e, spelt.

"Listen, Bobby," she said earnestly. Then closing her lips she pronounced the sound of a long m, and opening them, the sound of a long e. "What does that spell?"

Bobby looked at her and shook his head. Again she tried, and this time, while pronouncing the sounds, she vigorously tapped her own rotund chest with her plump forefinger.

"Mmum, ee. What letters am I saying and what do they spell?" she asked, still vigorously tapping her chest.

"I don't know what the letters are," replied Bobby, watching the plump forefinger, "but I guess they spell Fat."

BABY'S HAIR ALL CAME OUT

"When my first baby was six months old he broke out on his head with little bumps. They would dry up and leave a scale. Then it would break out again and it spread all over his head. All the hair came out and his head was scaly all over. Then his face broke out all over in red bumps and it kept spreading until it was on his hands and arms. I bought several boxes of ointment, gave him blood medicine, and had two doctors to treat him, but he got worse all the time. He had it about six months when a friend told me about Cuticura. I sent and got a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. In three days after using them he began to improve. He began to take long naps and to stop scratching his head. After taking two bottles of Resolvent, two boxes of Ointment and three cakes of Soap he was sound and well, and never had any breaking out of any kind. His hair came out in little curls all over his head. I don't think anything else would have cured him except Cuticura.

"I have bought Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap several times since to use for cuts and sores and have never known them to fail to cure what I put them on. Cuticura Soap is the best that I have ever used for toilet purposes." (Signed) Mrs. F. E. Harmon, R. F. D. 2, Atoka, Tenn., Sept. 10, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept L, Boston.

THESE SIX LETTERS
From New England Women

Prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Does Restore the Health of Ailing Women.

Boston, Mass.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from hemorrhages (sometimes lasting for weeks), and could get nothing to check them. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound (tablet form) on Tuesday, and the following Saturday morning the hemorrhages stopped. I have taken them regularly ever since and am steadily gaining.

"I certainly think that every one who is troubled as I was should give your Compound Tablets a faithful trial, and they will find relief."—Mrs. George Juby, 803 Fifth Street, South Boston, Mass.

Letter from Mrs. Julia King, Phœnix, R.I.

Phœnix, R.I.—"I worked steady in the mill from the time I was 12 years old until I had been married a year, and I think that caused my bad feelings. I had soreness in my side near my left hip that went around to my back, and sometimes I would have to lie in bed for two or three days. I was not able to do my housework.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me wonderfully in every way. You may use my letter for the good of others. I am only too glad to do anything within my power to recommend your medicine."—Mrs. Julia King, Box 282, Phœnix, R.I.

Letter from Mrs. Etta Donovan, Willimantic, Conn.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles causing backache, irregularities, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk up stairs without stopping on the way. I was all run down in every way.

"I tried three doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said it was no use for me to take anything as nothing would restore me to health again. So I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and by taking seven bottles of the Compound and other treatment you advised, I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. Etta Donovan, 762 Main Street, Willimantic, Conn.

Letter from Mrs. Winfield Dana, Augusta, Me.

Augusta, Me.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured the backache, headache, and the bad pain I had in my right side, and I am perfectly well."—Mrs. Winfield Dana, R.F.D. No. 2, Augusta, Me.

Letter from Mrs. J. A. Thompson, Newport, Vt.

Newport, Vt.—"I thank you for the great benefit Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I took eight bottles and it did wonders for me, as I was a nervous wreck when I began taking it. I shall always speak a good word for it to my friends."—Mrs. John A. Thompson, Box 3, Newport Center, Vermont.

Letter from Miss Grace Dodds, Bethlehem, N.H.

Bethlehem, N.H.—"By working very hard, sweeping carpets, washing, ironing, lifting heavy baskets of clothes, etc., I got all run down. I was sick in bed every month.

"This last Spring my mother got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and already I feel like another girl. I am regular and do not have the pains that I did, and do not have to go to bed. I will tell all my friends what the Compound is doing for me."—Miss Gracie B. Dodds, Box 133, Bethlehem, N.H.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

The egg market needs a breed of hens that can be fooled or coaxed into laying eggs late in the fall and in the first half of the winter, when other hens are taking vacations. At best, the storage eggs are not like fresh ones. And under present circumstances the really fresh egg is not produced, except in meager quantities, from November to February.

Though the announced purpose of the investigation to inquire into the cause for the present low stage of water in the Red Lake river was defeated, much good may indirectly come from them. The advantages of the construction of dams to control the flow of water in the river were clearly set forth in the statement of the committee of the Grand Forks commerical club. "The Red Lake River could be brought, by a series of dams, to a nearly uniform level or unvarying stage through most of the year."—St. Hilaire Spectator.

It is reported that H. O. Bjorge or some other Republican may decide to come out as an independent canditate in the ninth district against Halvor Steenerson. There are many however who have their eye on the seat in congress but realize only a faint hope of their chances to win. Steenerson has the people behind him and his chances are better than ever. And again another bubble bursts, only will a faint report, that A. O. Brattland, a Socialist of Ada, is to enter the race but we prophesy that this will only help materally in infringing on the vote of the second candidate and make Steenerson's chances all the more certain.

The Eberhart forces are getting shakey at the knees even at this early stage of the campaign. The Eberhart sentiment has almost dwaddled away into oblivion and it is almost an assured fact that the governor's chair will be replaced by some one else after the comming election. The announcement of Lieut. Governor Sam Y. Gordon of Browns Valley was accepted generally with satisfaction but the announcement of W. L. Lee of Long Prairie, on the same principals adds a different colar to the situation. With Gorden alone in the race the outcome seems almost an assurred victory for the Browns Valley man. But the announcement of Lee on the progressive platform, also, smells something like a put-up job by the Eberhart forces to draw vote from the Browns Valley man, which would invariably strengthen the Governor's chances for re-election.

Who is the knocker? This question is easily answered. You will usually find him on some corner when the police are not present; his amount of work during the day is represented by the algebraic figure X, and his occupation, if you asked him, would puzzle him more than the solution of the number of summers seen by the ficticious Ann. Still he knows how the entire city should be regulated although he does not know and does not care, how he will pay his poll tax. He couldn't go on the bond of a man fined ten cents, yet he discusses the finances of the city as if he had the combination to the city treasurer at his finger's end. Nothing that happens in his home town is any good; it never can be. He judges the town from his own standard and the conclusion is only obvious. Bees kill out the drones; the law prevents our following example of the industrious insects.

Judging from the size of the cream checks the patrons of the Plummer Creamery are receiving we predict that within 5 years there will not be an acre, of good land anywhere within 10 or 12 miles of Plummer to be had for less than $40 or $50 per acre. Red Lake County is fast getting to be known as one of the best dairy counties in the state of Minnesota and the immigration agents and Railroad Companies predict that there in this county this comming year 1911 there will be the greatest movement in land with sales principally to actual settlers from southern Minnesota, Iowa Wisconsin, and Illinois that this country has ever seen and they are certainly in position to know whereof they speak.

HOW TO START SOMETHING FOR GOOD ROADS.

First, get two or three "live wire" men together. Don't bother with anybody that takes unnecessarily long to say "Yes" or to say "No." Recommend the taking of action to hold a good roads conference in your town for the purpose of stirring up a healthier and more definite advancement in your highway improvement problems.

Second, have a special meeting of your chamber of commerce or your automobile club or any progressive business men's organization. If you have no organization of any kind get three or four friends together and form a temporary good roads league. Propose the idea of holding a good roads conference in your county. Learn what can be done financially. Discuss what ought to be done. Decide what you will undertake. Stay with it. Then give all the facts to the newspapers. Keep them posted at every future step. They are 90 per cent necessary to make a success of your meeting. Start it quick.

All farm animals have an instinctive craving for salt. But if it is so placed as to be always within their reach they will consume just as much as they need and no more. It is only when it has been kept from them for a long period that there is a danger of their eating to much. It is therefore an excellent practice to keep it in a box or boxes where they can have access to it whenever they desire. When they are salted, as is the practice with many farmers, only once a week, while some may get enough, others may suffer from a deficient supply. Salt promotes an active circulation of the blood, which never becomes thick and sluggish so long as the supply is plentiful; it assists digestion, and is often a preventative of disease. It is so cheap that no stockraiser can really afford not to give his animals all they want of it.

APPOINT NEW MAYOR

Wm. Bottineau Selected to Fill Office to Succeed Dr. Clark

At the regular meeting of the Village council held last Monday evening the question of making an appointment for the office of mayor to fill the vacancy caused the absence of Dr. R. Clark, was brought up. Wm. Bottineau was made the preferable candidate, having received the unanimous vote of the councilmen.

The council can justly be complimented on their excellent choice as a better selection for this office of trust could hardly be made.

"Bill" is a sober and industrious worker and will make a good mayor.

Windjammers Alright.

The Windjammers or otherwise known as the ——— (it would hardly do to print here) which have sprung into prominance just lately for their good work with the "medicine ball" played the regular basket ball team last week and were instrumental in winning one game and playing a tie in another. While the regulars were minus some of the regular players the "juniors" are said to have put up some good work also.

The regular team, however, is stronger at the present time than it has ever been and are in a shape to put up a good match with any of the surrounding teams. In their game with Erskine a week ago, which resulted in a tie, instead of a victory for the visitors as was stated last week, the team showed up as having been strengthened to a considerable degree lately.

Dr. Clark Leaves.

Dr. Robt. Clark left last Friday evening for Minneapolis from where he goes to his home in the southern part of the state for a visit. Mr. Clark does not intend to return here to resume his practice but intends to seek a new location.

Give the Boy a Chance.

This year the state is offering $600 in prizes for the boys who can grow the most corn on one acre of land. In addition to this [illegible] the Minneapolis Tribune has offered a scholarship for one year at the School of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park, as a sweepstakes prize for the champion corn-grower of the state.

This contest will mean a great deal to the boys and to Agriculture in the state. It will stimulate an interest in corn-growing and in better crops, which can be aroused in no other way. Every boy who follows the rules of the contest, and carries it through to completion, will be stronger for having done so. The boy who establishes a yield record for his county adds to the value of land in his locality. It shows what the soil can be made to produce by the practice of good methods.

Every farmer who has a boy between the ages of 10 and 18 years can afford to give him an acre of ground for this contest. Every father should not only give his boy the use of the land, but he should encourage him to enter the contest, furnish him with seed, advice him in his selection, and in the method of preparing the land and cultivate the crop. Give the boy a chance to see what he can do. If he wins a prize for production, or gets his name on the State Honor Roll for crop production, he has accomplished something worth while and deserves great credit.

The rules for this contest will be issued soon. The Extension Division is anxious to reach as many boys as possible by means of this contest. Every one interested in the development of the boy should co-operate with the Extension Division by boosting for this contest.—O. M. Olson, Extension Division Minnesota College of Agriculture.

Almost Lost His Life.

S. A. Stid, of Mason, Mich., will never forget his terrible exposure to a merciless storm. "It gave me a dreadful cold," he writes, "that caused severe pains in my chest, so it was hard for me to breathe. A neighbor gave me several doses of Dr. King's New Discovery which brought great relief. The doctor said I was on the verge of pneumonia, but to continue with the Discovery. I did so and two bottles completely cured me." Use only this quick, safe, reliable medicine for coughs, colds, or any throat or lung trouble. Price 50c and $1.00. Trail bottle free. Guaranteed by all druggists.

WORK OF SURVEYORS

Reports from out in the town of Hickory are to the effect that the farmers in the eastern part of that township have discoverd stakes in that section which would indicate that some railway engineers have traversed that territory lately. The stakes are brand new and it is thought that they have been driven since Xmas as it cannot be learned that anyone has seen them prior to that time. The line of stakes, it seems, cuts across the south east corner of Hickory township; thence running in a southwesterly direction towards Erie.

While the stakes bear no marks to throw any light on the situation one has been found that differs from the rest as it gives the numbers "104" Whether this bears any significence or not is not known but settlers in that community are inclined to believe that this is a possible site for a station.

It is thought this is the work of civil engineers in the employ of the St. Louis and Iowa Central Railway Co., for the proposed railroad to Winnipeg.

Steenerson Scores Burch

In a long statement to President Taft, Congressman Steenerson last week assails M. C. Burch, the special goverment prosecutor in the reservation land cases, charging him with falsehoods and an endeavor to prolong the "investigations" in order to lengthen out his job. This is some thing the people up here has known right along and have made known but now that the president is made acquainted with facts from high official sources it is possible some cognition of the outrages may follow. In alluding to the unfair and pipe dream charges of this Burch regarding past legislative acts concerning the White Earth reservation, Congressman Steenerson says: "As such statement constitue a reflection by the representative of the executive branch of the goverment upon the coordinate legislative branch, questoning its integrity and honesty, it constitutes a grave matter that ought to receive careful consideration."

Named River Township.

At the January meeting of the county commissioners a resolutation was adopted to change the name of Hope township, which was formerly known as River Falls township until the creation of Pennington county. The name of Hope was designated by the commissioners, but it was found later that another township in the state has the same name and consequently has been changed to River township.

All farm animals have an instinctive craving for salt. But if it is so placed as to be always within their reach they will consume just as much as they need and no more. It is only when it has been kept from them for a long period that there is a danger of their eating to much. It is therefore an excellent practice to keep it in a box or boxes where they can have access to it whenever they desire. When they are salted, as is the practice with many farmers, only once a week, while some may get enough, others may suffer from a deficient supply. Salt promotes an active circulation of the blood, which never becomes thick and sluggish so long as the supply is plentiful; it assists digestion, and is often a preventative of disease. It is so cheap that no stockraiser can really afford not to give his animals all they want of it.

APPOINT NEW MAYOR

Wm. Bottineau Selected to Fill Office to Succeed Dr. Clark.

At the regular meeting of the Village council held last Monday evening the question of making an appointment for the office of mayor to fill the vacancy caused the absence of Dr R. Clark, was brought up. Wm. Bottineau was made the perferable candidate, having received the unanimous vote of the councilmen.

The council can justly be complimented on their excellent choice as a better selection for this office of trust could hardly be made.

"Bill" is a sober and industrious worker and will make a good mayor.

Windjammers Alright.

The Windjammers, or otherwise known as the——(t'would hardly do to print here) which have sprung into prominance just lately for their good work with the "medicine ball" played the regular basket ball team last week and were instrumental in winning one game and playing a tie in another. While the regulars were minus some of the regular players the "juniors" are said to have put up some good work also.

The regular team, however, is stronger at the present time than it has ever been and are in a shape to put up a good match with any of the surrounding teams. In their game with Erskine a week ago, which resulted in a tie, instead of a victory for the visitors as was stated last week, the team showed up as having been strengthened to a considerable degree lately.

Dr. Clark Leaves.

Dr. Robt. Clark left last Friday evening for Minneapolis from where he goes to his home in the southern part of the state for a visit. Mr. Clark does not intend to return here to resume his practice but intends to seek a new location.

Give the Boy a Chance.

This year the state is offering $600 in prizes for the boys who can grow the most corn on one acre of land. In addition to the cash prizes, the Minneapolis Tribune has offered a scholarship for one year at the School of Agriculture at St. Anthony Park, as a sweepstakes prize for the champion corn-grower of the state.

This contest will mean a great deal to the boys and to Agriculture in the state. It will stimulate an interest in corn-growing and in better crops, which can be aroused in no other way. Every boy who follows the rules of the contest, and carries it through to completion, will be stronger for having done so. The boy who establishes a yield record for his county adds to the value of land in his locality. It shows what the soil can be made to produce by the practice of good methods.

Every farmer who has a boy between the ages of 10 and 18 years can afford to give him an acre of ground for this contest. Every father should not only give his boy the use of the land, but he should encourage him to enter the contest, furnish him with seed, advice him in his selection, and in the method of preparing the land and cultivate the crop. Give the boy a chance to see what he can do. If he wins a prize for production, or gets his name on the State Honor Roll for crop production, he has accomplished something worth while and deserves great credit.

The rules for this contest will be issued soon. The Extension Division is anxious to reach as many boys as possible by means of this contest. Every one interested in the development of the boy should co-operate with the Extension Division by boosting for this contest.—O. M. Olson, Extension Division Minnesota College of Agriculture.

WORK OF SURVEYORS

Reports from out in the town of Hickory are to the effect that the farmers in the eastern part of that township have discoverd stakes in that section which would indicate that some railway engineers have traversed that territory lately. The stakes are brand new and it is thought that they have been driven since Xmas as it cannot be learned that anyone has seen them prior to that time. The line of stakes, it seems, cuts across the south east corner of Hickory township; thence running in a southwesterly direction towards Erie.

While the stakes bear no marks to throw any light on the situation one has been found that differs from the rest as it gives the numbers "104" Whether this bears any significience or not is not known but settlers in that community are inclined to belive that this is a possible site for a station.

It is thought this is the work of civil engineers in the employ of the St. Louis and Iowa Central Railway Co., for the proposed railroad to Winnipeg.

Steenerson Scores Burch

In a long statement to President Taft, Congressman Steenerson last week assails M. C. Burch, the special goverment prosecutor in the reservation land cases, charging him with falsehoods and an endeavor to prolong the "investigations" in order to lengthen out his job. This is some thing the people up here has known right along and have made known but now that the president is made acquainted with facts from high official sources it is possible some cognition of the outrages may follow. In alluding to the unfair and pipe dream charges of this Burch regarding past legislative acts concerning the White Earth reservation, Congressman Steenerson says: "As such statement constitue a reflection by the representative of the executive branch of the goverment upon the coordinate legislative branch, questoning its integrity and honesty, it constitutes a grave matter that ought to receive careful consideration.

Named River Township.

At the January meeting of the county commissioners a resolutation was adopted to change the name of Hope township, which was formerly known as River Falls township until the creation of Pennington county. The name of Hope was designated by the commissioners, but it was found later that another township in the state has the same name and consequently has been changed to River township.

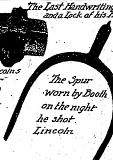
The Most Interesting Lincoln Relics

LIFE MASK OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

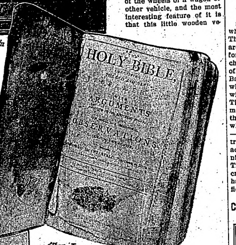
ALTHOUGH it is little more than half a century since the death of Abraham Lincoln, discoveries of heretofore unknown relics of the martyr president are of rare occurrence. Indeed, we hear of the disclosure of additional relics of George Washington more frequently than of additions to the known list of mementoes of the Civil War President. One explanation, perhaps, is found in the fact that there are comparatively few private collections of Lincoln relics. It is as though the wealthy men who have expended such vast sums to unearth trophies of Washington, Napoleon and other heroes had not yet awakened to the importance of the souvenirs of Lincoln.

The Last Handwriting of Lincoln and a Lock of his Hair

Model of one of Lincoln's inventions, made by Lincoln himself



The Spur worn by Booth on the night he shot Lincoln



THE LINCOLN FAMILY BIBLE

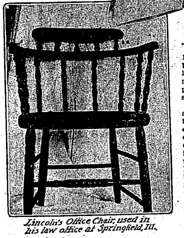
Doubtless the quest on the part of private individuals for Lincoln relics would be pursued more energetically were it not for the manifest difficulty of securing Lincoln's former belongings and the yet greater difficulty of authenticating many of the objects that purport to be Lincoln relics. The martyr president rose from comparative obscurity and this in itself has made it difficult to locate minor objects connected with his boyhood and early life. Then, too, the circumstance that his activities covered widely-separated localities in Kentucky, Illinois, etc., has further complicated the task of tracing his one-time belongings. Lincoln relics, when they do come into the market via the medium of collectors' auction sales, invariably bring big prices. A Lincoln autograph or especially an autograph letter will always provoke spirited bidding; damaged and discarded pieces of the White House china made for Mrs. Lincoln and used on the presidential table during the Lincoln administration command prices of $30 to $50 each; and a lock of Lincoln's hair recently brought $800 when sold at auction.

Some of the most interesting of the Lincoln relics are believed to be in the possession of Mr. Robert Lincoln, the only living son of the martyr president. However, Mr. Lincoln, who has but lately retired as president of the Pullman Car company, has not only never exhibited his relics publicly, but has never taken the public into his confidence regarding the exact character of the mementoes he possesses or what ultimate disposition he has planned to make of them. Even more valuable, however, than the Robert T. Lincoln collection is that which represents the life work of Osborn H. Oldroyd, a veteran of the Civil war and a most devoted admirer of Lincoln. It stands today as the greatest collection ever compiled by one man in tribute to a popular hero and its value has been variously estimated at from $100,000 to $250,000.

The collector began to accumulate Lincoln relics some time before the Springfield lawyer was nominated for president, and he has continued his labor of love ever since, with the result that he now has considerably more than 3,000 articles pertaining to the great idol. Some years ago the Congress of the United States gave him permission to place his relics in the house in Washington in which Lincoln died, and this unpretentious brick structure, which is now owned by Uncle Sam, has since been the home, rent free, of this persistent collector and the treasures which he has gathered together from all parts of the country at great expense.

What is generally accounted the most valuable of all Lincoln relics has a prominent place in this self-same collection. It consists of a heavy frame, sheltering under glass the last communication ever penned by Lincoln and, attached to the precious missive, a lock of Lincoln's hair. This souvenir, which was originally in the possession of the man who was steward at the White House during the Lincoln regime, is valued at $5,000, but it is doubtful if even that sum would buy it today. Persons who have been ignorant of the existence of this relic have designated other communications as the final handwriting of the martyr president, but in reality the honor unquestionably belongs to this small white card with its few hastily-penned lines. Novel and interesting are the circumstances connected with the origin of this priceless memento.

As Lincoln emerged from the White House on the fated night of April 14, 1865, on his way to Ford's theater, the steward hurried after him to explain the predicament of two gentlemen who had been waiting at the White House for some time in order to obtain from the president a permit to pass through the Union lines to Petersburg, Va. It was the theater hour and Mrs. Lincoln was already seated in the carriage, but the ever-obliging president paused a few minutes to write a few lines, explaining that no pass was necessary to go and return from Petersburg and Richmond and that "People go and return just as they did before the war." He handed this to the steward, reiterating verbally the statement made in the penned memorandum. The steward, realizing that the written explanation was really superfluous, and seizing a long-sought opportunity to secure a trophy of the beloved president, retained in his own possession the bit of handwriting and repeated to the waiting visitors the president's oral assurances on the subject. Later, after the death of Lincoln, the steward induced the physician in charge to allow him to have a lock of Lincoln's hair.



Lincoln's Office Chair, used in his law office at Springfield, Ill.

One of the most interesting of the relics identified with the life of Lincoln before he entered the White House is the family Bible—considerably more than one hundred years old—which contains the family chronicle usually recorded in the spaces provided in such a book. From this well-worn volume Lincoln's mother read the Scriptures to him when he was a boy and on the inside cover is the autograph of Lincoln written when he was nine years of age. The cook stove, used by the Lincoln family in the homestead at Springfield, Ill., and the cradle in which all the Lincoln children were rocked have likewise been carefully preserved. Equally significant is the old arm-chair which Lincoln used for years in his law offices at Springfield and in which, following his election to the presidency, he sat pondering by the hour over the problems that confronted him.

Abraham Lincoln was something of an inventor and one of the most highly prized of all the Lincoln relics has to do with his efforts in the field of invention. It is a model designed to illustrate the workings of an ingenious mechanism for changing at will the angles of the wheels of a wagon or other vehicle, and the most interesting feature of it is that this little wooden vehicle represents Lincoln's own handiwork, having been laboriously fashioned while he was a young lawyer waiting for clients in Illinois. Another model of a Lincoln invention—a steamboat—was deposited in the patent office and is now the possession of the United States government.

The life and death masks of Abraham Lincoln are, of course, tremendously important as conveying to the present and future generations the exact appearance of this famous man in life and in death. A mask, it will be understood, is a plaster cast of a countenance which reproduces faithfully its every detail. One of the life masks of Lincoln that has been preserved was made in 1860, just after Lincoln's first nomination for president, the work being done by a sculptor who accompanied the notification committee to Springfield. Another life mask was made about a month before Lincoln's death. The death mask is perhaps the representation which shows the martyr president as he is best known to the public through pictures and statuary.

Among the relics that have been carefully preserved by the government and by private individuals such as Mr. Oldroyd are many bearing upon the great tragedy which ended Lincoln's career. One of these relics is the flag which was draped in front of the president's box at Ford's theater, the night when Lincoln was shot. The flag shows plainly the rent made by Booth's spur when it caught in the folds as he leaped from the box to the stage. Another interesting relic is the spur itself, which made trouble for the assassin by causing him to fall heavily, breaking his leg and, in consequence, seriously hampered his flight.

IN THE WILDS OF CANADA

"The interior of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario is nothing but a continuous stretch of dense forest, much of which has been burned over in days gone by, so that the deadfall was considerable," writes Frederick A. Talbot, telling of the surveys for the Grand Trunk Pacific railroad in the Engineering Magazine. "The forest was for the most part trackless, the Indians and trappers moving through this inhospitable country along the obviously easy channels—the waterways. Huge stretches of muskeg were encountered, for the land is in sore need of draining. As the western boundary of the province of Ontario is approached the country becomes more broken, lakes and swamps being intersected by stretches of badly broken rocky hills. From Lake Nipigon westward to the boundary of Manitoba the worst country between the Atlantic and Pacific had to be penetrated with great difficulty and arduousness.

"For the purpose of the surveys an elaborate organization had to be perfected, in order to ship in supplies and keep the surveyors well equipped with provisions. For six months of the year the country was in the grip of snow, the fall of which is heavy, while the thermometer drops to very low readings. As the nearest railway communication was 100 or more miles to the south, supplies had to be packed over and numerous caches had to be established. Tote roads were driven for team work as far as practicable in summer, trails had to be blazed to permit of the passage of the halfbreeds (who, because of the physique and stamina were pressed freely into service for carrying supplies on their backs), while large fleets of canoes of every description were acquired, the waterways being followed so far as possible. Packing by mules and horses could not be practiced extensively, owing to the muskeg and the absence of fodder, for the country was unsupporting to animal life while the shipping in of hay would have been impossible except at the expense of more urgent necessities. Owing to the uncharted character of the rivers canoeing demands extraordinary skill, and after the first few months' experience where unfamiliarity with these waterways was attended by considerable losses in boats and valuable supplies, only men familiar with the country, such as those in the employ of the Hudson Bay company, were permitted to handle these craft. Even then occasional losses were sustained and the stores of provisions suffered extensively from the ill effects of portaging, which was frequent and heavy. During the winter communication with the hinterland was maintained solely by means of dog sleighs, large numbers of these animals being acquired from the Indians and bred for this service."

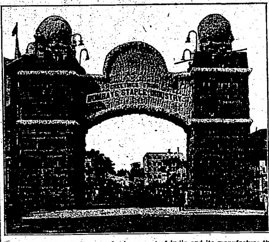
Omar Revised.

"I understand," said the sympathetic friend, "that you borrowed money and are busy trying to pay the interest."

"Yes," replied Mr. Biggins; "it has been a case of take the credit and let the cash go."

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Bombay's Great Cotton Arch



Cotton is the staple crop of a large part of India and its manufacture the staple industry of Bombay. Consequently, when King George visited that city recently the arch of welcome here illustrated was constructed entirely of bales of cotton.

SIAM'S AMAZON GUARD

Siam is one of the few countries which boast of corps of women police. The members of this Amazon Guard are all old and ugly. They wear uniform though they are not armed. Their chief duty is to act as gate keeprs of the inner, or women's palace at Bangkok. They follow any stranger who enters the palace and remain with him until he takes his departure. They see that there is no mischief made and that no one makes love to the royal wives and concubines. Men who have business inside the palace—doctors, architects, carpenters, electric light fitters, etc.—enter the palace freely, but are always accompanied by some of the Amazon guard. The palace has some difficulty in recruiting these guards, as the work is hard and the pay poor, and the qualification—uncomplimentary.

CHINA'S DISAPPEARING JEWS

The Jewish race, which has preserved its race integrity elsewhere, has found the vast numbers of China too much for it. Remnants still remain of a colony that settled in Kai-Fong twenty centuries ago, but their race traditions are only a vague memory. William Edgar Gell, who has visited them, writes:

"The early annals tell of them, and there is good reason to believe that they have been in China two thousand years. But for three centuries they have gathered at this capital, and have degenerated with it. Two hundred years ago they had a handsome block of buildings, with a synagog sixty by forty. Sixty years ago they had suffered by a great flood, and only two hundred Jews were left. In 1866 Dr. Martin found that they had pulled down all their buildings and sold the materials, some being built into a mosque. A later observer reported that some had turned Buddhist, some Moslem, and some were studying the Confucian classics. Today we found that only seven families remained; the very soil had been sold, and is being carted away to raise the level of other parts, so that a stagnant pond covers the ancient site. The wretched survivors seem to get their living by transporting the earth, though they so far recollect their past as to have a few rubbings of the former inscriptions to sell. Their religion has evaporated, for they have no Hebrew schools and could not read them if they had; only they still eat no pork, nor worship idols, nor burn incense to their ancestors. Israel in Kai-Fong is a has-been."

WHEN THEY WORE "PIGTAILS"

The edict sanctioning the abolition of the pigtail reminds us that it is not so very long since the pigtail disappeared not merely from the army and navy, but even from every day civilian life in England. Waistlong pigtails were the fashionable wear in England about 1740 and before that the bag wig had been adorned with a pigtail looped up in a black silk bag. As late as 1858 an old gentleman was seen on Cheapside with his gray hair tied behind in a short queue, and even today we can find a relic of the pigtail, for the three pieces of black velvet on the dress tunics of officers in the royal Welsh fusiliers are the remains of the ribbon with which the queue was tied.

RAT IS SOLD AS PET DOG

The renewal of the fashion for small dogs has led to a remarkable case of fraud, the victim of which is one of the best known women in Paris society. Walking up and down the fashionable side of the Avenue de Bois de Boulogne was a man who had several toy dogs to show off, ostensibly for sale. One of the smallest of them was a particularly diminutive specimen of the griffon. Finally a woman stepped up to ask its price. The man made the little dog perform several tricks, and then, after some minutes' conversation, informed her that he had a still more remarkable specimen in his coat pocket. He then fished out a little creature scarcely more than half the size of the first.

The woman concluded what she thought was a bargain and what the man said was a sacrifice. She put the little one in her muff, went off to luncheon and, on getting home again, pulled him out from his hiding place. For a minute or two the animal showed fear, but then, to her great amazement and that of her servant, the little griffon suddenly started toward the window and ran up one of the curtains with the speed and agility not at all unlike the best known qualities of a mouse. The butler and footman were called, and there was an exciting chase about the drawing room before the little wonder was captured. The new owner was then rather more horrified than surprised to find that her griffon was nothing but a rather oversized rat that had been sewed into a dog's skin.

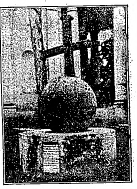
MINERALS IN HUMAN BODY

The human body contains, among other constituents, about two pounds of phosphorus, which is essential to the health of the bones and the vigor of the brain. This phosphorus, if extracted and put to another use, would make up about 4,000 packages of friction matches.

Besides phosphorus, the body contains a few ounces of sodium and half an ounce of potassium. The quantity of the latter would be sufficient for many experiments in a class in chemistry.

In addition to sodium and potassium there are a few grains of magnesium, enough to make the "silver rain" for a family's stock of rockets on a Fourth of July evening or to create a brilliant light visible at a considerable distance.

RELIC OF INDIAN MUTINY



In front of St. James' church in Delhi, the old-new capital of India, are a cross and ball that are vivid reminders of the great Indian mutiny. At that time they were on top of the church, and they contain no fewer than a hundred bullet holes.

FIRST CAT TAX LEVIED

Munich, in Bavaria, is the first city in the world to levy a tax upon the domestic cat. The tax is 5s, and every cat is provided with a special collar and a metal check such as the dogs wear. Those who are not thus provided will be caught by authorized persons. The measure is not popular, but it is considered that there are far too many cats in the city, and it is expected that the levying of the tax will result in reducing the numbers kept.

Wall To Stop Evil Spirits

The peculiar wall shown in the illustration is near Hankow, China, and was erected to stop the passage of evil spirits, presumably on the same principle which causes the ordinary middle-class dwelling house in China to have inside the front door a fixed screen which compels anyone entering the house to turn to the right or left. The explanation of this is that evil spirits are able to move only in straight lines.

Grapes Packed in Sawdust.

The report on the first car load of grapes shipped from Lodi, Cal., packed in redwood sawdust has been received from New York, and it is to the effect that the experiment has proved a complete success. The grapes were packed six weeks ago in drums with odorless redwood sawdust and were kept there until a few days ago, when they were forwarded to the market for the holiday trade. They are reported as retaining their color and flavor perfectly, being as firm as when picked from the vines. Local growers and shippers will now ship in large quantities table grapes packed in this way.

Easily Made

One of the most easily constructed toilet set holders as yet designed consists of a half-yard long and quarter-yard wide strip of imitation morocco, pigskin or suede lined with white oil silk or white table oilcloth, the heavier or outer fabric turned over the edge of the inner layer and machine-stitched onto it. Stitched-edged straps of the lining material attached to one-half the surface of the inner side are of a size adapted for holding in place the various toilet articles, while at one end is a pocket for the face cloth, and at the other a receptacle for the manicure instruments. Two straps attached to the outer side of the case prevent contents from falling out of it. One strap, going about its narrow side, may be buckled as tightly as desired, and the other strap, going from end to end, prevents any article from slipping through those apertures. The outside may be decorated in various ways. Anyone who stencils or paints [illegible] very ornamental indeed, but a very simple method, and one which gives individuality to the convenience, is to affix one or more initial letters of metal similar to those formerly used on handbags.

Dog Came Back.

He was a scientist—an artful scientist, indeed—and one day he lost his ewe lamb—a pet pomeranian. But this learned man did not search the neighborhood; he did not even visit the local police station. All he did was to advertise in the newspaper that his dog had "strayed," as he cunningly expressed it. Beneath the advertisement, however, he inserted these tragic words: "The dog is of no value, not even to the owner. But, having been experimented upon for scientific purposes with many virulent poisons, a lick from its tongue—and it is extremely affectionate—would probably prove fatal." That dear little dog duly returned the next day.

THE LUCK OF A SEVOGLE SOWET

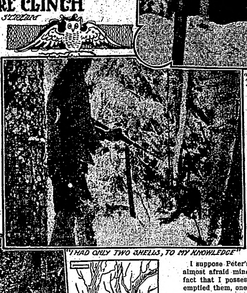
By DOUGLAS WETMORE CLINCH

COPYRIGHT BY FIELD AND STREAM

THE evolution of a woodsman is dependent on certain characteristics which constitute the "sixth sense." This spirit never tires, is known to the cosmopolitan world as "The Call of the Wild," and accounts for the man sixty years young. Sensitiveness and superstition are prominent factors, coupled with stubbornness and observation, and then the stage is reached when the sixth sense is born. Disputed or not the theory governs this story, which deals with a Sowet, the pocket edition of the Great Horned Owl, the element of luck, and a moose which required much hunting.

Peabody Lake supplied the necessary background. Nestling as it does between the Big Sevogle and the North West Miramichi, thirty-five miles of portage road demands patience to reach it. As the day was far spent, I rounded its last turn revealing Ned Menzie's hunting camp. Five days of shooting remained. Five days to redeem a reputation which had, unchallenged, passed through the outposts of disaster.

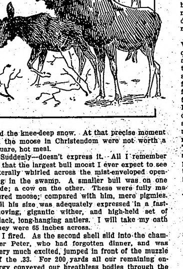
"NOT FIFTY YARDS AWAY A 50-INCH BULL"



"I HAD ONLY TWO SHELLS, TO MY KNOWLEDGE"

"...SOME DAY YOU MAKE GOOD HUNTER"

"IT SEEMED FOR THE LAST TIME I GLANCED OVER THAT RIFLE—"



Previous to this trip I spent fifty odd days of that year in woods travel. Aside from my caribou hunt, misfortune had in various forms denied my possession of that woodman's sixth sense. During the summer I became aware of the persistent denial. Cracked waugan-sticks, bewitched frypans, damaged canoe-ribs, lost pipes and fly books were its outward visible signs. On my September moose trip my companion jammed the safety and then overshot. The following day a pack horse from the settlements jingled its bell just as the knoll beyond the portage was startled by cracking limbs. Then three moose (two bulls and a cow) came into the water at even, a scant half-hour in the wake of the first weird call. In the mist of the morrow I stalked by mistake a spike-horn. We missed the "water" country by a mile on the first October hunt, and after tramping twelve miles to the ridges found the first snow buried with crust.

Arrived at Menzie's camp Peter Prisk took me in hand on the morning of the 25th. His remarks of "plenty moose," the departure of two "50" heads for the settlements, and my knowledge of the sport, discounted our limited time. Still-hunting on the snow is the most deadly method of stalking. Nothing short of a damaged rifle, rain followed by frost, could, in such a country, have prevented the labeling of a fine bull moose.

As we worked up-wind such assurance dominated my thoughts, but as I raised my Winchester to brush aside a snow-laden bough I discovered that the rear sight had been split. One minute the range was fifty, the next perhaps, a thousand yards. As the cracking of a frost-bitten birch became resonant above my fervent remarks Peter struck a fresh track. Suddenly he clutched my arm, stepped to one side, and whispered "chuut!" Not fifty yards away a 50-inch bull, with heavy pans and beautiful brow prongs, stared at me through the thicket. As he rose to his feet my sight rose in unison, to the extreme limit.

Never in six years of shooting did I experience the anguish, mortified by Peter's incredulous countenance, which chilled my senses as the Hoxie grazed the wither. For a few seconds tree trunk clanged on antler, tiny particles of frozen crust sparkled in the sunshine, and then all sounds save the sighing of the western breeze, ceased as abruptly as they had begun. For an hour that afternoon and several the next day Peter and I tracked that "started" bull. The places he led us through demanded more than patience. In a yard the trail was lost and by one o'clock on the 26th we had selected another which appealed to Peter's particular tastes in tracks.

The day in question was warm. This drew the frost and mild clouds of steam or woodland vapor rose from the hollows. The traveling was heavy and tedious. No stop could be made for lunch, and depression settled down over our very souls. Shortly before two o'clock we sighted a cow. As she swung in her tracks I recognized the clicking of a bull's hoofs going at the trot. I whispered to Peter and we circled till the Indian, with one foot in the air, paused. I was completely fagged. My legs ached from tramping through the crust and the knee-deep snow. At that precise moment all the moose in Christendom were not worth a square, hot meal.

Suddenly—doesn't express it. All I remember is that the largest bull moost I ever expect to see literally whirled across the mist-enveloped opening in the swamp. A smaller bull was on one side; a cow on the other. These were fully matured moose; compared with him, mere pigmies. All his size was adequately expressed in a fast-moving, gigantic wither, and high-held set of black, long-hanging antlers. I will take my oath they were 65 inches across.

I fired. As the second shell slid into the chamber Peter, who had forgotten dinner, and was very much excited, jumped in front of the muzzle of the .33. For 200 yards all our remaining energy conveyed our breathless bodies through the two-foot snow. Then, having brushed the snow from off a deadfall, Peter collapsed and murmured, "By Hell, dat one dammer moose."

I have a recollection, a painful memory only, of the cold lunch and the tramp that night to camp. The snow had covered innumerable deadfalls. Between two of these, my right moccasin had lingered. For two days I nursed a strained right hip.

One chance only remained, for on Friday and Saturday I was helpless. The team would be in on the morrow, and, as I lay that night in my bunk, all the hard luck of the season mocked me in the "creeerrk" of the cooling stove. I recalled sportsmen I had placed that season and how they had—on their first trip—all killed their moose. Then that Injun—and how polite some of them are—agreed it was hard luck, yet down in his heart of hearts I was but one more "sport couldn't chuute." But finally that night I slept, and just as the first streams of daylight were trickling through the snow-guarded lanes of the forest Peter awoke me by emphatically stamping on his moccasins.

A new species of angelic smile was hovering over his features and he was talking to someone, that was sure. Perched on the sill of the window was a tiny sowet owl. Catching the minute creature Peter gazed into its two round, golden eyes, and as the "tit-tit" of its sharp bill broke the stillness, exclaimed "him eyes just like big ten cents apiece—he mean moose." Even the game leg felt better and at nine we swung to the cabin door, to bring back, as Peter felt sure, "one big bald."

When I think of that morning I wonder sometimes how many of us have experienced that "just naturally can't lose" feeling we occasionally have thrust upon us—we men who don't fit in. Everything works like charm and the joy of living is in our walk, our smile, the very twinkle of our eye. We define a new meaning as to why the world goes on. We are even egotistical enough to thing it was made for ourselves.

Over the brook we went, on—on—on. How that moose led us through swamps, over ridges! Here we would cross the fresh trail of a deer, again the track of a traveling family. "Dat nodder kind moose" Peter would lisp, and the hill would hide our vanishing form.

I knew when the trail became "warm"—when to "get ready"—I saw him the the same moment as Peter. We knew he must have antlers for there were the tell-tale marks on the trees. Just now he was standing to one side of a huge yellow birch. Presently he moved forward, his neck outstretched in the act of feeding—and horns he surely had.

It seemed for the last time I glanced over that rifle. Before the deep echoes came back to me from the sunlit, leafless groves, the first shot had entered the shoulder. The bull moved slowly forward, sank, and the tips of his antlers appeared above a bunch of swale. I cleared deadfalls on the run. Peter was somewheres behind, that was all. Almost on top of that moore my moccasins landed, as summoning his remaining strength he rose to his feet and plunged off at an awkward, rambling trot.

I suppose Peter's fears were resurrected. I am almost afraid mine were, too. Regardless of the fact that I possessed but half a dozen shells, I emptied them, one after another, into the retreating flank. Down! the bull came and I, with my eyes particularly wide open, hastened up, endeavoring as I traveled, to yank out a few remaining Hoxies wrapped up in my hip pocket. Twice that bull went down. Twice he again got up. I had only two shells to my knowledge. The excitement became intense.

Now almost all my shots had been end on, and there is nothing harder than to stop a moose when only his hind-quarter shows. I was determined to have a side shot or none. I circled, on the run, a bunch of swale. Just as I did the bull, some twenty yards ahead, crossed over a tiny brook, glared at a deadfull, and wheeled. Looking round for a place to jump I glared back and fingering that magazine as I never felt it before, I emptied those Hoxies. I was so close I could hear the air "swissh" from the bullet holes. The moose turned once more, endeavored to clear the deadfall and came down to stay. At the same moment I found one remaining shell.

In a few minutes Peter came slouching along. We talked over generalities as one is wont to do on such occasions, but not a word would he say about the shooting. Then while Peter removed the scalp I prepared a fire on the snow as he had showed me how, for, be assured, there is a difference in fires that stay fires when there is two foot of snow beneath. As I mused I unpacked the kettle, filled it at the brook and summoned Peter. Washing his hands in the snow Peter drew close, warmed his hands at the fire and sipped the tea. He looked at the fire, my empty rifle, the steaming scalp of the bull, and then at me. "You make good shot—you kill moose all 'lone—you build fire on snow and boil kettle—some day you make good hunter." Smilingly I parted two pieces of bacon and held them close to the fire. Now there was something to live for. Peter himself has said it.

WOMAN HAS THE ADVANTAGE

My maiden name was Julia Scheffknecht, and my home was in Anderson, Ind. I had a happy childhood. When I was fifteen years old I realized a difference between my brothers and myself, and resented it. They could go about almost as they pleased; I was under strict watch. I grew discontented. I ran away from home.

During all these years the sense that women are slaves to conventionality grew upon me. I looked at men, and thought that their freedom was far superior to my condition. It seemed to me unjust. Besides, I had grown disgusted with the women I knew.

A restless curiosity grew in me to know by experience just what a man's life is. This longing soon took action.

In my first husband's wardrobe I found a blue serge suit, a brown flannel shirt, a black four-in-hand tie and a "pancacke" hat. These I put on. I tucked my hair under the hat and went downtown. No one detected me. I found that my disguise was safe.

In secrecy I began practicing all the little acts of men. I learned to walk with my hands in my pockets, to brush my hair back with a masculine gesture when I took off my hat, and to whistle.

I thought it necessary to learn to smoke, not only cigarettes, but cigars and pipe, all of which I mastered, though I did not like them. Out of a spirit of bravado I went into a saloon and bought a drink of whisky, which nearly choked me. Later I learned to drink it to keep warm.

With $45 in my pocket I climbed on the tender of a fast passenger train bound for Lafayette, Ind., three months ago. When we reached Lafayette I climbed down and landed square in the arms of two yard detectives. I went to jail. My hair fell over my shoulders when I took off my hat. Then I got my first lesson in the advantage of being a woman. They not only released me, but bought me a ticket to Anderson and women's clothes.

In St. Louis, for one week, I learned how great a hardship it is to be a man. I was penniless, homeless and friendless. I walked the streets all day looking for work. From my experience in Indianapolis and Chicago, I know that I could have obtained work immediately as a girl. As a "man," I was unable to find it.

Then I wrote my guardian for money. It came by express order, and was made out to "Mrs. Julia Kittenger-McHenry." I went to the express office and told them that I was Mrs. Kittinger-McHenry's brother-in-law. They refused to give me the money, $24.83. This was the last straw. I went to police headquarters.

"I'm Mrs. McHenry," I told the captain. He was incredulous. I was detained all night.

I was so dismayed by my adventures that I determined to return to skirts. My advice to all women who want to wear the trousers in the family is: "Don't. You don't know what advantages you are giving up."—Julia S. McHenry, in the Denver News.

PAPER BAG COOKING

WONDER-WORKING SYSTEM PERFECTED BY M. SOYER, WORLD'S GREATEST LIVING CHEF

COOKING THE LORDLY TURKEY.

By Martha McCulloch Williams.

The lord of the winter party or wedding anniversary feast is, of course, the turkey—and know ye, good housewives, one and all, that he can be cooked to a delicious turn by M. Soyer's method of paper bag cookery! In fact, the entire dinner can be prepared and cooked to perfection in paper bags, and after it has been eaten to the last turkey bone and last slice of pumpkin pie, the good housewife will not be confronted by a great pile of pots and pans to be cleaned—a task that has taken the edge off the happiness of many a housewife who has served one of her old-time famous meals for her guests, or her children back home to help the old folks celebrate their anniversary.

Grape fruit, with rum, is, to my mind, the ideal appetizer, but if oysters are insisted upon, put three small raw ones in the middle of the prepared fruit and season with salt, pepper, Worcester sauce and tobasco. Keep the oysters very cold, and add them to the fruit very shortly before serving, thus the two flavors remain distinct to accent rather than to muddle each other.

Salted Nuts.—I made two bags—almonds and pecans—and hereafter shall never buy them ready prepared. The almonds were blanched and dried, the pecans, bought ready hulled, picked over, scalded by pouring boiling water through them in a colander, and instantly dried. Then both were put in thickly-buttered bags, set in a very hot oven for half a minute, then the heat was reduced three-quarters, and the nuts left to brown for ten minutes. They came out crisp and beautiful, needing only a sprinkling of salt.

The Toasted Crackers I prepared were tiny oyster crackers, as fresh as possible. They were put in buttered bag, lightly sprinkled after they were in, with melted butter skimmed clean of froth, then given a tablespoonful of grated Parmesan, which was shaken well through them before sealing the bag. Sealed, it went into a very hot oven, which after two minutes had the heat turned as low as possible. Eight minutes of it made them not quite brown enough—a peep-hole in the bag top assured me of that—so I left them in three minutes longer. A few of them stuck together, but in the main, they looked as good as they tasted.

The Turkey.—Choose him as young, as tender, as fresh as you can. But if by ill chance you must take an old bird, therefore a tough one, then, indeed, you will find in paper bag cookery, surcease from the sorrow of toughness. A tough bird will require a lot of grease in the bag with it, also long and slow cooking. But the end will crown the means—he will come forth tender and delicious, also well browned, but not too brown, and simply bursting with juice. Extra care must be taken in trussing him—tie down legs and wings beyond any possibility of springing. Tough fowls have a way of stretching out their joints under the influence of heat, that, without this precaution, may make the legs and wings dangerous to the integrity of the bag.

Get the bird in hand early—the night before if possible. If he comes drawn, so much the better; if in a state of nature, pick, draw and singe at once, taking pains to get off all pinfeathers, and cutting out the oil-bag upon the "parson's nose"—otherwise known as the root of the tail feathers. Wash the bird thoroughly in very cold water. If there is the least sour smell, scald out by pouring through boiling soda water, followed by a cold rinse water. Drain well, wipe dry, inside and out, salt very lightly, and hang up in a cold place until morning—outside, unless the temperature is below freezing, or there is danger of thieves, four of two-footed. A city housewife will do well to cover the turkey while thus hanging out with either a loosely fitting grocer's paper bag or a square crash or cheese cloth. This keeps away soot and dust, which, once settled on the skin, defy washing off. Get the stuffing ready before taking in the bird. Dash cold water over and through it before putting in the stuffing, wipe inside and out with a soft, damp cloth, then resalt but very lightly outside and in.

Since the turkey is apt to require the whole oven and long, slow cooking, better put him on early, and take him up before beginning the other things.

Sweet Potatoes in Syrup.—Choose smooth, even potatoes of medium size, boil twenty minutes, drop in cold water, peel, dip in melted butter, roll in sugar, put into a buttered bag, with sugar, butter and lemon juice enough to make a fairly rich syrup. Seal bag, and cook for twelve minutes in a fairly hot oven. Pour the syrup from the bag around them into a hot dish.

Spanish Onions.—Parboil for fifteen minutes Spanish or Bermuda onions, chill them in cold water, then cut a V out of the hearts. Fill the space with butter, after dusting it well with salt and pepper, put the onions in a bag with a lump of butter and a very little water, seal and cook twenty minutes in a hot oven, or thirty minutes in a very moderate one.

Creamed Salsify.—Boil tender, drop into cold water, peel and cut in two-inch length strips, steep in a dressing of butter and cream, lightly seasoned with pepper and salt. Put in well-greased bag, seal and leave in the oven a few minutes only.

Smothered Chicken.—Have a good-sized broiler cut into joints, taking care not to leave sharp bones to the joints. Salt and pepper them lightly, dredge with flour and lay in a well-greased bag upon thin slices of bacon. Cover with more bacon slices, taking care to keep the chicken spread rather flat. Add a teaspoonful of water, or a couple of peeled and sliced tomatoes. Shreds of green pepper add somewhat of flavor to the tomatoes. Seal in bag and cook for forty minutes, slacking heat almost half after the first five minutes. Make a peep-hole in the upper side of the bag near the middle, and if the bacon and chicken are not as brown as you like, cook five to ten minutes longer. Serve on a hot dish with gravy from the bag.

Good pies demand good crust—shorter than any temper, easier broken than promises. Make it by M. Soyer's recipe, then surely it will be up to grade. Here is the recipe: Take one pound of flour, three-quarters of a pound of butter. Mix the flour with water and sat lightly until the consistency of butter. Leave this dough for half an hour, then flatten with your hand and lay your butter on the top of the paste. Then fold four-corner way, and give it two rolls, as usual. Leave your paste in a cool place for forty-five minutes, and then roll twice more. Leave it for forty-five minutes and then roll twice again.

Bake all your pies in bags; it may seem extravagant, but the gas-saving more than pays for the bags. Use thin pie tins. Roll out and fill as usual. Set pans inside bags and set the bags on trivets. Cook two pies at once, but shift them midway the cooking, from upper to lower shelf, and vice versa. Thus they will brown top and bottom. Grease the bags but lightly underneath; even though they crisp there it does no harm. The essential thing is to keep the upper surface covered and maintain steady heat. Have the oven hot at first, but slack heat after a little—as soon as the bag corners show rather brown. Average pies, with average heat, require twenty-five to thirty minutes.

To make the cider-cup, cut thinly the yellow peel from six oranges and six lemons, squeeze out the juice and put in with the peel and three cups of sugar. Make a gallon of sweet cider very hot, but do not let it boil, pour it upon the peels and juice, and let stand in a cold place for twenty-four hours, stirring it several times. The peel can be strained out, but it looks rather pretty in glasses.

For tea lemonade, take the juice of a dozen well-washed lemons and three sweet oranges, cut the squeezed fruit in rings, and add it to the juice. Put in five cups of sugar and strain over the whole a gallon and a quarter of weak tea, boiling hot, then add a cupful of rum. This also is better for standing—it keeps several days in a cool place. The rum can be omitted if there are scruples regarding it. In that case the strained juice of a pineapple that has been shredded and allowed to stand twenty-four hours in sugar can take its place. Dilute this one-fourth with mineral water in the glasses.

FUNNY BUSINESS DIDN'T PAY

Broadway Comedian Tried It on the Manicure Girl and Got Worst of Bargain.

It doesn't always pay to be too rippingly funny. The other day one of Broadway's brightest little comedians began the day with a green mouldy grouch. By the time he had reached Forty-second street he had quarreled with every one but the subway guard. That individual seemed to be a bit irritable himself. The comedian went into John, the barber's.

"Shave, sir?" asked the barber.

"Naw," snarled the comedian. "I never want a shave at this hour in the morning. I came in for a little merry chatter."

Saying which he plumped himself down in the chair and dragged the apron up under his chin. He waggled [illegible]

"Sure I want my nails fixed," he roared. "And I want 'em fixed quick."

The girl brought her little table, and the rest of her paraphernalia. The grouch dabbled the fingers of one hand in the bowl of water, dried them on the towel, thrust the fingers of the other hand into the bowl, dried them on the towel, and then barked at the girl. "There," said he. "I've been manicured. Best and quickest I've had in a month."

"Yes, sir," said the girl. "Fifty cents, please."

He doesn't precisely know yet why he paid it. But he did pay it. Also, when he left the barber shop he wasn't nearly so grouchy. He told a friend a little later that he didn't think his humor is quite up to par these days.—New York Letter to the Cincinnati Times-Star.

One On The Horse

This narrative is vouched for by the Ottumwa correspondent for the Burlington (Kan.) Republican: "James Mark had the misfortune to lose a fine horse last week. We had a horse that was not doing well, so one day last week we were at the store and told Jim Mark about it, and he said, 'Here take this package of condition powders back with you, and that will fix him all right.' So we gave [illegible] the horse, and then we fixed him a bed of straw. When we went to see the horse next morning he was acting awfully queer, so we went up to the store and told Jim about it, and when we went to leave Jim said: 'Hold on, I am going with you, and maybe I can tell what is the matter with your horse.' When we got to the barn and opened the door we saw the horse sitting down on his bed of straw. [illegible] looked at him and then said: 'Say, where is that package I gave you?' We got it for him, and he looked at it and exclaimed: 'Great heavens, man, I have made a mistake and given you poultry food. Your horse has gone to setting.'"

Yankee Inventions.

"Yankee inventions" meet one at every turn [illegible] one nervous and miserable. To fasten a pair of dress-shirt cuffs, to light a cigar, or even to get powdered soap out of a patent receptacle at a public wash place, one must nowadays be something of a mechanic and carry a pocket kit of tools, which is hard on those unpractical persons who don't possess sufficient mechanical ingenuity [illegible]

AFTER THE GRIP PURIFY THE BLOOD

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are the Best Blood Builder and Will Cure You as They Cured This Woman.

It is of the utmost importance to your health, if you have suffered from the grip, that you cleanse the blood of the lingering germs and put it in condition to resist disease.

After the acute attack the sufferer is left with a debilitated system, is short of breath upon the slightest exertion and is affected by every change of weather. The system is in such a weakened condition that it is powerless to resist the attack of such diseases as pneumonia and bronchitis.

This is a condition which emphatically calls for a tonic for the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine for this purpose for they act directly on the blood which they cleanse of all impurities. They tone up the nerves and give health and strength to the debilitated system.

The debility which follows an attack of the grip can only be cured by making the blood rich and red. This Dr. Williams' Pink Pills never fail to do promptly and it explains how they cured Mrs. F. R. Boyd, of No. 607 South Ninth street, Minneapolis, Minn. She says:

"I was never well after an attack of the grip a few years ago until I took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before this I had found nothing that helped me. I was all run down, pale and thin. My appetite was poor and my head ached continually. I didn't feel like myself at all.

"Someone finally recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to me and I found them just the medicine for my case. They gave me a hearty appetite and a good, clear color. I got back my vitality and was soon a well woman. I can safely say that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do all that is claimed for them. I heartily recommend them."

If you are suffering from after-effects of the grip or other wasting disease, try the remedy that has cured so many stubborn cases, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. A copy of our booklet, "Diseases of the Blood," is free on request.

"That felt pretty good, didn't it?" the mother remarked.

"Yes," was the reply. "But I felt rather fat."

JINGOS DOWNED

HOUSE MAJORITY DECIDE NOT TO VOTE APPROPRIATIONS.

A SAVING OF $40,000,000

Party's Economy Plan Is Carried Out at a Spirited Caucus—Steel Bill Passed, 210 to 109.

Washington, D. C.—There will be no appropriations for battleships or public buildings at this session of congress. This was the decision of the Democrats of the house after a spirited caucus. Elimination of a battleship appropriation was a surprise, the caucus having been called for the purpose of considering a $16,000,000 public building bill, recommended by the committee on public buildings and grounds.

Representative Hobson of Alabama headed a bitter attack on the action, but it was passed 98 to 68.

The savings resulting from this action of the caucus is estimated by the Democratic leaders to aggregate about $40,000,000; $24,000,000 to be required for two modern battleships and $16,000,000 for public buildings. In the case of public buildings, however, there may be some appropriation for emergencies.

The Democratic metal tariff revision to make reductions averaging 35 per cent passed the house by a vote of 210 to 109.

Twenty insurgent Republicans voted for the measure, while the Democratic delegation from Colorado, Representatives Martin, Rucker and Taylor, dissatisfied with the great reduction proposed in the lead tariff, voted against the Democratic majority. The Republicans who supported the bill, all insurgents were:

Representatives Davis and Lindbergh, Minnesota; Haugen, Hubbard and Woods, Iowa; Helgesen, North Dakota; Jackson, Murdock, and Young, Kansas; Kent and Stephens, California; Kinkaid, Norris and Sloan, Nebraska; Lafferty, Oregon; La Follette and Warburton, Washington; Lenroot, Morse and Nelson, Wisconsin.

Insurgents Opposed.

The insurgent Republicans who voted against its passage were:

Representatives Anderson, Miller, Volstead and Steenerson, Minnesota; Cooper, Esch and Koop, Wisconsin; French, Idaho; Good, Green, Kendall, Kennedy and Pickett, Iowa; Hayes, California.

The bill will face a stormy reception in the senate. It will reach the senate today and be referred to the finance committee. Both Republican and Democratic senators have been deferring other legislation with a view to concentrating attention on the tariff measures as they emerge from the house, but no course of action has been mapped out.

Hope for Coalition.

The Democrats expressed hope that the progressive Republicans would join with them in the same coalition that enabled the senate to put through the tariff bills at the extra session and to leave the issue squarely up to the president. The progressive Republicans have not held any conference as to their attitude. There are differing individual views among them as to the steel tariff that may interfere with a full alignment on this measure when it comes up for a vote.

Senator Cummins has a bill which he is ready to propose as a substitute for the house measure, largely based on his opposition to the house bills transformation of specific duties into ad valorem duties. Other progressive senators have propositions to offer when steel revision is ready to be fought out on the floor of the senate.

Lorimer Is Cross Examined.

Senator Lorimer's relations with Lee O'Neill Browne, Democratic leader of the Illinois legislature, and others prominent in the senator's election, was the subject of cross examination of the senator before the senate Lorimer investigating committee.

The senate refused by a vote of 17 to 30 to pass a bill authorizing the sale of 1,100,000 acres of fertile unalloted land in the Standing Rock Indian reservation in North and South Dakota.

The bill was criticized by Senators Bacon, Bailey, Heyburn and Root, and supported by Senators Gamble, Crawford, Dixon and Gronna.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of War Stimson, acting upon an exhaustive report from the general staff, has decided that no less than sixteen, and probably eighteen, existing army posts should at once be abandoned "in order to put an end to the extravagance and inefficiency resulting from improper distribution of the mobile army."

The posts condemned are: Apache, Ariz.; Boise barracks, Idaho; Brady, Mich.; Clark, Texas; George Wright, Washington; Jay, New York; Lincoln, North Dakota; Logan H. Roots, Ark.; McIntosh, Texas; Mackenzie, Wyoming; Madison barracks, New York; Meade, South Dakota; Niagara, New York; Ontario, New Rork; Wayne, Mich.; Whipple barracks, Ariz.; William Henry Harrison, Mont.; and Yellowstone, Wyo. Of Fort Apache it is said a possibility of Indian trouble near this post still exists and that Fort Jay might be retained as headquarters of the eastern division and as the site of the eastern military prison.

Posts to Be Retained.

There is another formidable list of posts which, while not recommended for immediate abandonment, are declared [illegible] to be located with a view of securing economy of administration and supply, or a full measure of military effectiveness. Consequently their garrisons will not be increased and ultimately will be withdrawn to such concentration centers as congress may authorize. These posts are: Ethan Allen, Vermont; Plattsburg barracks, New York; Robinson, Nebraska; Missoula, Montana; Logan, Colorado; Douglas, Utah; and D. A. Russell, Wyoming. The latter post is shown to have cost to date $4,925,486. It is said not to be located with a view to maximum economy or strategic effectiveness.

Special Stations to Go.

The principal object is to dispose of the present small army with distinct reference to its mission in case of war. This first involves adequate forces for foreign garrisons, which cannot be reinforced from the United States after the outbreak of hostilities. With the remainder of the army a mobile force is to be organized and distributed among about eight great strategical points in the United States instead of scattered in forty-nine posts, as now.

Two or three of these groups would be on a line between the St. Lawrence and Atlanta, covering the Atlantic seaboard; two or three groups would be on the line between Puget Sound and Los Angeles, covering the Pacific seaboard; at least two groups between the Great Lakes and the Rio Grande, serving as first reserves for either seaboard and for the development of the national guard and volunteer forces to be organized in the interior.

By the concentration of the army in eight posts, it is declared, the annual cost of maintenance of the army would be reduced about $5,500,000.

Snelling Mentioned.

Next comes a process of heavy elimination, for it is declared that probably one only of the following posts should be retained, Benjamin Harrison, Indiana; Columbus barracks, Ohio; Fort Sheridan, Illinois; Fort Des Moines, Iowa; Crook, Nebraska; Omaha, Nebraska; Leavenworth, Kansas; Riley, Kansas; Snelling, Minn.; Jefferson barracks, Missouri. Snelling and Jefferson barracks might be retained if it were decided to make them stations of all arms.

Four lucky posts recommended for retention are: Fort Sill, Oklahoma, which is peculiarly adapted for use as a school of artillery and musketry fire; Forts Bliss, Texas and Huschuca, Arizona needed as cavalry outposts for some time on the southern border, and Fort Myer, Virginia, where it probably will be necessary to retain a small garrison near the national capital for escort duty and other ceremonial purposes.

The report declares that succeeding secretaries of war have been hampered in getting rid of useless and expensive posts by local and political influences. It is declared that no less than $30,000,000 has been spent on such posts in the last ten years and every dollar so expended became an argument against their abandonment.

Democrats Amend Rules of House.

Washington, Feb. 5.—A lively fight in the house over the rules resulted in an amendment offered by Representative Henry of Texas being adopted by a vote of 150 to 100 after heated comparisons of "Underwoodism" with "Cannonism" and "Reedism" had been made by leaders on both sides. The present operation of the rule to discharge committees instead of operating to prevent the "killing" of bills in committees, has resulted in a congestion of business on the so-called "discharge days."

Washington, D. C. — The pension appropriation bill, carrying about $152,000,000, passed the house by a vote of 245 to 33, after several southern democrats had demanded a roll call vote. A provision excluding pensioners who live out of the United States was defeated by 160 to 133. The bill abolishes seventeen pension agencies which have been maintained in different cities.

ICE BRIDGE FALLS

MAN, WOMAN AND BOY LOSE THRILLING BATTLE FOR LIFE IN RAGING TORRENT.

THREE PERSONS PERISH

Four Others on Jam Reach Shore Safely.—Thousands Witness Tragedy from Banks and Bridges.

Niagara Falls, N. Y.—The great ice bridge that has choked the river channel between the cataract and the upper bridge below the falls for the last three weeks broke and went down the river, taking with it to their death, a man and woman, Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Stanton of Toronto, and Burrell Heacock, 17 years old, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Four other persons were on the ice at the time, but managed to get ashore in safety.

The bridge was considered perfectly safe. For weeks the great fields of ice had been coming down the river, piling up against the barrier until it was from 60 to 80 feet thick and under the influence of zero weather the great mass had become firmly anchored to the shore. The jam in some places was a quarter of a mile in breadth. For two weeks it had offered safe passage to the hardy and an immense crowd of excursionists came to view the winter wonder of the river.

Man and Boy Scorn Rescue.

Somewhere deep in the great whirl pool sleeps the man, identified as Mr. Stanton, who twice put aside chances of rescue in order to remain with his terror-stricken wife, and who, in the shadow of death—just at the break in the rapids—spurned assistance for himself and attempted to bind about the woman's body a rope dangling from the lower steel arch bridge. The lad, Burrell Heacock, was cast in the same mould. Had he not turned back on the ice to give assistance to the man he, too, might have made the shore.

Word that the ice bridge had gone out flashed through the city like wildfire and within a short time the American shore of the river was lined by thousands of people who witnessed the tragedy being enacted in the deep ravine below them.

WOODMEN MAY SECEDE

Minneapolis, Minn.—A wagon load of mail was sent out by the Modern Woodmen assembly, organized Jan. 31, to fight against the adoption of the insurance rates provided for in the Mobile bill. The mass of mail was addressed to leading Woodmen officials and leaders throughout the country, and contained 45,000 circulars calling upon them to send delegates to the national convention to be held in Minneapolis on Washington's birthday, Feb. 22.

The document sent out is voluminous, printed in the form of a three-column, four-page paper, and bears the heading, "The Veto." It gives the table of insurance rates established by the Mobile bill and contains a denunciation of the proceedings of the Chicago convention. It appeals to members not to allow their insurance to lapse, and contains a statement by A. L. Sundean, leader of the opposition to the rate increase at Chicago, discouraging secession.

The call aims to organize every state by legislative districts to fight the adoption of the Mobile bill by different legislatures.

SUBMARINE BOAT SUNK

FOURTEEN MEN PERISH IN BRITISH CRAFT AFTER COLLISION WITH GUNBOAT.

Many Lives Lost in Similar Accidents—Vessels of Same Type Have Figured in Long List of Mishaps.

Portsmouth, England.—The British submarine, A3 sank after a collision with the British gunboat Hazzard, off the eastern end of the Isle of Wight. A cruiser is standing by.

The commander-in-chief the Portsmouth division of the British navy has confirmed the flooding of the submarine "A3" and the drowning of her entire crew.

The submarine "A3," which went out of the harbor this morning to carry out a series of diving and torpedo exercises, sank like a stone immediately after her collision with the gunboat Hazard.

A big escape of gas which was observed on the surface immediately after the boat sank indicates that the vessel filled with water. The submarine lies on the Princess shoal, almost on the same spot where the submarine "A1" was lost with all hands March 18, 1904.

British submarines belonging to the "A" class have been singularly unfortunate. The "A5" had six men killed and 12 injured by an explosion at Queenstown, Feb. 16, 1905. The "A8" sank off Portsmouth on June 8, 1905, when 14 men out of her crew of 18 lost their lives. The "A4" sank during the manoeuvers at Portsmouth on Nov. 16 of the same year, but the whole of her crew were rescued with considerable difficulty. The "A1" had seven of her crew badly injured by an explosion on Aug. 6, 1910.

This class of boat is a single screw submersible of a modified hull and type with a length of 100 feet and beam of 12 feet 8 inches. Their displacement is 180 tons. They are driven by gasoline motors when on the surface of the water and by electric motors when submerged. They have a surface speed of 12 knots and a submerged speed of 8 knots. The motors develop 500 indicated horse power on the surface and 150 horse power when submerged. Their armament consists of two torpedo tubes.

New York, N. Y. — The Hamburg-American line steamer Allegheny which left here for Central America and the West Indies sank 75 miles east-northeast of Cape Henry, off the Virginia coast, after a collision with the British steamer Pomaron, according to wireless dispatches.

The Pomaron, with the Allegheny's passengers and crew, numbering 52, on board and convoyed by the revenue cutter Onondaga, is making slowly for port, the message said. The Pomaron's bow was stove in, but the wireless advices were that she was apparently holding well through a moderate sea with a strong northwesterly breeze blowing.

MANCHU THRONE SUBMIT

Empress Dowager Instructs Premier Yuan to Establish Republic.

Pekin, China. — The empress dowager has issued an edict instructing Premier Yuan Shi Kai to establish a republic in co-operation with the southern republicans.

The edict has not yet been published and it is expected that it will be kept more or less secret so far as the public is concerned until arrangements in the south have been completed.

Yuan Shi Kai is now endeavoring to persuade the Nanking government to hand over the control of affairs to enable him to carry on the administration of the whole empire until the national convention appoints a permanent government and adopts a constitution.

It is doubted here that the republicans in Nanking will consent to this. It is believed that the only solution possible is the creation of two provisional governments and the continuance of temporary control.

LAFOLETTE FIRM

FIRST STATEMENT ISSUED IN WASHINGTON BY HIS CAMPAIGN MANAGER.

LOSES ILLINOIS SUPPORT

Medill McCormick's Call to the Illinois Progressive League Asks Forces to Turn to Roosevelt.

Washington, D. C. — Senator La Follette, through his campaign manager announced that he would not withdraw from the race for the Republican nomination for president.

On the heels of his declaration, one of his most ardent supporters, President Medill McCormick of the Illinois Progressive Republican League, issued a call to the Illinois Progressives to desert the La Follette standard and work for a solid Roosevelt delegation from Illinois in the Chicago convention.

The two statements created a flurry in progressive political circles. The first statement was made for Senator La Follette by Colonel W. L. Houser, his manager and chairman of the National Republican committee. It read in part as follows:

Colonel Houser's Statement.

"Senator La Follette finds it necessary to take a few weeks' rest. This may prevent his making speeches in the states which are to hold early primaries."

It requests Mr. La Follette's friends in those states to make a campaign for him, if they cannot do it in any other way, by instructing delegates for the progressive principles in general which the senator represents.

The statement concludes:

"Though Senator La Follette finds his plans interfered with by his temporary indisposition, his name will be presented to the national Republican convention and delegates will make an aggressive contest for his nomination and for a strong progressive platform.

"Whatever time Senator La Follette can devote to the campaign after taking a needed rest for a few weeks will be given subject to such demands as his official duties make upon him."

Medill McCormick's Call.

Mr. McCormick's call to the members of the Illinois Progressive Republican league was made public an hour later.

It was telegraphed to the league headquarters in Chicago and was as follows:

"Considering all the circumstances, including Senator La Follette's physical condition, in the opinion of the overwhelming majority of progressive Republican members of both houses of congress, progressives in Illinois must unite to send Roosevelt delegates to the next national Republican convention.

"With Roosevelt and Jones the progressives can sweep Illinois and establish in state and nation progressive administrations, which will substitute a policy of positive leadership for a policy of compromise with principle and concession to special interests."

Mr. Jones is the progressive Republican candidate for the gubernatorial nomination in Illinois.

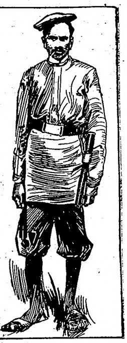
TYPICAL "BOBBY" OF DELHI

One of the Indian Policemen Who Assisted in the Enthusiastic Reception of King and Queen.

Delhi, India.—No more enthusiastic reception could be desired than that accorded King George of England in his recent visit to his Indian empire, where he was crowned Emperor with true oriental splendor at Delhi.

When his entry into this historic city was made 101 guns belched forth their salute to the King-Emperor and the Queen-Empress as they arrived from Bombay, where they also were given an enthusiastic greeting. Throughout India a general holiday had been proclaimed and the spirit of festivity and rejoicing extended over the great empire, with its teeming population of 232,000,000 souls.



An Indian Policeman.

In providing guards of honor for the royal couple no distinction was made between native troops and soldiers from Great Britain. The entire army of occupation consists of 234,000 men, more than 156,000 of whom are natives. While dark hints as to their loyalty have been thrown out for several years, there was no suggestion of lack of fealty in the great displays that marked the durbar, and the crowning of an English King as Emperor in India will tend to cement the bonds of allegiance between the Oriental empire and Great Britain.

GUARD PANAMA CANAL LOCKS

Spring Buffer Stringers That Will Protect Vessels and Approach Walls in the Big Waterway.

Colon.—Fenders in the form of a continuous line of beams or stringers, 12x16 inches, in section, suspended by short chains or hangers and bearing every five feet against castings, supported by four helical springs, placed in cups in the concrete, will protect the walls of the approaches to the Panama canal locks against damage from the ships.

The approach to the locks is formed by an extension of the center wall to a distance varying from 1,445 to 1,700 feet beyond the first lock lock gates, and by wing walls which make an angle of about thirty degrees with the outside walls and extend three to four hundred feet beyond them. When the ships bump against these walls as they are hauled into the locks by the electric towing locomotives, the stringers will take the shock. The hangers are located every fifteen feet along the walls. The line of stringers on the lower approach walls at Gatun will have a length of 1,202 feet, and the shortest line will be 970 feet in length, on the upper approach wall at Gatun. In all the locks there will be forty-eight rows of stringers, requiring 31,659 feet of timber. On all the walls but the upper ones of the Miraflores and Pedro Miguel locks there will be a double line of buffers on each wall, the upper buffer being placed two and one-half feet below the top of the wall, and the second one ten feet below the top. The buffer castings required will weigh 2,659,904 pounds.

Hairpins Make Car Go.

Athol, Mass.—On an afternoon run of a local car several women sacrificed their hairpins, at the peril of losing their "rats," that the car might make the run.

The car developed fuse trouble. The motorman found that short pieces of metal were necessary to make fuse connections. Being a resourceful man, he opened the front door and asked for few hairpins.

With smiles several women pulled hairpins from their tresses and, by plugging in one hairpin after another, he managed to keep the current on.

HELD PRISONERS

AGED COUPLE NEAR MABEL, MINN., KEPT ON FARM, AWAY FROM WORLD.

TWIN SONS BOTH INSANE

When Twin Brothers Slaughter Cattle and Let Carcasses Lie, County Authorities Act and Send Them to the Asylum.

Preston.—Held prisoners two years on their farm by their twin sons, both of whom were demented, was the experience of M. O. Ladsten and his wife, who live eight miles north of Mabel. That they were virtually in captivity became known when Sheriff Blexrud and four deputies went to the farm and brought all four of the family to this city for examination as to their sanity.

Both sons, who are thirty years old, were found to be demented. They will be taken to the state hospital at Rochester. The aged parents, who had been completely under their sons' domination, appeared intelligent and sound of mind. The sons were sent to the state asylum.

Home Barred to All.

Two years ago the world was shut out of the home by the two sons. None of the family went anywhere; no persons were allowed to approach the house. Obsessed of the idea that they were under command not to sell and of the products of the farm or their property, or to buy anything, they had not threshed their grain in two seasons, nor had they bought flour, coffee or any other of the common necessaries of the household. They ground their own cornmeal and subsisted on eggs, milk and other products that they had raised.

Though neighbors marveled at their strange way of living, none was so near as to gain much insight into the mental condition of the men and the situation of the parents. The sons were seen daily about the farm, always seemingly melancholy and brooding.

Cattle Are Shot.

The climax came, however, when two weeks ago, the sons, armed with revolvers, went among their cattle, deliberately shot and killed fifteen head, dragged the carcasses to a part of the farm farthest distant from the house, and left them there. Asked why they did so, they declared they had no right to sell the cattle. Then the authorities were appealed to and took action.

ARREST DUMAS WITNESS

Bartender Believed to Have Served Drinks at Robbery Meeting.

Bemidji. — Henry Wise, the bartender who is presumed to have served the drinks in the John C. Larson saloon here at the time Dr. D. F. Dumas, Mike Davis, Martin Behan and Bert Smyth are alleged to have held their famous "Puposky robbery" meeting here last June, has been taken in charge by Sheriff Hazen on a bench warrant.

Wise was wanted as a witness by the state at the time of the Dumas trial here last October, and a subpoena was served on him to appear before the grand jury which indicted Dumas, but Wise forgot the subpoena, or decided to ignore it, for when the grand jury began considering the charges against Dr. Dumas, Mike Davis and Martin Behan, Wise could not be found. Wise reappeared in Bemidji and was promptly taken into custody.

Wise is now wanted as a witness in a pending charge against Dr. Dumas, and it is more than likely that he will be subpoenaed by the government as a witness when the federal charge against the doctor is taken up at Fergus Falls.

FARM COURSE CORN SHOW

Many Prizes Offered for Contest in March at Alexandria.

Alexandria.—A short course for farmers, at which especial attention will be given to corn, will open in the Alexandria high school on March 11. An exhibit of corn will be held. In each class there will be four prizes for the best ten ears, $5 for first, $4 for second and $3 for third, and three fourth prizes at $1 each. The A. H. Gregersen company of this city offers a $25 silver cup as a sweepstakes prize for the best ten ears of any variety. Over fifty farmers have already signified their intention of taking the short course.

Carl Hanson, bartender of the only saloon at Garfield, six miles west, has been held to the grand jury on a charge of selling liquor to minors.

The Alexandria Commercial club will hold a boosters' meeting on the evening of Feb. 12. The principal speaker will be W. L. Harris of Minneapolis.

Fire Razes Cloquet Hospital.

Cloquet. — Fire of an unknown origin completely destroyed the Cloquet hospital and four patients on an upper floor had narrow escapes from suffocation, three of them being carried down a ladder unconscious. There were 11 patients in the hospital, seven on the first floor and four men upstairs. Those on the first floor were removed without trouble, but the fire spread so rapidly that a ladder was necessary for those on the upper floor. Before they could be carried away three of them had succumbed.

Another Mine In Sight.

Brainerd.—The Adams mine, two and one-half miles south of Deerwood, is down a depth of fifty feet. A seam of gravel was struck and the huge tube of cement shot down seven feet in one plunge and only went about a quarter of an inch out of plumb. This drop is a record on the Cuyuna iron range. It is reliably reported that another mine will shortly be opened near the Adams mine by [illegible] ment company.

CORN AT $1.50 PER EAR

Dan Derby's Prize Exhibits Will Be Planted on State Land.

Minneapolis. — What is considered by agricultural college experts as the best 10 ears of corn ever grown and placed on exhibit in Minnesota have been bought by O. M. Olson, director of state demonstration farm work, to be planted on one of the demonstration farms this spring as a foundation stock for better seed. The 10 ears cost Mr. Olson just $1.50 apiece.

This prize exhibit of corn was grown by Dan Derby, a farmer living nine miles east of Pine Island, and entered at the Pine Island short course show. In competition with 60 other entries, this exhibit won a $350 wooden silo given by the Pine Island Better Farming association as a sweepstakes prize to $600 in prizes for various exhibits. When sold at auction, Mr. Olson succeeded in getting them for $15, after the sharpest bidding.

This is not the only prize that Mr. Derby has carried home with him. At the Kasson short course, with another 10 ears, so like the first 10 that they could not be distinguished from them, he won the sweepstakes prize, a $65 hard coal stove, donated by two Kasson banks. For the best 25 ears of corn at Kasson, he also won a $20 Jersey-Duroc pig. Mr. Olson also bought the 10 ear exhibit at Kasson for $15. The corn is a highly developed strain of Minnesota No. 13 corn, a variety originated at the Minnesota experiment station, and used as a type ear by the United State department of agriculture.

MINISTER IS EXPELLED

Charges Against Rev. Mr. Foster, of Fulda, Sustained by Presbytery.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—At a meeting just held here by the Presbytery of Sioux Falls, the former action of the presbytery in suspending from the church for one year Rev. Frank Leighton Foster, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Fulda, Minn., was affirmed.

In the fall of 1910 Rev. Mr. Foster was tried by the Sioux Falls presbytery and found guilty of conduct unbecoming a minister of the gospel, and suspended for one year, with the privilege of producing new evidence that might be in his favor. The presbytery at the first trial based its decision mainly on the decree of divorce granted by the Supreme Court of the State of New York to the wife of Foster on statutory grounds.

At a meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of South Dakota, at Madison, a few weeks ago, Mr. Foster filed an appeal for a new trial, on the ground that new evidence had been discovered that would clear him of all charges. The request was granted and the case referred back to the Presbytery of Sioux Falls for retrial.

Farmers' Insurance Company Wins in Carlton County Case.

St. Paul.—Foley Brothers, Larsen & Co. and other contractors, building a railroad through Carlton county into Duluth, must pay damages to the Carlton County Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance company for a loss sustained on property belonging to S. B. Smith, according to an opinion handed down by the state supreme court.

Drinking Less Beer.

St. Paul.—Minnesota people are not drinking so much beer as formerly, according to figures announced by the United States internal revenue department. The receipts of the department since July 1, 1911, were $1,191,728.58, a decrease of $253,888.05 from that of the corresponding seven months of the previous fiscal year. ADOPTED INDIAN

WHITE EARTH CHIEF TESTIFIES REGARDING ALLOTMENT OFFERED CONGRESSMAN.

WHITE EARTH INQUIRY

Fred Dennis, Once Secretary to Congressman—Says an Application Was Signed to Please the Indians.

Minneapolis. —Representative Steenerson's statement in Washington that he had made an application for an allotment on the White Earth reservation, following the passage of the Steenerson act, as a matter of courtesy to the Indians who had adopted him into their tribe, was supported before the Indian investigating committee when Mr. Steenerson's former secretary, Fred Dennis, of Detroit, Minn., was called as a witness.

Mr. Dennis, after identifying Mr. Steenerson's signature to a paper which was then introduced in evidence by the attorneys of the department of justice as an application for a tract of 166 acres on the reservation, testified that Mr. Steenerson had been asked to take the land at the annual tribal celebration in 1905, by Chief Michi-chigesik; that he had declined to take it then, saying that he would "take the land in his heart;" and that he signed the application only when it was later sent to him at Washington with the statement that its refusal would offend the Indians.

Never Gone to Land.

Mr. Dennis declared that Mr. Steenerson had never gone on the land to select the tract, the application having been made out for him. Chief Michi-chi-gesik, on the occasion of Mr. Steenerson's adoption, had suggested, according to Mr. Dennis, that Mr. Steenerson accept his own tract.

Mr. Steenerson's Washington statement with reference to the application had been called out by the published report that the attorneys of the department of justice were seeking to prove before the investigating committee that the Steenerson act was one of a series which led to the defrauding of the Indians of the reservation and that they would introduce what purported to be his application for land under the act which bears his name.

Adoption Declared Resented.

Rev. Charles Wright, son of Chief White Cloud, who is recognized by the full bloods as their chief, said that Mr. Steenerson's adoption into the tribe had been resented. He declared that he had protested to the Indian commissioner when he heard that a proffer of land had been made to Mr. Steenerson, saying that Mr. Steenerson was a well-to-do man who did not need the land, while many Mille Lac Indians were in a condition of destitution.

The witness testified that he had been opposed to the adoption of Mr. Steenerson into the tribe as a veteran for securing the passage of the act giving the Indians their allotments, because he had believed that there already was a law to that effect.

He said he believed the allotments would have been secured without the act. The chief declined to agree with Gus Beaulieu, who questioned him, that Mr. Steenerson's act had made good what had been only a promise. The chief said he did not attend the council which adopted Mr. Steenerson.

Edward Santwilier, a railway conductor of Minneapolis, also testified that Agent Michelet had volunteered to get him fee simple patents to his allotments for $10. He said he discovered that it was not necessary to pay the commission and, on telling Michelet so, the latter admitted that it was not, but that he had asked it for assistance in hurrying the patents through. At that time, he stated, he was not of age, but he would not testify that Michelet knew of that fact.

Rev. Charles Wright related experiences which revealed that full blood Chippewas of the reservation, who particularly look to him as a chief, though himself of mixed blood, were playing a subordinate role in the Indian politics of the reservation. He declared that he had been offered a $5,000 stand of pine if he "would let the full bloods alone." President Roosevelt, he said, had declined to see him when he went to Washington on Indian matters, though armed with letters of introduction from Governor Johnson and Senator Nelson, unless the Indian office assented, and the Indian office had written him that it would not be convenient for the president to see him.

Farmers' Club Formed.

Can Search for Liquors.

St. Paul.—Executing a search warrant for seizing of intoxicating liquors, alleged to be held for sale contrary to law, imposes no liability upon a city marshal, the state supreme court held. J. M. Ingraham, owner of a hotel at Sandstone, brought suit against Maggie Booten, wife of the marshal there, and eighteen citizens who had been sworn in as deputies to help search the premises, alleging he had been injured by the raid. Mr. Booten died before the suit was instituted, hence his wife was named as a defendant.

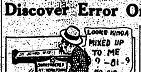
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Discover Error On Cannon Trophy



LOOKS KINDA MIXED UP TO ME ?-81-? NO SIR-
ST JOHNS 1775
SURRENDERED AT YORKTOWN 1775

WASHINGTON.—Like a jaunty little watchdog at the right of the God of War there stands at one of the entrances to the war department a trim little cannon. It is a pigmy among the giant trophies of mighty guns that surround the building, but it has some history of its own.

It was the first cannon captured by the Americans from the British in the Revolutionary war, though it has not been so officially placed upon the records. It was captured by the great patriot-traitor general, Benedict Arnold.

It has, in a dozen years been passed by more army and navy officers and other notables of high mark and distinction than any gun in the United States. Yet in all this time that little gun has borne a marked error of history that it flaunted boldly on a large name plate—an error so plain that it should have been detected immediately by any passing high school cadet.

The gun is a bronze six-pounder, built in Holland in 1747 for King George of England. It is a little under six feet long and is about three and a half inches in caliber.

Deeply cut along the barrel near the muzzle end is the following: "Surrendered by the Capitulation of St. Johns, 1775." But on a large metal plate sunk in the national shield, on which the gun is mounted, is this conflicting statement: "Revolutionary Trophy; Surrendered at Yorktown, 1775."

Thus the little gun appears to have been captured twice—and, further, it would appear to have been captured at Yorktown six years before there was any fighting at that point. The error remained for 12 years undetected.

Capt. U. S. Grant, third superintendent of the building, has corrected the error at last.

"Beyond doubt," said Captain Grant, "the gun was captured on some of the adventurous expeditions made by the early revolutionists in 1775."

A few days after Ethan Allen captured Ticonderoga, which had no real cannon, he and Benedict Arnold, then the most adventurous of the American patriots, had a quarrel. Arnold took a band of riflemen who adhered to him and, going down Lake Champlain, invaded Canada and captured as his first triumph the town of St. John's.

"Grizzly" Danced By Capital Society

IN SPITE of the intensely cold winter weather the social season in Washington was at its height New Year's week, which was an exceptionally gay one, beginning and ending with a dance, the Charity ball Monday and the second hop of the season at the navy yard.

Among the many other important functions of the week were the diplomatic reception at the White House on Tuesday night, which went down in the social annals of the national capital as one of the most resplendent ever held there, and the many dinners and several receptions in honor of the American ambassador to Great Britain and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, who are being extensively entertained during their stay.

A remarkable assemblage of social lights from other cities graced the reception at the White House Tuesday, and conspicuous among them was the famous Mrs. Jack Gardner of Boston.

Mrs. Hugh Roland French created something of a sensation that evening in the first "harem skirt" to appear at a social function in Washington. Hitherto this somewhat startling innovation in feminine attire has been restricted to the stage.

Mrs. French, who is the wife of Captain French of the British army, was formerly Miss Ida Wynne, daughter of the former American consul general at London.

Her gown on this occasion was of black velvet and white lace, and presented no unusual feature for customary evening attire until the wearer moved about. Then it showed at each step the division of the skirt at the bottom, but it must be admitted in a much less revealing manner than has been advertised for the fashion.

WE'VE COME TO STAY!

It seems the new-style dances of the season, the "Turkey Trot," the "Grizzly Bear" and the like have come to stay in Washington, despite the ban which has been placed upon them by some of the more conservative. After the dances at the Barracks and Fort Myer a week or so ago, some of the mothers of debutantes of this year and last, banded themselves together for the purpose of eliminating these dances from the program of any balls which their daughters were to attend in the future, but so far their campaign has apparently been of no avail. Certainly the "Grizzly," the "Turkey" and the "Spanish Boston" were much in evidence this week. The debutante who can boast these accomplishments, has no lack of partners.

The president and Mrs. Taft occupied the box set aside for them at the ball Monday evening for more than an hour.

New Ptarmigan Species Discovered

WHILE on an expedition for the Smithsonian institution in the Aleutian islands for the purpose of gathering material for the continuation of the "Life History of North American Birds," A. C. Bent discovered a subspecies of ptarmigan, to be known as the Tanaga ptarmigan. The ptarmigan belong to the same general group with the domestic fowl. They are circumpolar in distribution, but are found principally in North American, and are represented by some 15 known species and subspecies.

A striking seasonal change of plumage which is perhaps more pronounced than that exhibited by any other birds, takes place among the ptarmigan. In most species there are three, or even four, complete changes of plumage; that of winter being chiefly pure white, while in other seasons it varies to brown, buff, gray or black. Living as these birds do in the arctic regions and in rugged snow-capped mountains, the changes in plumage affords efficient protection from their many enemies, since they harmonize in color with their surroundings.

The new subspecies, described by Mr. Bent, was found on Tanaga island, one of the Aleutian chain, Alaska, and takes its common name from that place, although scientifically it is named after Dr. Leonard C. Sanford, and will be known as lagopus sanfordi. Ptarmigan were particularly tame and abundant on Tanaga island, and good series of the birds and nests were collected for the National museum. As the collecting was done in June, most of the specimens secured were in summer plumage, which in general tone is a light grayish buff, paler on the throat, chest, rump and upper tail coverts.

The pamphlet (publication No. 2,066 of the Smithsonian miscellaneous collections) describing this bird is quite technical and intended primarily for ornithologists and zoologists. Specimens of one species of this interesting game bird can be seen in the children's room of the Smithsonian building.

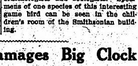
Greedy Hawk Damages Big Clock

THE hawk whose frequent excursions from his aerie in Smithsonian park to the relay station for carrier pigeons in the postoffice tower have furnished him prey and food in the winter season of scarcity, has tried to stop the post office clock.

Perhaps finding that the hour of his depredations was established, and the clock watched by his anticipated victims, so that they might evade his sudden swooping down upon them, he has thrown the plucked corpse of a pigeon which had satisfied his appetite into the back of the dial of the timepiece.

Had the body lodged between the hands, the perfectly balanced mechanism must have stopped. The body appears to have stuck on the pin, in the very center of the dial, which holds the hands in place and operates their movement round the face of the clock.

To remove the corpse from the clock offers a big difficulty to the keepers of the building. It will probably be necessary to remove one of the glass panels in the clock dial, to get at the intruding substance, unless the movement of the hands finally dislodges it. This explains the antics of the clock recently.



Severe cold and the depredations of the hawk have brought death to many pigeons who have sought shelter in the high tower. Bodies of four pigeons were found in the snow when it was recently removed from the slanting glass roof over the court of the big building.

Winging their flight for the refuge promised by the tower in a half frozen condition, it is probable that the pigeons struck their heads against the stone upright of the tower, were stunned by the impact and fell helpless to the roof below, freezing to death before they could recover the power to move.

The Love Story of A Gray Jacket

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail, and arriving at the Minor place, Wayne meets Miss Minor and Mrs. Bungay, and later Edith appears. Wayne's detachment is besieged by guerrillas. Brennan and his men arrive and aid in repelling the invaders until a rescuing party of bluecoats reach the scene.

CHAPTER XXXII.—Continued.

"Damn ye, Red told you not to fire!" he yelled. "Come on, you dogs! You could eat 'em up if ye wasn't sich blamed cowards. There's only two, and we'll hang them yet."

He leaped straight up the broad steps, his long cavalry sabre in hand, while a dozen of the boldest followed him. Brennan swung his sword high over head, grasping it with both hands for a death-blow, even as I thrust directly at the fellow's throat. The uplifted blade struck the chain of the hanging lamp, snapped at the hilt, and losing his balance the Major plunged headlong into the ruck beneath. The downward fall of his body swept the stairs.

As I stood there, panting and breathless, a woman rushed downward. Believing she would throw herself into that tangled mass below, I instantly caught her to me.

"Don't," I cried anxiously. "You cannot help him. For God's sake go back where you were."

"It is not that," she exclaimed, her voice thrilling with excitement. "Oh, Captain Wayne, do you not hear the bugles?"

As by magic those hateful faces vanished, disappearing by means of every opening leading out from the hall, and when the cheering blue-coats surged in through the broken door, I was yet standing there, appearently alone but for the dead, leaning weak and breathless against the wall, my arm about Edith Brennan.

CHAPTER XXXIII

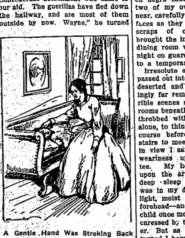
After the Struggle.

A young officer, whose red face was rendered extremely conspicuous by the blue of his uniform, led the rush of his soldiers as they came tumbling gallantly into the hall.

"Up there, men!" he cried, catching sight of me, and pointing. "Get that Johnny with the girl."

As they sprang eagerly forward over the dead bodies littering the floor at the foot of the stairs, Brennan scrambled unsteadily to his feet, and halted them with imperious gesture.

"Leave him alone!" he commanded. "That is the commander of the Confederate detachment who came to our aid. The guerillas have fled down the hallway, and are most of them outside by now. Wayne," he turned and glanced up at us, his face instantly darkening at the tableau, "kindly assist the ladies to descend; we must get them out of this shambles."



A Gentle Hand Was Stroking Back the Hair From Off My Temples.

He lifted them one by one and with ceremonious politeness across the ghastly pile of dead and wounded men.

"Escort them to the library," he suggested, as I hesitated. "That room will probably be found clear."

I was somewhat surprised that Brennan should not have come personally to the aid of his wife, but as he ignored her presence utterly, I at once offered her my arm, and silently led the way to the room designated, the others following as best they might. The apartment was unoccupied, exhibiting no signs of the late struggle, and I found comfortable resting places for all. Miss Minor was yet sobbing softly, her face hidden upon her mother's shoulder, and I felt constrained to speak with her [illegible]

[illegible] tenant Caton, and will bring you word."

She thanked me with a glance of her dark eyes clouded with tears, but as I turned hastily away to execute this errand, Mrs. Brennan laid restraining hand upon my arm.

"Captain Wayne," she said with much seriousness, "you are very unselfish, but you must not go until your own wounds have been attended to; they may be far more serious than you apprehend."

As I gazed at her, surprised by the anxiety she so openly displayed, I chanced to behold myself reflected within a large mirror directly across the room. One glance was sufficient to convince me her words were fully justified. My remains of uniform literally clung to me in rags, my bare shoulder looked a contused mass of battered flesh, my hair was matted, and my face blackened by powder stains and streaked with blood.

"I certainly do appear disreputable enough," I admitted; "but I can assure you it is nothing sufficiently serious to require immediate attention."

As I stepped without and closed the door behind me, I was at once startled by the rapid firing of shot from the rear of the house, and the next moment I encountered the young, red-faced officer hurrying along the hallway at the head a squad of Federal cavalrymen. Recognizing me in the gloom of the passage he paused suddenly.

"I owe you a belated apology, Captain," he exclaimed cordially, "for having mistaken you for one of those miscreants, but really your appearance was not flattering."

"Having viewed myself since within a mirror," I replied, "I am prepared to acknowledge the mistake a most natural one. However, I am grateful to be out of the scrape, and can scarcely find fault with my rescuers. Five minutes more would have witnessed the end."

"We rode hard," he said, "and were in saddle within fifteen minutes after the arrival of your courier. You evidently made a hard fight of it; the house bears testimony to a terrible struggle. We are rejoiced to learn that Lieutenant Caton was merely stunned; we believed him dead at first, and he is far too fine a fellow to go in that way."

"He is truly living, then?" I exclaimed, greatly relieved. "Miss Minor, to whom he is engaged, is sorrowing over his possible fate in the library yonder. Could not two of your men assist him to her? She would do more to hasten his recovery than any one."

"Certainly," was the instant response. "Haines, you and McDonald get the officer out of the front room; carry him in there where the ladies are, and then rejoin us."

I left, remembering then my own need. By using the back stairway I avoided unpleasant contact with the traces of conflict yet visible at the front of the house, and finally discovered a bathroom which afforded facilities for cleansing my flesh wounds and making my general appearance more presentable. I found I could do little to improve the condition of my clothing, but after making such changes for the better as were possible, soaking the clotted blood from out my hair, and washing the powder stains from my face, I felt I should no longer prove an object of aversion even to the critical eyes of the women, who would fully realize the cause for my torn and begrimed uniform.

A glance from the window told me the Federal cavalrymen were bearing out the dead and depositing them beyond view of the house in the deserted negro cabins. Ebers and one or two of my own men were standing near, carefully scanning the uncovered faces as they were borne past, while scraps of conversation overheard brought the information that the long dining room where I had passed the night on guard had been converted into a temporary hospital.

Irresolute as to my next action, I passed out into the upper hall. It was deserted and strangely silent, seemingly far removed from all those terrible scenes so lately enacted in the rooms beneath. My head by this time throbbed with pain; I desired to be alone, to think, to map out my future course before proceeding down the stairs to meet the others. With this in view I sank down in complete weariness upon a convenient settee. My heavy head sank back upon the arm of the settee, and deep sleep closed my eyes. It was in my dreams I felt it first—a light, moist touch upon my burning forehead—and I imagined I was a child once more, back at the old home, caressed by the soft hand of my mother. But as consciousness slowly returned I began to realize dimly where I was, and that I was no longer alone. A gentle hand was stroking back the hair from off my temples, while the barest uplift of my eyelids revealed the folds of a dark blue skirt pressing close to my side. Instantly I realized who must be the wearer, and remained motionless until I could better control my first unwise impulse.

She spoke no word, and I cautiously opened my eyes and glanced up into her face. For a time she remained unaware of my awakening, and sat there silently stroking my forehead, her gaze fixed musingly upon the window at the farther end of the hall. Doubtless she had been sitting thus for some time, and had become absorbed in her own reflections, for I lay there, drinking in her beauty for several moments before she chanced to glance downward and observe that I was awake. I think the very intensity of my gaze awakened her from [illegible] she turned almost with [illegible] [illegible] dyed her throat and cheeks crimson.

"Why," she exclaimed in momentary confusion. "I supposed I should know before you awoke, and have ample time to escape unobserved. I discovered you lying here. You were resting very uncomfortably when I first came, and I felt it my duty to render your position as easy as possible. I did not forget that your fatigue came in our defense."

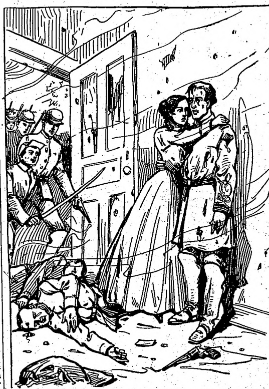
"Could you not say in yours?" I corrected. "But I have already been more than repaid. Your hand upon my brow was far more restful than I can tell you—its soft stroking mingled in my dreams even before I awoke. It brought back to me the thought of my mother. I do not think I have had a woman's hand press back my hair since I was a child."

"There was a look of pain upon your face as you lay sleeping, and I thought it might ease you somewhat. I have had some experience as a nurse, you know," she explained quietly. "You mentioned your mother; is she yet living?"

"She is in Richmond, stopping with friends, but since my capture we have lost all trace of each other. I was reported as having been killed in action, and I doubt if she even yet knows the truth. Everything is so confused in the capital that it is impossible to trace any one not directly connected with the army, once you lose exact knowledge of their whereabouts."

"Your father, then, is dead?"

"He yielded his life the first year of the war; and our plantation near Charlottesville has been constantly in the track of the armies. One rather important battle, indeed, was fought upon it, so you may realize that it is now desolate and utterly unfit for habitation."



"I Was Standing There Apparently Alone, but for the Dead."

"The house yet stands?"

"The chimney and one wall alone remained when I was last there," I replied, glad of the interest she exhibited. "Fortunately two of the negro cabins were yet standing. Doubtless these will form the nucleus of our home when the war ceases; they will prove a trifle better than the mere sky."

"The south is certainly paying a terrible price for rebellion," she said soberly, her fine eyes filled with tears. "I am sure I have tarried here quite as long as I should, now that I can be of no further service."

As she gathered her skirts in her hand preparatory to descending the stairs, I yielded to temptation and stopped her. Right or wrong I must yet have one word more.

"I beg of you do not desert me so soon. This may prove our final meeting—indeed, I fear it must be; surely, then, it need not be so brief a one?"

"Our final meeting?"

She echoed my words as though scarcely comprehending their meaning.

"Yes," I said, rising and standing before her. "How can we hope it shall be otherwise? I am not free to remain here, even were it best for other reasons, for I am a soldier under orders. You undoubtedly will proceed north at the earliest possible moment. There is scarcely a probability that in the great wide world we shall meet again."

"The war will soon be over; perhaps then you may come north also."

"I scarcely expect to do so. My work then will be to join with my comrades in an effort to rebuild the shattered fortunes of Virginia. When the lines of lives diverge so widely as ours must, the chances are indeed few that they ever meet again."

"But surely you can remain here until we leave?" she questioned, evidently striving not to reveal the depth of interest she felt in the decision. "It will not be until tomorrow that all details are arranged [illegible]

[illegible] most passionately, "do not tempt me! Your wish is a temptation most difficult to resist."

"Why resist, then?"

She did not look at me, but stood twisting a handkerchief nervously through her fingers. The abrupt question startled me almost into full confession, but fortunately my eyes chanced to fall upon her wedding-ring, and instantly I crushed the mad words back into my throat.

"Because it is right," I replied slowly, feeling each sentence as a death-blow. "For me to remain can mean only one thing. For that I am ready enough, if I thought you desired it, but I dare not choose such a course myself."

"You speak in riddles. What is the one thing?"

"A personal meeting with Major Brennan."

The high color deserted her cheeks, and her eyes met mine in sudden inquiry. "Oh, no, no!" she exclaimed with energy. "You and Frank must never meet in that way. You mean a duel?"

I bowed gravely. "I was permitted to aid in defense of this house only by pledging myself to Major Brennan afterwards."

"But why need it be—at least now that you have stood together as comrades?"

"I fear," I said quietly, "that fact will not count for much. We both fought inspired by your presence."

"Mine!" I hardly knew how to interpret her tone.

"Certainly; you cannot be ignorant that Major Brennan's dislike is based upon your friendship for me."

"But there is no reason," she stammered. "He has no cause—"

"His reason I must leave him to explain," I interrupted, to relieve her evident embarrassment. "His words, however, were extremely explicit; and to ignore them by departure is to imperil my own reputation in both armies. I would do so for no one else in the world but you."

"How can I ever thank you?" she asked gravely. "Captain Wayne, you make me trust you utterly, and place me constantly in your debt."

"Then you realize that I am right?"

"Yes," slowly, but making no effort to release her hands. "Yet is no other escape possible?"

"None within my knowledge."

"And you must go?"

"I must go—unless you bid me stay."

"Oh, I cannot; I cannot at such a cost!" she cried, and I could feel her body tremble with the intensity of her emotion. "But, Captain Wayne, our friendship surely need not be severed now for ever? I cannot bear to think that it should be. I am no cold, heartless ingrate, and shall never forget what you have done to serve me. I value every sacrifice you have made on my behalf. Let us indeed part now if, as you say, it must be so; yet surely there are happier days in store for both of us—days when the men of this nation will not wear different uniforms and deem it manly to fight and kill each other."

"The great struggle will certainly cease, possibly within a very few weeks," I answered, greatly moved by her earnestness, "but I fear the men engaged in it will remain much the same in their natures however they may dress. I can only say this: Were the path clear, I would surely find you, no matter where you were hidden."

"How terrible it is that a woman must ever choose between such evils," she said almost bitterly. "The heart says one thing and duty another all through life, it seems to me. I have so much of suffering in these last few months, so much of heartless cruelty, that I cannot bear to be the cause of any more. You and Major Brennan must not meet; but, Captain Wayne, I will not believe that we are to part thus forever."

"Do you mean that I am to seek you when the war closes?"

"There will be no time when I shall not most gladly welcome you."

"Your home?" I asked, wondering still if she could mean all that her wards implied. "I have never known where you resided in the north."

"Stonington, Conn." She smiled at me through the tears yet clinging to her long lashes. "You may never come, of course; yet I shall always feel now that perhaps you will; and that is not like a final goodby, is it?"

I bowed above the hands I held, and pressed my lips upon them. For the moment I durst not speak, and then—a voice suddenly sounded in the hall below:

"I am greatly obliged to you, Miss Minor; she is probably lying down. I will run up and call her."

We started as if rudely awakened from a dream, while a sudden expression of fright swept across her face.

"Oh, do not meet him," she begged piteously. "For my sake do not remain here."

"I will go down the back stairway," I returned hastily, "but do you indeed mean it? May I come to you?"

"Yes, yes; but pray go now!"

Unable longer to restrain myself, I clasped her to me, held her for one brief instant strained to my breast, kissed her twice upon lips which had no opportunity for refusal.

"This world is not so wide but that somewhere in it I shall again find the one woman of my heart," I whispered passionately, and was gone.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

A Plan Miscarried.

I remembered as I hurried down the back stairway her flushed face, but could recall no look of indignant pride in those clear eyes whose pleasant memory haunted me. She loved me; of this I now felt doubly assured, and the knowledge made my heart light, even while I dreaded the consequences to us both.

I stepped out into the kitchen and came to a sudden pause, facing a table laden with such a variety and abundance of food as had been strange to me for many a long day. Directly opposite, a napkin tucked beneath his double chin, his plate piled high with good things, sat Ebers, while at either end I beheld Mr. and Mrs. Bungay similarly situated. The astonishment of our meeting seemed mutual. The Sergeant, apparently feeling the necessity of explanation, wiped his mouth soberly.

"I vos yoost goin' to fill me op mit der dings like a good soldier, Captain," he said in anxiety.

"No doubt; well, I am rather hungry myself. Mrs. Bungay, in memory of old times cannot you spare me a plate? If so, I will take pleasure in joining your happy company. Thank you. I see you have found your man."

"I have thet, sir," she answered, grimly, "an' I reckon as how he's likely ter stay et hum arter this."

"But you forget he is my guide," I protested, not disinclined to test her temper. "Surely, Mrs. Bungay, you would not deprive the South of his valuable services?"

"An' wouldn't I, now? An' didn't thet little whiffit promise me long afore he ever did you uns? Ain't he my nat'ral protector? Whut's a lone female a goin' ter dew yere in ther mountings wi'out no man?"

"Come, Jed, what do you say? Are you tired fighting the battles of the Confederacy, and prefer those of home?"

"I like ter read all 'bout fightin' well 'nough, but durn it, Cap, it kinder hurts whin they hits ye on ther head with a gun." His face lit up suddenly. "'Sides, I sorter wanter hev Mariar git 'quainted with thet thar muel o' mine, Beelzebub. He's out thar now, hitched ter a tree, an' a eatin' fit ter bust his biler—never a durn mark on his hide fer all he wint through."

Truth in Old Saying.

There is an old as the hills saying that men who cannot manage their own finances are exactly the ones to look after those of a nation. And because it is too true is the reason why it is an old saying, irrespective as to what Dun or Bradstreet may say to the contrary.

Confident as to Future

Negro Bridegroom Asked Parson Who Performed Ceremony to Wait Until the Bride Got a Job.

The pastor of a large Baptist church in a neighboring city, whose congregation included many negroes, received recently a call from a young colored man and woman on matrimony bent. The man had been a shiftless person and the woman was known as industrious. The preacher noticed that the bridegroom was all spruced up and concluded that the bride had made a proper member of society out of him, so he went ahead with the ceremony with a good deal of satisfaction.

He had it in mind not to accept a fee from these lowly members of his flock, but the bridegroom, with a beaming face, handed over the usual small envelope and departed with his Dinah before the preacher could protest. When the pastor opened the envelope later he read this note:

"Dear Pastor: I am sorry I cannot pay you a fee now for uniting me in wedlock, but I spent all I had on wedding clothes. I'll send you the money just as soon as Dinah gets to work [illegible]

[illegible] very grateful Dinah, who seemed to think it proper that she should pay, and was overcome with surprise when the fee was given back to her as a wedding present.

Pictures Spoil Cowboy.

"Oregon ranchmen have a brand new plaint; it is that the moving picture show is spoiling the cowboy," said a westerner.

"Film makers demand their services and pay them handsomely for riding bucking horses in front of the moving picture camera or for taking part in an alleged 'western drama.' The cowboys like the idea.

"The old ranchers are sore and ill conceal their hostility. They declare the pictures only make onery cowboys and give easterners wrong ideas of life in the cattle country.

"As a matter of fact, they say, riding bucking horses is but a small part of a cowboy's life. As for the traditional western drama, where the rancher's daughter marries the heroic cowboy who foils the traditional gun fighter of the frontier, the dwellers of the range country have only contempt [illegible]

Both Wrong.

A ludicrous story is told of an Edinburgh baillie, whose studies in natural history seems to have been limited. The following case came before him one day:

A man who kept a ferret having to go into the country, left the cage with the ferret in charge of a neighbor till he should return. The neighbor incautiously opened the cage door, and the ferret escaped. The owner was very angry, and brought a claim against him for damages.

The following was the decision of the learned baillie: "Nae doot," he said to the neighbor; "nae doot ye was wrang to open the cage door; but," he added, turning to the owner, "ye was wrang, too. What for did ye no clip the brute's wings?"

PIMPLES COVERED HIS BACK

"My troubles began along in the summer in the hottest weather and took the form of small eruptions and itching and a kind of smarting pain. It took me mostly all over my back and kept getting worse until finally my back was covered with a mass of pimples which would burn and itch at night so that I could hardly stand it. This condition kept getting worse and worse until my back was a solid mass of big sores which would break open and run. My underclothing would be a clot of blood.

"I tried various remedies and salves for nearly three years and I was not getting any benefit. It seemed I was in eternal misery and could not sleep on my back or lean on a chair. I was finally given a set of the Cuticura Remedies and inside of two weeks I could see and feel a great relief. I kept on using Cuticura Soap, Ointment and also the Resolvent, and in about three or four months' time my back was nearly cured and I felt like a new being. Now I am in good health and no sign of any skin diseases and I am fully satisfied that Cuticura Remedies are the best ever made for skin diseases. I would not be without them." (Signed) W. A. Armstrong, Corbin, Kan., May 26, 1911. Esther Was Alarmed.

Esther, a five-year-old daughter of North side parents, heard much about the dangers of diphtheria, and was eager to observe every precaution to keep from coming into contact with it, that she and her two brothers might not "catch it."

One day she insisted on going to the grocery on the corner to spend her penny, and was warned by her mother not to stop and play with any children she might meet on the way. After having been gone only a few minutes, she rushed into the house much excited, exclaiming as she entered:

"Mamma, you must keep 'ose boys away from Mr. A.'s house, 'cause they have diphtheria and have a sign up."

Her mother said: "Is that so? What does the sign say?"

"It says f-o-r s-a-l-e," said Esther.—Indianapolis News.

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

How Mrs. Bethune was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sikeston, Mo.—"For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I had cramps, backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband's told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do all my own housework, work in the garden and entertain company and enjoy them, and can walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the week. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl, and tell them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Alfalfa grows anywhere.

Sheep must have dry quarters.

Tired of chickens? Try ducks.

A fowl drenched with rain is not comfortable.

Missouri mules are being shipped to South Africa.

Parched corn makes a good night feed in cold weather.

Alfalfa is winning a place in the dairyman's rotation.

One pound of sheep's wool will make a yard of cloth.

Corn, barley and buckwheat are very fattening grains.

New Zealand condenses and powders great quantities of milk.

Stump is the best late canning peach among the white varieties.

The Japanese process of dwarfing a pine tree lasts about ten years.

In fattening fowls the wet [illegible]sh seems to have the edge over d[illegible]

Fodder that is dusty will be helped by spraying a little in the mangers or racks.

Grapes are still trodden with the bare feet in many parts of Spain and Italy.

Duck raisers pack 40 dressed ducklings in a barrel for shipment.

Sows are always in better condition to raise fall pigs than they are in the spring.

Fattening sheep should have grain enough to push them forward as rapidly as possible.

The pig crop is governed by numerous influences that tend to increase or decrease the supply.

New males for the flock each year is the only sure way of keeping up vigor and other good qualities.

The bourbon hens are said to be quiet and easily handled, non-roving in habit and yet very hardy.

The man who can raise hogs profitable without pasture can increase his profits many fold by using pasture.

That cows like a change of feed is shown by the way they will eat rotten hay, pull out old straw from the sheds, etc.

When hogs go off feed in a territory where cholera is present the owner ought to suspect cholera at once.

Extra feed and care are needed now to keep up the cows' vitality, for without vitality a cow is not much of a milker.

Do not allow the sheep to stand or lie on hot fermenting manure, as it is sure to produce foot rot and lung diseases.

Raspberries, strawberries and cherries were unknown in England until the time of King Henry VIII. and of Queen Elizabeth.

Clean out the hen house and put the cleanings on the garden. Next spring you will wonder what makes things grow so fast.

A little tarred paper and a few nails and laths will make a very poor poultry house water and wind proof for the winter.

Right now, when cream is flirting with the 40-cent mark, is a poor time to let the cows fall off on account of lack of feed. Better buy.

Quality in form, disposition and general conformation must be coupled with the size and style to get the best in each class of horses.

Remember rabbits have just as sharp teeth this year as ever. They will surely gnaw those fruit trees if you give them half a chance.

Alfalfa is also the best material to balance corn or wheat, as it is rich in everything a fowl needs except fat, which is furnished by the grain.

Why kill off the game birds? Most of them repay well the cost of their keep by destroying the insects that threaten the fields of the farmer.

An egg, to belong to the strictly fresh egg class, should not be over three days old in the summer weather, and a week old during winter.

Recent experiments in Germany indicate that drainage waters do not take any more plant food away from fertilized soils than from unfertilized.

The horse population of the world is estimated at more than 111,000,000, of which about 43,000,000 are in Europe, 28,000,000 in North America and 11,000,000 in Asia.

Guard against rabbits.

Is the seed corn safe?

All animals must have fresh air.

Bran beats corn meal as a milk feed.

Missouri raised $1,000,000 worth of cotton in 1910.

Too early calving stunts the heifer for dairy purposes.

Coal ashes are good for dusting over the dropping boards.

Poultry keeping is a decidedly healthful occupation.

The more active the hens the more water they will drink.

Watch the yards and don't leave any slippery or icy places.

Don't be too ready to take a seller's word for what his cow can do.

A few lumps of sugar will help wonderfully when training the colts.

Look out for the breeding mare and give her good food and plenty of exercise.

Nearly 30,000,000 acres of wheat were planted throughout India this year.

Eggs from older hens are better for hatching purposes than those from pullets.

Plenty of scalding water on the milk utensils is needed in winter as well as summer.

It is better to give the orchard clean cultivation than to try to raise crops in it.

The way to judge the value of a breeding ewe is to examine the quality of the lamb.

To gather a pound of honey a bee has to make nearly 23,000 trips to and from its hive.

It is poor policy to plan for nearly chicks unless you have a good place to care for them.

The chief aim of a wide-awake farmer is to produce as much as possible of what he consumes.

Cover the winter onions with coarse manure from the horse stable to give them an early start in spring.

A 60-acre farm paid for will give peace of mind, and if properly worked a good profit at the least cost.

The amount of land under cultivation in this country has not kept pace with the increase of population.

Still time this month to put in some bulbs in the ground—hyacinths, tulips, daffodils, lily-of-the-valley, etc.

One of our dairy folks found neglecting to salt the cows the principal cause of his winter churning troubles.

A drove of hogs of all colors and sizes brings as much money as a drove of the same breed, color and size.

You may feed all the food your hens can possibly use, but if you are short on grit the result will not be satisfactory.

Cold storage men claim that brown-shelled eggs, being heavier and thicker, preserve better than white-shelled ones.

One green feed a day should be the rule. Scalded alfalfa, sprouted grain, cabbage or root crops are all good.

If one of your hogs gets a grudge against another, put them in separate pens. They will do better and grow faster.

While good pasture and forage crops will cause ewes to take on flesh rapidly, they are run down in flesh and vitality.

Bright sunshine helps to clean dairy utensils, but it should give only the finishing touches. It's sure to shirk the rough work.

Clean the coops thoroughly before you put them away. Get them under cover, too, if you can. They will last so much longer.

Plenty of corn will keep the hens from freezing to death, but it isn't likely to stimulate them to break any records in egg production.

MEADOWBROOK ● ● HEMENWAY

Cold, exposed sleeping quarters that compel the sows to pile up in order to keep warm are usually responsible for the dead pigs at this time.

A check rein is unnecesary cruelty. For the horse that occasions trouble by reaching down after grass or corn try a muzzle, but leave his head free.

No sow should be allowed more pigs than she has teats, therefore never purchase or retain a sow for breeding which has only a small number of teats.

It requires about four geese to make a pound of feathers. Picking live geese for their feathers is a practice that has been discontinued in this country.

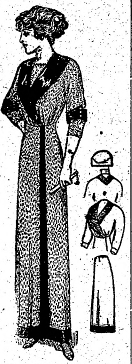
The HOME DEPARTMENT

HAS GREATEST CHARM

COSTUME WITH SOCIAL STAMP MOST ALLURING.

Well Described as at Once a Compliment and a Challenge—Many Styles From Which to Choose Most Becoming.

Without a doubt, it is the costume with the social stamp which is the most seductive to feminine eyes nowadays. The street suit of chic sort has undisputed allurements, but the gown of more elegant description, which tells of the receptions, high teas visiting, etc., bears with it something far more entrancing. It is elegant, to begin with, and, besides, hints of one's interest in and appreciation of friends. It is at once a compliment and a challenge. One seeks for becomingness above all qualities in these costumes social, for the best textures that can be afforded and for colors which will not conflict with drawing rooms.



One-Piece Style Adapted to Many Materials and Pocketbooks.

As to styles, how many there are to choose from. The close slip covered with a Greek shirt, in some finer contrasting material, is much admired for young married women who give smart receptions, and to whom the classic stamp is becoming. Fine wools and velvet textures made up with high-waisted coats short bodices with innumerable sorts of peplum tails, and the one-piece gown in all its ramifications are other favored models. Few long skirts appear for day wear, although if the reception is to be followed by a "dansant," the hostess, or the young matron who helps her receive, may wear a unique "tail"—the skirt running out into a sharp point behind, or else bunched together with a buckle or rosette. How funny the styles of the day will appear a decade hence, when history has shelved them, with things dead and gone. In the interim there is no abatement in the love of foolishness—tight skirts, mammoth handbags, hats which look like Indian headdresses, bushel baskets, what not. And as yet the foolishness is all lovely.

In the illustration the one-piece effect is given here and a flat trimming used on both waist and skirt. The style is charming for a fancy wool, veiling, cloth, or marquisette, and here quite an inexpensive novelty cloth in black and white is used. The trimming is black velvet, the buttons being covered with the gown goods.

Black and white, all black, black with color! Who can foresee the banishment of black for use in color, the time when it will be regarded as passee, unbecoming, undesirable? Nobody can, for the good reason that black is forever rewarding to becomingness, forever smart, distinguished, rare; and so, although season by season new colors come and go, the black dress in all its phases remains. At present the black and white version is the distinguished thing but it would take a book to tell of all the materials used, all the styles of the "ink-and-snow gown," all the hundred and one tricks employed to soften and vary the bodice. But one thing is everywhere observable—the black and white scheme must be definite sharp black, sharp white and never little blurring mixtures. You literally see the gown coming like a circus horse—that is, if it is the latest French notion in wool or velveteen.

With the black and white gown many pure white hats and fur sets are worn, or else the hat will be black with a white fancy feather, while the charming markings of pointed fox will give the black and white note to the furs.

LINGERIE OF THE DAINTIEST

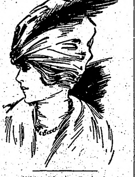
Woman of Fashion Insists on the Lightest Fabrics and Most Exquisite Embroidery.

Open work wheel embroidery so oft repeated that little of the background was to be seen is one of the favorite embellishments of a double set of underwear made for a coming trousseau. Two other sets of finest cambric are embroidered with little cupids and doves supporting a rope of roses, all rendered in the finest embroidery. A third set has Malines lace insert upon it, and the fine Irish crochet and Valenciennes decorate a fourth.

For some of the little matinee jackets finely plaited chiffon flounces are chose as an edging and others have scalloped ones oversewn with wool, which looks cozy and of an uncommon appearance upon wool backed satin. Completely charming are the coverlets sold to be thrown over the lingerie sets when put out by the lady's maid for morning or evening wear, each one among them a match to the lingerie.

The slips and blouses from the lingerie department of a well-known maker of such frivolities are like gossamer for lightness of weight and show the simplicity of line and design that is absolutely delightful when the finest fabrics are used. There is a petal pink crepe blouse with a collar and a straight yoke of black Chantilly lace, to which decoration is added a little breast pocket trimmed with a fan of Chantilly. Another of the three layer kind, the first of finest sand colored chiffon and the third of palest blue, with a sandwich between of "age yellow" lace.

THE "NOTE OF INTERROGATION" TOQUE.



White Blouses Revived.

It seems essential to wear some touch of black at the neck of a white blouse these days, and the fashion will be followed out in America without doubt. More thin white blouses are sold than for the last four years, because they have returned to favor with morning suits, provided they are quite plain and very sheer. The only trimming allowed is a narrow band of Irish insertion down the front and at the collar and on edge of Irish Picot on the frills over the hand and down the front.

A new league has been founded in France, entitled "the League Against the Lending of Books."

ANOTHER CROSS STITCH IDEA

Charming Way of Giving Up to Date Touch on a Scarf of White Crepe de Chine.

The vogue of the clinging silken scarf, giving a filmy yet real protection to bare shouledrs, will continue to grow, since it has dawned on the dainty woman with what ease it can be loosely knotted in the fashion of a fichu.

Embroidery has to be used on these scarfs with a certain amount of judgment, as otherwise the finishing stitches at the back may be exposed by an inadvertent reversing of the material. A very new and charming way of giving the up to date touch on a scarf of white crepe de Chine has been recently noted; cross stitching, of course—and in two toned effects of pale blue, delicate leaf green, a pastel rose or two light shades of tender violet. On each side of the scarf a band of this attractive work extends [illegible] thought—each band of work is done so that the plain material turns in under it to form a hem, which is folded into place and finished after the cross stitch has been completed and pressed. The hems at the two long sides should be about two inches wide, but those at the ends can be anywhere from four to six inches deep, and can be finished, when all else is done, by a silken fringe of the hues chosen for the cross stitches. If preferred, a quaint variation of this hem finish for the scarf ends can be made by curving or or otherwise shaping the inner line of the hem to accommodate the pattern used. But if it is also wished to make the lower edge curved it will be necessary to face a hem of the shape desired instead of merely folding in the silk or crepe.

The fringe can follow this line exactly or can be curved in more pronounced effect by being made deeper in the center than at each side.

HOUSEWORK IS A HEAVY BURDEN

The woman who "keeps house" has enough to do when she is in good, sound health, but if she is weak, tired all the time, and suffering from morn to night with an aching back, house-work becomes a heavy burden.

Many women who were afflicted in this way say that Doan's Kidney Pills have made life easier for them.

Women are subject to kidney disease. The clothing they wear, the work they do, the worry and strain of bearing and rearing children, the lack of proper exercise; all tend to it.

Backache, bearing-down pains, headache, dizzy spells, faintness, fits of "blues," and other troubles often thought to be peculiar to the sex, are found frequently in kidney disease. When any one of these ills appears, together with a discolored condition of the kidney secretions, with passages too frequent, scanty or burning, just make up your mind that your kidneys are weak, and be quick to help them.

Doan's Kidney Pills have helped a great many weak women through the trying times when kidney disease means so much added misery. They do not disturb the stomach or bowels and contain no poisonous, dangerous nor habit-forming drugs. Doan's are harmless for children too.

When Kidney Troubles Keep You in Misery Day and Night

The following case is typical of the cures effected by Doan's Kidney Pills. Grateful testimony is the best evidence.

DRIVEN ALMOST CRAZY.

A Terrible Tale of Kidney Suffering.

Mrs. H. W. Heagy, 1515 L St., Bakersfield, Cal., says: "My kidney trouble began in the fall of 1907. I used remedy after remedy prescribed by physicians but no relief came and I was in despair. On account of the numbness and grating sensation I could not lie down comfortably and some nights I was not in bed half an hour. I became so nervous and restless I hardly knew what to do. Hot waves came over me like a flash and I became so dizzy that I staggered. I had a feeling as if there was gravel in my bladder, the kidney secretions acting too freely at times, while again they were very scant and accompanied by terrible pain. I cannot describe the suffering I endured for over two years. Finally I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and while I did not notice much relief for a week or so, I continued persistently and when I had taken eight boxes I was feeling fine. The numbness and smarting finally left, the kidney secretions became clear and natural and my health improved one hundred percent. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me at a time when it seemed that I would go crazy and I never can express my gratitude."

THE CARELESS GROCER

Blundered, and Great Good Came of It.

A careless grocer left the wrong package at a Michigan home one day and thereby brought a great blessing to the household.

"Two years ago I was a sufferer from stomach troubles, so acute that the effort to digest ordinary food gave me great pain, and brought on a condition of such extreme nervousness that I could not be left alone. I thought I should certainly become insane. I was so reduced in flesh that I was little better than a living skeleton. The doctors failed to give me relief and I despaired of recovery.

"One day our groceryman left a package of Grape-Nuts food by mistake, so I tried some for dinner. I was surprised to find that it satisfied my appetite and gave me no distress whatever. The next meal I ate of it again, and to be brief, I have lived for the past year almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. It has proved to be a most healthful and appetizing food, perfectly adapted to the requirements of my system.

"Grape-Nuts is not only easily digested and assimilated, but I find that since I have been using it I am able to eat anything else my appetite fancies, without trouble from indigestion. The stomach trouble and nervousness have left me, I have regained my plumpness and my views of life are no longer despondent and gloomy.

"Other members of my family, especially my husband, (whose old enemy, the 'heart-burn,' has been vanquished) have also derived great benefit from the use of Grape-Nuts food and we think no morning meal complete without it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. [illegible]

WOMEN AND HEALTH.

Women are beginning to realize more fully that good health is not to be found in the use of cosmetics and face powders. The appearance of health may follow facial treatment, but health itself lies much deeper than the surface.

Most important to the health of every woman is regularity of the bowels and digestive organs. The weary eyes, bad breath, frequent headaches, pimples and general air of lassitude, is in most every case due to constipation or indigestion, or both. There are various remedies prescribed for this condition, but the easiest, most pleasant and certainly effective, is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin known to druggists as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This simple remedy is far preferable to harsh salts and cathartics and violent purgative waters that disturb the whole system without affording more than temporary relief.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a tonic laxative, mild in its action, pleasant to the taste and positive in its effect, strengthening the muscles of stomach and bowels so that after a short time these organs regain the power to perform their natural functions without assistance.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is sold by druggists everywhere in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If you have never tried it, write for a sample to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.; he will gladly send a trial bottle without any expense to you whatever.

Riches do not make a man happy; it is what he gets out of them.

With this issue and from now on, the PIONEER will reach our readers as a seven column folio paper instead of six columns, which has been the size since the paper was established. By enlarging our paper to seven columns we gain approximately three columns more space which will be sufficient to take care of the advertising and news matter for some time to come.

Do you [illegible] what we think is the best story in the Bible? It may surprise you, but 'tis that one about Noah [illegible] the flood. We say this even in the face of educated folks who turn up their noses and declare the flood story is a fake. You remember that Noah had to work a long time on the ark. It was uphill business, too, at best, to go on sweating and toiling day after day under the hot sun, out there on dry land, while the hammer and anvil club sat around spitting tobacco juice on his boards, whittling up his soft pines with old Jack-knives and telling him what a fool he was to expect a big rain in a country that was to dry to grow alfalfa. But he kept at it; finally the flood came and every mother's son of the croakers was drowned. This is the only instance we know of either in sacred or profane history where the knocker got exactly what was coming to him.

Subscriptions Must Be Paid.

We have this week sent out subscription statements to those of our readers who are in arrears more than one year and who failed to remit in response to the statement's we sent out the first of the year. We hate to press our readers for the amount they are owing for the paper and in many instances would be pleased to extend their credit, but we are compelled, by a recent ruling of the post-office department which refuses to accept papers sent to subscribers more than one year in arrears, at the second class rate, to insist that our subscribers knowing themselves in arrears more than one year to remit as soon as they possible can.

An ammendent to the postal laws and regulations, pertaining to the mailing of second-class matter after expiration of subscription, is published here. It says, "The right of publishers to extend in good faith credit on subscriptions is recognized and will not be abridged, and although all subscriptions are regarded as expiring with the period for which they were obtained, nevertheless, in order to give an opportunity to secure renewals, copies of their publications will be accepted for mailing as to subscribers at the usual second-class rates of postage for a period of one year from the date of expiration; but copies sent to persons after one year from the expirations of their subscriptions, unless, such subscriptions be expressly renewed for a definite time, together with an actual payment of subscriptions or a bona fide promise of payment, will not be accepted at the pound rate, but will be accepted at the transient rate of one cent for each four ounces or fraction thereof, prepaid by stamps affixed.

Northwest Exposition In Minneapolis--1912.

Seven states have again combined to hold a great expostion to show the products of their soil, mines, Lakes, rivers, forests and factories after the harvests are over and the state and county fairs have made the collection of the finest products in the world available.

The Northwest Products Exposition as it will be called, will be held in Minneapolis November 12 to 23. The seven states which will participate are Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

To make this exposition possible the business men of Minneapolis will erect a building of solid steel, brick and concrete with a great exposition floor 250x125 as large as Madison Square Garden. New York City.

At a cost of $10,000.00 the Civic and Commerce Association of Minneapolis and the St. Paul Association of Commerce have bought space from the Northwest Development League for the seven states where their efficial exhibits will be installed.

The Northwest Products Exposition will be almost twice as large in extent as the "Land Show" held in St. Paul and it is the hope of the officers of the Northwest Development League that it will be a better exposition in every way as they have almost ten full months to prepare for it, whereas they had but a little more than three months to organize the St. Paul show.

"The Products Exposition can only be lickened to a minature world's fair," said President Penwell in speaking of the outlook. "The Northwest states have learned the exhibit business and have learned that it is necessary to advertise in a very graphic way to attract settlers who would otherwise go to Canada or the southwest."

Will A. Campbell, secretary of the league and manager of the exposition is leaving for the west and will spend much time in the field, but will also open an office in Minneapolis March 1st.

JAPANESE DENTISTS.

They Use Natural Weapons In Assaulting Their Victims.

Japanese native dentists conduct their business in a manner which would undoubtedly cause any European practitioner to open his eyes in amazement. The victim is seated on the ground. The dentist bends over him and forces his left hand between the patient's jaws in such a manner that the mouth cannot possibly be closed. Then he grasps the doomed tooth between the thumb and forefinger of the right hand and with one deft wrench removes it and throws it upon the ground.

So great is the skill of these native dentists that many of them are able to remove six or seven teeth per minute. Indeed, their skill is hardly to be wondered at when one considers the course of preparatory training they are obliged to undergo.

A number of holes are bored in a stout plank, and this is fixed firmly to the ground. In the holes are driven wooden pegs, and the would be dentist has to extract them with his fingers without dislodging the board. This process is repeated with a board of pine wood and finally with one of oak, and it is only when he has succeeded in extracting the pegs from the oak plank that the Japanese considers himself qualified to practice upon his fellow men.—Pearson's Weekly.

Judging from the size of the cream checks the patrons of the Plummer Creamery are receiving we predict that within 5 years there will not be an acre, of good land anywhere within 10 or 12 miles of Plummer to be had for less than $40 or $50 per acre. Red Lake County is fast getting to be known as one of the best dairy counties in the state of Minnesota and the immigration agents and Railroad Companies predict that there in this county this comming year 1911 there will be the greatest movement in land with sales principally to actual settlers from southern Minnesota, Iowa Wisconsin, and Illinois that this country has ever seen and they are certainly in position to know whereof they speak.

Some Silo Cautions.

Should the masons be careless and not wet the stones when applying the mortar the stones will draw the water from the mortar and it will crumble. Then when the tremendous pressure of 100 tons of silage is applied disaster results. So it is better to use wire or rods every few inches.

A good many people in northern latitudes do not provide a roof for their silo. Just because that is all right in milder sections does not make it successful there. An open silo will freeze easily. Better roof it tightly and keep the doors closed in winter.

Be sure to set the foundation on solid ground; otherwise the silo may settle to one side and crack, making expensive repairs necessary. If rock prevents the digging of a deep foundation blast it out, but remove the windows from the barn before the explosion.—William A. Freehoff in Farm and Fireside.

EXTENSION PROBABLE

Soo Line Extension, From Plummer West Is Being Discussed Again.

From Grand Forks comes the report that the commerical club of that city is making a determined effort to push the Soo Line extension from Plummer to that city through to northwestern North Dakota. The line has been advocated for some time and it is almost certain that the line will be built sometime in the future but as the exact route has not as yet been determined Grand Forks is making every effort to have the road pass through that city. The road, it is thought, will connect, with the Duluth extension just south of town and will pass through Red Lake Falls to Grand Forks and thence in a southwesterly direction to southwestern North Dakota, and will pass through the most fertile grain belt of North Dakota and Minnesota. This road will make the quickest and most direct route to the head of the Lakes, which is the wheat center of the northwest. Some publicity has been given the belief that the road will also touch Crookston also on the same route but this seems highly improbable as in so doing the road would have to run in a northwesterly direction for a distance of some forty miles.

A DOUBLE HEADER

Two Interesting Games Played Here Tuesday Evening.

Two of the most exciting games of basket ball ever witnessed here was pulled off last Tuesday evening when the Comercial Normal students of Thief River Falls played the Erskine aggregation and the Athletics, the new organization from Thief River, clashed with the first team of the Plummer Athletic association. Both these games were exceedingly interesting and showed considerable science on the part of the teams that played.

The Commercial-Normals and Erskine played the first game of the double header and some fast work was done by both teams, especially by the Commercial-Normal team. The fast Thief River team had the best of the argument throughout the game and showed remarkable skill st the game, and were victorious by the handsome margin of 28 to 9.

The Thief River Athletics and the Plummer team were the next on the program, following the game of the Commercial-Normals and Erskine. In this game the locals got the best of the argument winning by a score of 13 to 5. This was a fast and closely contested game by both the opposing teams but the locals landed the game by the neat little margin indicated above. Twice during the beginning, the game stood a tie and everthing was gloriously uproarious and exciting until enough baskets was made by the locals to put them out of danger. Quite a crowd turned out to witness the games and all present assert that this was the biggest athletic event ever pulled off here.

All the teams present are composed of a clean and congenial bunch of young fellows and the games were free from any roughness which is in evidence at many of such games.

Immediately after the game a dance was given to defray the expenses of securing the visiting teams and was largely attended. The usual good music which is always furnished by the Healy's orchestra of Red Lake Falls was enjoyed and the merriment continued until an early hour the next morning with an intermission at midnight for supper which was served at the Hotel Plummer.

Second Team There!

The regular basket ball team played the second team at the city hall Sunday evening and were defeated by a score of 8 to 9. This is a second victory for the second team from the regulars so far this season.

PLUMMERITES WON

Local Second Team Victors Over Commerical Normals.

A both fast and interesting game was played Wednesday evening when the local second team met the second team of the Commerical-Normal college from Thief River Falls at the city hall in a basket ball game and came out the winners by a 17 to 5 score. The Commerical-Normals are composed of a fast bunch of players but the locals were never in a pinch and proved themselves the superiors at every stage of the game.

The game was a clean one as far as any rough playing was concerned but thru accidents some of the players received some minor injuries. Osmond Rice the fast local player, was put out of the game in the last half with a badly sprained ankle and one of the players of the visiting team suffered a like injury and had to be substituted. Baring a few accidents of a like nature no wilful roughness was noticeable on either sides throughout the game.

The locals were instrumental in securing 8 baskets and one foul while the visitors were unable to land but one basket but showed considerable science in making the standing throws, making three baskets on fowls on the local side.

Some Silo Cautions.

Should the masons be careless and not wet the stones when applying the mortar the stones will draw the water from the mortar and it will crumble. Then when the tremendous pressure of 100 tons of silage is applied disaster results. So it is better to use wire or rods every few inches.

A good many people in northern latitudes do not provide a roof for their silo. Just because that is all right in milder sections does not make it successful there. An open silo will freeze easily. Better roof it tightly and keep the doors closed in winter.

Be sure to set the foundation on solid ground; otherwise the silo may settle to one side and crack, making expensive repairs necessary. If rock prevents the digging of a deep foundation, blast it out, but remove the windows from the barn before the explosion.—William A. Freehoff in Farm and Fireside.

MY LADY OF THE NORTH

The LOVE STORY OF A GRAY JACKET

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail, and arriving at the Minor place, Wayne meets Miss Minor and Mrs. Bungay, and later Edith appears. Wayne's detachment is besieged by guerrillas. Brennan and his men arrive and aid in repelling the invaders until a rescuing party of bluecoats reach the scene. Brennan challenges Wayne to a duel.

CHAPTER XXXIV.—Continued.

"Well, I suppose I shall be compelled to let you and Beelzebub go, but it will prove a serious loss to the cause of the South," I said, my thoughts instantly turned by mention of the mule to matters of more importance. "I expect there will be lively times up your way."

"Ye kin jist bet thar will," enthusiastically. "It'll be nip and tuck, I reckon, but I'm mighty hopeful o' Mariar. Thet dern muel he needs ter be took down a peg."

"Sergeant," I said, "did you send out a party to bring in our horses and the sabers?"

"It vos all done already; der horses vos found und der swords."

"How many men have we lost?"

"Der vos five kilt, Captain; dot vos it. I vos hit mit der ear off; Sands is goin' to die, und maybe Elliott vill not get some better; some odders vos hurted."

"How many men does that leave us fit for duty?" I asked decisively, pushing back my plate and rising from the table.

"Dere vos twelve, Captain, mit me."

"That will do," I said. "In half an hour from now have the men ready for the road," and I turned and left the room.

We must depart at once. More than ever now I realized the necessity for haste. I hoped to meet the officer commanding the Federal detachment who had come to our aid, pay him the customary marks of respect, and get away without again coming in contact with Major Brennan. I felt myself pledged to this course of action.

A sentry stationed in the lower hallway informed me the officers were messing together in the front parlor, and I at once headed that way. I paused, however, to visit the wounded for a moment, spoke cheerily to my own men, and then, opening the door quietly, entered the room which I had last left in possession of the guerrillas. With the exception of broken windows and bullet-scarred walls little evidence remained of that contest which had raged here with such fury but a few hours previously. There were numerous dark stains upon the carpet, but much of the furniture had been restored to place, while a cheerful wood fire crackled in the open grate. Before it three men were sitting smoking, while upon a small table close at their elbows rested a flat bottle, flanked by several glasses. A single glance sufficed to tell me they were Federal cavalrymen, one being the red-faced lieutenant whom I had already met.

"I am seeking the commander of this detachment," I explained, as they glanced at me in surprise at my entrance unannounced. "I am Captain Wayne, in charge of the Confederate troop which was engaged in defense of this house."

A portly man with a strong face, and wearing a closely clipped gray beard, arose from a comfortable armchair and advanced with hand extended.

"I am Captain Moorehouse, in command," he answered, cordially, "and am very glad to meet you. Will you not join us? My second lieutenant, who has positive genius in that line, has unearthed a few bottles of rather choice whisky which we will divide most gladly."

"I thank you," I replied, anxious to meet him as pleasantly as possible, "but I am eager to get away upon my duty as early as may be, and have merely intruded upon you to explain my purpose."

"Nonsense," he insisted. "Duty is never quite so urgent as to require a waste of good liquor, Captain Wayne, permit me to present my officers—Lieutenants Warren and Starr, Second New Hampshire Cavalry."

The constant haunting fear of the Major's possible entrance at any moment rendered me extremely uneasy, and anxious to be away. Undoubtedly this feeling exhibited itself in my manner, for Captain Moorehouse said finally:

"I realize your natural anxiety to be off, Captain Wayne, and while we should be very glad to keep you with us, yet [illegible] within your own lines, and an early cessation of hostilities.

I had shaken hands with them all, and turned toward the door, congratulating myself on escaping thus easily, when a new voice broke suddenly in upon my self-satisfaction:

"I trust Captain Wayne is not intending to depart without at least a word with me?"

It was Brennan. He had entered unobserved from the second parlor.

"Frankly," I responded, "I hoped I might."

"Have you forgotten, then, our compact, or do you simply elect to ignore it?"

I saw the others exchange quick glances of amazement, but I answered coolly:

"The latter supposition is more nearly the truth, Major Brennan. I felt that after what we have just passed through together we could both afford to ignore the past, and consequently was hoping to escape without again encountering you."

"Indeed!" he exclaimed, sarcastically. "But I might have expected it. Gentlemen," and he turned toward the expectant group; "this man and I have a personal grievance of long standing unsettled. I have sought him for months in vain. When he came last night to our assistance, before I even consented to accept his services I insisted that no occurrence of the defense should prevent our meeting, if we both survived. Now he endeavors to sneak away like a whipped cur. I demand satisfaction at his hands, and if it is refused I shall denounce him in both armies."

My cheeks burned, but before I could control myself sufficiently for answer, Moorehouse spoke.

"But, Brennan, see here," he said anxiously, "surely Captain Wayne has served you well. Is this trouble between you so serious that no amends are possible?"

"None, short of a personal meeting."

"Captain," and the perplexed federal commander turned toward me, "have you any word of explanation in this unfortunate affair?"

"Very little," I answered. "I am not even aware that I have done injury to Major Brennan, purposely or otherwise. He has not so much as honored me with information as to his cause of complaint. However, I care very little what it may be. As he has seen fit to denounce me before officers of my own corps, I should be extremely glad to meet him upon that ground alone; but after what we have just passed through together, I felt ready to blot out these past differences. Whatever they may have been, they are not liable to occur again, nor we to meet."

"They have occurred again since you have been in this house!" Brennan broke forth excitedly. "You are not a coward, but I brand you here and now as a sneak and liar! Now will you fight?"

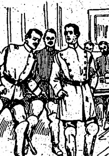
We stood for a moment in utter silence, eye to eye, and I knew there was no help for it. These words, publicly spoken, left me no choice.

"I am at your service, Major Brennan," I returned sternly, "now or at any time. But I am unfortunate here in having no officer of my army present, and hence can name no second."

"Doubtless one of these gentlemen will consent to serve," he said, his face brightening at my rejoinder.

Some one hastily pushed a way to the front, and Lieutenant Caton, pale but determined, stood at my shoulder.

"It will afford me pleasure to act for Captain Wayne," he said clearly, "if he will accept my services. Moreover," he added, with a significant glance at Brennan. "I do this as a friend, and with full confidence that I am upon the right side in the quarrel."



"I Brand You Here and Now as Sneak and Liar; Now Will You Fight?"

For a moment no one spoke, Brennan biting his mustache to keep back the words he durst not utter. Then Caton turned to me.

"If you will retire to the library, Wayne, I will arrange this matter with whoever may represent Major Brennan."

With a slight formal bow to those present I quitted the room.

CHAPTER XXXV.

The Last Resort of Gentlemen.

I found the library deserted, and paced the floor for fully half an hour before Caton appeared. Stung as I had been by Brennan's harsh, uncalled-for words, I yet shrank from the thought that I must now meet him [illegible] affect our future relationship. This was the thought that swayed and mastered me. I had pledged myself to avoid him, and indeed had used every means possible to that end. The time was none too long, yet my mind once thoroughly settled as to my duty to her, became calm again, and confident in the outcome. When Caton entered, flushed and visibly excited from what had evidently proven an acrimonious controversy, I greeted him with a smile.

"You appear to have experienced difficulties in regard to details," I said curiously.

"There was much unnecessary talk," he admitted, "but matters have been at last arranged to the satisfaction of all concerned. You are to meet at once, in the rear of the big tobacco shed, a spot entirely removed from observation. I have been compelled to accept pistols as the weapons, as we have nothing else here at all suitable for the purpose—cavalry sabers being far too cumbersome. Lieutenant Starr chances to possess two derringers exactly alike, which we have mutually agreed upon. I hope this is satisfactory to you, Wayne?"

"I am not precisely an expert, but that does not greatly matter. Who acts for Brennan?"

"Captain Moorehouse, rather against his will, I think."

"Very well, Caton; I am perfectly satisfied, and am, indeed, greatly obliged to you; yet before we go out I desire to speak a word or two with the utmost frankness." I stood facing him, my hand resting lightly upon the writing table, my eyes reading his expressive face. "As my second I wish you to comprehend fully my actions, and the motives that inspire them. If they are in any way unsatisfactory to your mind you may feel at perfect liberty to withhold your services. I am now, and always have been, opposed to dueling; I believe it wrong in principle, and a travesty upon justice; but it is a custom of the South, a requirement among officers of our army, and after what has just occurred between Major Brennan and myself I cannot honorably refuse any longer to go out. Major Brennan has deliberately placed me in a position where I cannot avoid meeting him without losing all standing in my corps. I sought to escape, but was prevented by accident; now I simply yield to the inevitable. I feel confident you will not misconstrue these words; you surely know me sufficiently well so as not to attribute them to cowardice. I shall face him exactly in accordance with your arrangements, asking nothing upon my part, yielding him every satisfaction he can possibly desire—but I shall fire in the air."

He stared at me incredulously, his face a perfect picture of amazement. "But, Wayne," he stammered, "are you aware that Major Brennan is an expert with the pistol? that he holds the Sixth Corps trophy? Do you realize that he goes out deliberately intending to kill you?"

"I was not posted as to the first fact you mention, but have never entertained the slightest doubt as to the other. However, they do not in the least affect my decision. Yet I do not desire you to suppose that I am at all quixotic in this—there is a personal reason why I am perfectly willing to risk my life rather than injure Major Brennan."

His troubled eyes studied me intently, and then his face suddenly brightened with a new thought. "Wayne," he asked, placing his hand upon my arm familiarly, "is it Mrs. Brennan?"

For an instant I hesitated, but his manly, honest countenance reassured me. "Between us only, it is," I answered [illegible] —if he takes advantage treacherously, and you fall (as God forbid!) I will face him myself; and when I do, there will be no firing in the air."

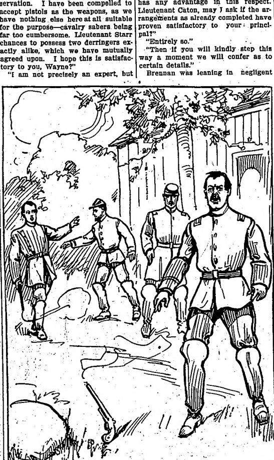
I do not remember that we spoke, save once, while we passed out through the orchard field where the big tobacco shed stood. Not until we turned the corner of the great ramshackle building, which in other and more prosperous days had been dedicated to the curing of the leaf, did we perceive any signs of the presence of our antagonists. They were standing upon the further side, directly opposite the door, and both bowed slightly as we approached. The Captain came toward us slowly.

"It is to be greatly regretted, gentlemen," he said, with ceremonious politeness, "that we have no surgeon with us. However, neither contestant has any advantage in this respect. Lieutenant Caton, may I ask if the arrangements as already completed have proven satisfactory to your principal?"

"Entirely so."

"Then if you will kindly step this way a moment we will confer as to certain details."

Brennan was leaning in negligent attitude against the side of the building, his eyes fastened upon the ground, the blue smoke of a cigar curled lazily above his head. I glanced toward him, and then sought to amuse myself watching the queer antics of a gray squirrel on the fence rail beyond. I felt no desire for further thought, only an intense anxiety for them to hurry the preliminaries, and have the affair settled as speedily as possible. I was aroused by Moorehouse's rather nasal voice.



"Brennan Hurled His Yet Smoking Derringer at His Feet With an Oath."

"Gentlemen, will you please take your positions. Major Brennan, you will stand three paces to the right of that sapling, facing directly south. Captain Wayne, kindly walk straight west from the shed door until you come opposite the Major's position."

I noted Brennan throw away the stump of his cigar, and then I walked slowly forward until I reached the point assigned me. My heart was beating fast now, for I fully realized the probabilities of the next few minutes, and felt little doubt that serious injury, if not death, was to be my portion. Yet my trained nerves did not fail me, and outwardly I appeared fully as cool and deliberate as my opponent. Years of constant exposure to peril in every form had yielded me a grim philosophy of fatalism that now stood me in most excellent stead. Indeed, I doubt not, had I chosen to put it to the test, my hand would have proven the steadier of the two, for Brennan's face was flushed, and he plainly exhibited the intense animosity with which he confronted me.

How peculiar the mind often operates in such moments of exciting suspense. I recall remarking a very slight stoop in Brennan's shoulders which I had never perceived before, I remember wondering where Moorehouse had ever discovered a tailor to give so shocking a fit to his coat, and finally I grew almost interested in two birds perched upon the limb of a tree opposite where I stood. I even smiled to myself over a jest one of the young officers had made an hour before. Yet with it all I remained keenly observant and fully aware of each movement made by the others on the field. I saw Caton accept the derringer handed him and test it carefully, the long, slim, blue barrel looking deadly enough as he held it up between me and the sky. Then Moorehouse approached Brennan with its fellow in his grasp, and the Lieutenant crossed over, and stood beside me.

"Here is the gun, Wayne," he said, "and I sincerely hope you have changed your decision. There is no mercy in Brennan's eyes."

"So I notice," I answered, taking the derringer from him, and examining it with some curiosity, "but I shall do as I said, nevertheless. It is not any sentiment of mercy I feel which spares him, but a duty that appeals to me even more strongly than hate."

"By Heaven, I wish it were otherwise."

"Who gives the word?" I questioned.

"I do; are you ready?"

"Perfectly."

I held out my hand, and his fingers closed upon it with warm, friendly grip. The next moment Brennan and I stood, seemingly alone, facing each other, as motionless as two statues. His coat was buttoned to the throat, his cap-visor pulled low over his eyes, his pistol hand hanging straight down at his side, his gaze never wavering from me. I knew he was coolly, deliberately measuring the distance between us with as deadly a purpose as any murderer. The almost painful stillness was broken by Caton, and I marked the tremor in his voice.

"Are you both ready, gentlemen?"

"I am," said Brennan.

"Ready," I replied.

"The word will be one, two, three—fire; with a slight pause after the three. A report from either pistol before the final word is spoken I shall take personally. Be prepared now."

"Ready!" said the voice once more; and as I saw Brennan's arm slowly rise, I lifted mine also, and covered him, noting, as I did so, almost in wonder, with what steadiness of nerve and wrist I held the slender gauge just beneath the visor of his cap. Deliberately, as though he dreaded the necessity, Caton counted:

"One; two; three—fire!"

My pistol exploded, the charge striking the limb above him, and I staggered backward, my hat torn from my head, a white line cut through my hair and a thin trickle of blood upon my temple. I saw Caton rushing toward me, his face filled with anxiety, and then Brennan hurled his yet smoking derringer into the dirt at his feet with an oath.

When Beecher "Hollered."

Coming home from the morning service one Sunday Dr. Beecher threw himself on a lounge and said, in a tone of deep dejection: "I believe that was the worst sermon I ever preached." One of his daughters protested that she had seldom heard him when he was more energetic. "Oh, yes," was the impatient reply, "When I haven't anything to say I always holler."—The Outlook.

Very Rich Never Generous

They May Give Away Their Money, but Never Themselves, Says G. K. Chesterton.

There are two other odd and rather important things to be said about them. The first is this: That with this aristocracy we do not have the chance of a lucky variety in types which belongs to larger and looser aristocracies. The moderately rich include all kinds of people—even good people. Even priests are sometimes saints; and even soldiers are sometimes heroes. Some doctors have really grown wealthy by curing their patients and not by flattering them; some brewers have been known to sell beer. But among the very rich you will never find a really generous man, even by accident. They may give their money away, but they will never give themselves away; they are egotistic, secretive, dry as old bones. To be smart enough to get all that money, you must be dull enough to want it.

Lastly, the most serious point about them is this: That the new miser is flattered for his meanness and the old one never was. It was never called self-denial in the old miser that [illegible] "simple" funeral, are all extolled as if they were creditable to him. They are disgraceful to him, exactly as disgraceful as the tatters and vermin of the old miser were disgraceful to him. To be in rags for charity would be the condition of a saint; to be in rags for money was that of a filthy old fool. Precisely in the same way, to be "simple" for charity is the state of a saint; to be "simple" for money is that of a filthy old fool. Of the two I have more respect for the old miser, gnawing bones in an attic.—G. K. Chesterton in London Daily News.

Thackeray's momentous first appearance in print was a satirical poem, published in the Western Luminary during one of the happy holiday times which he spent in Devonshire, when still a scholar at the Charterhouse. FINAL RESULT OF IMPURE BLOOD

The System Is Left Weak, Run Down and Helpless Against the Attacks of Disease.

If you need strength, if your blood is thin, your digestion disordered, it will pay you to investigate the merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, the remedy that has transformed so many weak, anæmic, dyspeptic, ambitionless people into strong, healthy, hungry men and women.

Mrs. Lena May Roberts, whose address is R. F. D. No. 3, Aberdeen, So. Dakota after several months of suffering finally found the right tonic in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says:

"For months after the birth of my baby, I suffered terribly from a general breakdown in health. I was in bed for three months and after that was able to be up only part of the time. I was sick all over, being pale, weak and thin. My appetite was gone and my head ached most of the time. Oftentimes there seemed to be a rush of blood to my head and I would faint away. I was very nervous and was not strong enough to do any work.

"As the treatment I was taking did not help me, I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which a friend said had helped her. After taking a few boxes, I began to get well rapidly. I continued using them for a time and am now as well and strong as ever in my life."

The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in general debility lies in their direct response to the needs of the blood. Their work is to make new blood. That they do this well is shown by the gradual disappearance of the symptoms and the return of color and health. They lay the foundation for permanent health in the future.

For the same reason these pills have cured anæmia, after-effects of the grip and fevers, rheumatism, indigestion, and nervousness, dizziness, neuralgia and St. Vitus' dance, and are recommended wherever a tonic for the blood and nerves is needed.

A valuable booklet, "Diseases of the Blood," containing fuller information about rheumatism and other diseases of the blood will be sent free upon request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

What the Copy Boy Wrote.

Representative Dan Anthony of Kansas, publisher of the Leavenworth Times, once had an office boy who yearned to know how to use a typewriter—which accomplishment, the boy figured, would make him a regular reporter.

Anthony turned an old broken-down machine over to him, says the Washington Herald, and bade him learn to run it.

"What'll I write?" the boy asked.

"Oh, just take some sentence, any sentence at all," Anthony told him, "and see how long it will take you to fill a page with it."

The boy set to work. An hour or two later Anthony chanced to notice the page on which the lad had been working. From top to bottom of the sheet, and from margin to margin, the boy had written one sentence over and over again until there was scarcely a white spot visible on the paper. The sentence the boy had selected to practice with was: "Who the —— invented school?"

A TROUBLE MAKER

Coffee Poison Breeds Variety of Ills.

A California woman who didn't know for twenty years what kept her ill, writes to tell how she won back her health by quitting coffee:

"I am 54 years old," she says, "have used coffee all my life, and for 20 years suffered from indigestion and insomnia. Life was a burden and a drag to me all the time, and about once a year my ailments got such hold upon me that I was regularly 'sick in bed' for several weeks each time.

"I was reluctant to conclude that coffee was the cause of my trouble, but I am thankful that I found out the truth.

"Then I determined to use Postum exclusively—for a week at first—for I doubted my ability to do without coffee for any length of time. I made the Postum carefully, as directed, and before the week expired had my reward in a perceptible increase in strength and spirits.

"Seeing the good that my short experiment had accomplished, I resolved to continue the use of Postum, cutting out the coffee entirely. This I did for nine months, finding, daily, increased cause for gratification at my steadily improving health. My indigestion gradually left me, my sleep returned, I gained 26 pounds in weight, my color changed from sallow to a fresh, rosy hue and life became a blessing.

"Then I thought I would try coffee again, and did so for a few weeks. The punishment for deserting my good friend, Postum, was a return of my old troubles.

"That taught me wisdom, and I am now and shall be all my life hereafter using Postum exclusively and enjoying the benefits it brings me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SOUTH STATE UNITES

BODY SIMILAR TO NORTHERN MINNESOTA DEVELOPMENT LEAGUE IS LAUNCHED AT ST. PETER.

LEGISLATURE ROASTED

Funds for More Practical Schools, Less for State University, Is Substance of Criticism.

St. Peter.—Improvement of Southern Minnesota will be the purpose of an association which will be formed within the next thirty days. It will be patterned after the Northern Minnesota Development association, and one of its chief purposes will be to correct conditions which have resulted in a decrease of population in this part of the state.

Tentative plans for the organization of the association were discussed at a joint meeting of the St. Peter and North Mankato Commercial clubs held in this city. More than a hundred members of the North Mankato club came to St. Peter in a chartered car to attend the meeting and to be present at a banquet given in their honor.

Judge Lorin Cray of Mankato was the principal speaker. The last census, he said, had shown that Southern Minnesota, one of the richest agricultural regions in the West, had suffered a loss in population. He criticized the state Legislature for bestowing fabulous appropriations upon the University of Minnesota, and advocated a wider distribution of schools offering practical courses of instruction.

W. E. Stewart of North Mankato advocated the organization of an improvement association patterned after that in the northern part of the state. He wanted a league to give publicity to the opportunities offered by Southern Minnesota to stimulate its development and to look after legislation affecting it. A resolution he introduced provided that commercial bodies throughout the southern tier of counties be invited to send representatives to a meeting to be held in Mankato, and after it had been adopted, the St. Peter club voted to appoint a committee of three to meet with similar committees from the Mankato and North Mankato clubs to fix a date for the meeting.

A. M. Jenson, president of the St. Peter club, has appointed Clerk of Court William Mallgren, County Commissioner Al. J. Potts and O. J. Quane as the representatives of this city.

NEW IRON RANGE LINE

Proposed Interurban Road Will Serve Six Towns.

Boston.—Boston and New York capitalists have organized the Mesaba railway company, to build a high-speed interurban road on the Mesaba Range, Minnesota, between Hibbing and Gilbert. Six towns to be served by this new road are now without traction facilities. The new company will have an initial issue of $1,000,000, first mortgage, five per cent bonds, $500,000 preferred stock, and $1,500,000 common stock.

The underwriting has been undertaken by a syndicate headed by Tucker, Anthony & Co., of Boston, with whom are associated Charles D. Barney & Co., of New York. The work of construction to be started in the near future is to be under the supervision of an advisory committee, comprising Robert W. Watson of New York, vice president of the Great Northern Power company of Duluth; Oscar Mitchell, a Duluth attorney, and Chauncey Eldridge of Tucker, Anthony & Co., Boston.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Forty minutes after his arrival in Los Angeles T. G. Walther, aged 63 years, of St. Paul, fell from a street car, suffering a fractured skull. He died an hour later. Walther's anxiety to help his wife alight from the car probably cost him his life. He stood on the lower step of the rear end of the car to be ready to assist her. Before the car slowed up, he fell off.

UPHOLDS CREDIT LAW.

Sustains Act Against Claim That It Is Double Taxation.

St. Paul.—Minnesota's new law for assessing moneys and credits is upheld by the state supreme court in a decision presented in the case of the Winona Motor company against the state tax commission. The company appealed to the court from the order of the tax commission denying its application to have the company's debts and other liabilities deducted from the assessment for moneys and credits and contended that the law is unconstitutional as it imposes double taxation. The court holds the law constitutional and sustains the tax commission in refusing to permit debts to be figured as an offset in determining the assessed value of credits.

FIRE AT INDIAN DANCE

Roof of Nett Lake Hall Catches Fire. —Chief Prevents Panic.

Duluth.—Word has just been received from Nett Lake that the long anticipated dance between the White Earth, Fond du Lac and Nett Lake bands of Indians at Nett Lake was interrupted by the roof of the dance hall taking fire and the dancers, bedecked in all their finery of beads and headfeathers, got out and formed a bucket brigade and extinguished the flames.

The dance was just getting good when the Chief Mahjiskung discovered the fire. His manner of notifying the party of the fact was to tell them that the dance was at an end and everybody should immediately go outside. Then he uttered a warwhoop and it was the signal to fight the fire.

100 NEW BRIDGES

SUMMER'S PLANS OF COUNTY BOARDS MOST EXTENSIVE SINCE WORK BEGAN.

MANY ASK FOR STATE AID

$300,000 For Distribution—Structures Proposed One-half as Many Built With State Aid Since 1907.

St. Paul.—One hundred bridges, half as many as have been constructed with state aid since 1907, will be built on state roads in Minnesota during 1912, if the applications for this purpose from the county boards pending with the State Highway commission are allowed when the commission makes its annual allotment of state aid at its next meeting, February 27.

Because they will be larger, these hundred bridges will cost practically the same as did the two hundred previously constructed, or $40,000, according to Carl E. Nagel, bridge engineer for the commission. In former years it has been the custom of the county boards not to ask for state aid on the larger bridges they intended to build, because the annual allotment of $1,000 was not large enough to take care of the road work they desired done.

Average Cost Is Higher.

Where it had $80,000 to distribute in 1911, the commission will apportion 300,000 this year, and this great increase in the funds is responsible for the unusual amount of bridge work planned for 1912. Some of the bridges are the small, short beam span across creeks, while others run as long as a 160-foot beam structure. Where it is cheaper to use steel, it will be used, but in as many cases as possible cement will be used.

The average cost of the bridges built during the last four years has been $2,000, according to Mr. Nagel, the cost ranging from $1,200 for the smallest to $5,000 for the largest. The average cost of those to be built during 1912 will be about $4,000.

The commission's engineers prepare the plans and specifications for all of these bridges, and in addition other bridges built at the expense of the townships or counties, for which applications are received. During the last four years, the commission's engineers have investigated and planned two hundred other bridges than those on state roads, to which the state contributed no aid.

The law of the last Legislature, saying a county is not liable for the cost of a bridge unless it is approved by the commission, has resulted in bringing in more of these applications, instead of the former requests for the engineers to pass upon bridges after they have been constructed on plans not prepared by the commission, Mr. Nagel said. The attorney general's department has ruled that to gain the benefit of the law, the counties or townships must have the bridges constructed on plans prepared by the commission.

GIRL NOT TO BE DENIED

Chooses a Second Guardian and Wins His Consent to Marriage.

Litchfield.—Clerk of Court C. H. Atkinson last week issued a marriage license to Gerhard Thedar and Mary Dank, both of Forest Prairie. The bride-elect is an orphan between 16 and 17 years of age, and in order for her to be granted a license to wed it was necessary that the consent of her guardian be obtained. The guardian was a Forest Prairie farmer, and he refused permission. There is a law, however, that helped to solve the difficulty. This provides that after a minor arrives at the age of 14 he or she may dismiss the guardian appointed previously and select another.

Acting under this law, Miss Dank applied to the probate court to have Michael Ryan of this city appointed her guardian, which was done. She then asked and obtained his consent to her marriage to Mr. Thedar and the license was issued.

WARFARE ON WEEDS

Grand Jury Makes Recommendation Which Meets With Hearty Response.

Thief River Falls.—The Pennington county grand jury at its recent session adopted a resolution calling attention to the provisions of law relative to the suppression of noxious weeds, and suggested that each town be divided into three districts, one of which shall be assigned to each member of the town board and over which he shall have general supervision for the purpose of aiding in the enforcement of the noxious weed laws. The farmers have taken up the proposition of clean seed and are determined in future to avoid the heavy loss to which they are subjected by reason of the heavy percentage of weed seeds in their grains.

Election Results At Virginia.

Virginia.—M. A. Murphy, municipal ownership candidate for mayor, won over H. O. Johnson, the administration candidate, by 200. R. J. McGhee, F. L. Johnson and Dan Coffey, candidates for aldermen at large, were also elected. Johnson and McGee were on the municipal ownership ticket. Judge J. P. Carey was re-elected municipal judge by a small plurality. The total vote was 1,400 and the result is regarded as a victory for the advocates of municipal ownership of the water and light plant.

Beer Flows Through Streets.

Fergus Falls.—Beer flowed in the streets here when Sheriff Billings disposed of the stock he had seized in the "blind pigs" operated by Tom Wilson and George Munson at Vining, this county. Something like fifteen cases of twenty-four quarts each were confiscated when the places were raided. [illegible]

COST OF GRAIN GROWING IN CENTRAL CANADA

A careful canvass made of a number of men farming in a large way indicates that even with the extreme expense of harvesting the crop, which has been caused by the bad weather and difficulty in threshing, wheat has been produced and put on the market for less than 55 cents a bushel. The average freight rate is not over 13 cents per bushel. This would make the cost of production and freight 68 cents and would leave the farmer an actual margin on his low-grade wheat of 17½ cents and for his high-grade wheat of 19½ cents; and though this is not as large a profit as the farmer has every right to expect, it is a profit not to be despised, and which should leave a very fair amount of money to his credit when all the expenses of the year have been paid, unless the value of low-grade wheat sinks very much below its present level. A matter of importance to the prospective settler is that of the cost of production. The following table has been prepared after careful investigation:

Interest on 320 acres, value $30 per acre, 3 years at 6 per cent interest	$1,720.00
Interest on horses, machinery, wagons, ploughs, harrows, etc., to operate 320 acres—say $2,500 for 3 years	450.00
Getting 320 acres ready for crop first year, doing one's own work, with hired help, about $3.50 per acre	1,120.00
Getting 320 acres ready for crop, second and third year, about $1.25 per acre per year, or $2.50 per acre 2 years one's own work and hired help	800.00
Seed per year, wheat, per acre $1.25, 3 years	1,200.00
Seeding, 320 acres, 25 cents per acre, 3 years	240.00
Twine, 320 acres, 30 cents per acre, 3 years	288.00
Harvesting, 320 acres, 30 cents per acre, 3 years	288.00
Marketing, 320 acres, estimate 20 bushels per acre per year for 3 years, 3 cents per bushel, or 9 cents per bushel for 3 years	576.00
Threshing 320 acres, estimate 20 bushels per acre per year for 3 years, 6 cents per bushel per year or 18 cents for 3 years	1,152.00
Total	$7,834.00
Cr.
By wheat crop farm 320 acres for 3 years, average 20 bushels per acre per year for 3 years, or a total of 60 bushels, = 19,200 bushels at 80 cents per bushel	$15,360.00
Balance to credit of farm after 3 years operation, $2,563.00 per year	7,526.00

"To operate 480 acres would cost less in proportion, as the plant required for 320 acres would do for the larger farm, and the interest on plant for the extra 160 acres would be saved."

The figures given may be open to criticism, but they will be found to be reasonably accurate, with a fairness given to the expense columns. There are those who profess to do the work at a much less cost than those given.

Booth Tarkington, the American playwright and novelist, is a very early riser, and, when the English playwright and novelist, Arnold Bennett, visited him at his charming residence in Indianapolis, Mr. Tarkington said, the first evening at dinner:

"Thank you, Mr. Tarkington," the Englishman answered, "but I don't walk in my sleep."

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless, and that no woman, except in rare cases, should submit to them.

Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.

It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some unscrupulous medicine dealers may offer you a substitute. Don't take it. Don't trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.,—take the advice received and be well.

Congressman Steenerson has introduced a bill providing for an appropriation of $75,000 for the building of a Federal building at Thief River Falls.

It takes a rich man to draw a check, a pretty girl to draw attention, a horse to draw a cart, a porous plaster to draw the skin, a toper to draw a cork, a free lunch to draw a crowd, and a well displayed advertisment in the Pioneer to draw trade.

All over this broad land the 22nd of February—Washington's birthday is celebrated. How shall any man add aught to the praise or eulogy of George Washington? History and biography, elequence and poetry have exhausted their combined riches upon the successful leader of the American revolution and the founder of the American republic—our first great national hero.

The Bemidji Sentional has changed hands and last week came out under the management of F. A. Wilson who up to a short time ago occupied the editoral chair of the Bemidji Pioneer. Mr. Wilson is one of the ablest newspaper men in Minnesota today and with a man of Mr. Wilson's caliber to guide the destiny of the Sentinal its future is assured.

St. Valentine

The St. Valentine who suffered martyrdom on the 14th of February was one of the fifty-two saints of that name but nothing has ever been found in his life or in the lives of any of them, that would give occasion for the singular observances of the day. It has been maintained that it was an ancient custom among the Romans during the Lupercalia, celebrated in the month of February, for the boys and men to draw the names of their future wives in honor of their goddess, Februate Juno, and that the Christian clergy finding it absolutely impossible to abolish this heaten practice changed it to a religious ceremony by writing on the slips of paper instead of the names of women those of particular saints whom they were to follow and imitate during the year.

A GOOD SHOWING

Interesting Communication From P. S. Medchill Regarding Local Creamery.

We publish below a communication from P. S. Medchill former manager of the Emardville creamery, which deals with the standing of the local creamery and its out put in comparison with other creameries in the state. From the comparisons made by Mr. Medchill it will be noticed that the local institution has made a splendid record the past few years.

The communication follows:

Feb. 5th 1912.

Editor Plummer Pioneer

If I can get space in the Pioneer for the following it may be some interesting reading for the patrons of the local creamery to see how this creamery's standing compared with other creameries in the state. As the local creamery shows up very good I did not have this published before because there may be someone that would think I did it to brag of myself as the manager but now when I am out of this office and have no intention to ever accept the position again I will give the report of the dairy division of the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry. Here the report follows: Average amount of butter made by the creameries 114198 lbs. Amount made by your creamery 7402. 05 lbs average price paid to patrons per. lb. of butterfat by creameries 30.98 cents, average price paid by your creamery 32.90, average cost of making per lb. of butter 2.46 cents, average cost at your creamery 1.93 cents average overrun of creameries [illegible] cents, average overrun of your creamery 22.58, average shrinkage per tub was 0.58 the highest yearly average price paid for butterfat per lb was 30.40. The lowest yearly average price paid for butterfat per lb was 24.30. The highest buttermaker's salary was $2,212.98. The lowest buttermaker's salary was $378.00, the average salary was $924.20. Side lines (selling milk, cream, making ice cream, feeding or selling buttermilk etc.) were reported from 9 per cent of the creameries.

28 whole milk creameries received per. lb of butter 30.06 cents and paid the patrons per pound of butterfat 32.844. Their average overrun was 20.80 per cent. Therefore for 3,000,000 lbs of butterfat handled by this creamery the patrons received $985. 200.00.

28 hand separator creameries received per pound of butter 27.93c paid patrons per lb of butterfat 32.54c their average overrun was 22.58 per cent therefore for 3. 000.000 lbs of butterfat handled by this creamery the patrons received $976.200.00

The details given above are based on reports showing over 54.000.000 pounds of butter manufactured. So far by, the goverments report. In conclusion I will say let us work together and try our very best to bring good sweet cream and if we furnish good raw material and get first class butter there is no trouble in getting the highest price with a good big premium on top of it.

Respectfully Yours,
P. S. Medchill.

I'm good for an egg a day.
I'm a fool to do it, for what do I get?
My food and lodging. My,
But the poodle gets that: He's the household pet,
And he never laid a single egg yet,
Not even when eggs were high."

The mulley cow remarked to the hen
As she masticated her cud
(That is, the cow did): "Well, what then?
You quit and your name is mud.
I'm good for six gallons of milk each day,
And I'm given my stable and grub,
But the parrot gets that much—anyway
All she can gobble—and what does she pay?
Not a dribble of milk, the dub!"

But the hired man remarked to the pair:
"You get all that's comin' to you.
The poodle does tricks, and the parrot kin swear,
Which is better than you kin do.
You're necessary, but what's the use
Of bewailin' your daily part?
You're bourgeois; work's your only excuse.
You can't do nothin' but jes' produce.
What them fellers does is art."

A Disgrace.

There is in Washington an old "grouch," whose son was graduated from Yale. When the young man came home at the end of his first term he exulted in the fact that he stood next to the head of his class. But the old gentleman was not satisfied.

"Next to the head!" he exclaimed. "What do you mean? I'd like to know what do you think I'm sending you to college for? Next to the head! Why aren't you at the head, where you ought to be?"

At this the son was much crestfallen, but upon his return he went about his work with such ambition that at the end of the term he found himself in the coveted place. When he went home that year he felt very proud. It would be great news to the old man.

When the announcement was made the father contemplated his son for a few minutes in silence, then with a shrug he remarked:

"At the head of the class, eh? Well, that's a fine commentary on Yale university!"—Lippincott's.

The Highlanding creamery is up against it this year for the summer's supply of ice as the ice in the Red Lake river is unfit for use on account of the bad condition of the water caused by the death of the fish in the river. There will be no ice put up for any purpose out of the Red Lake river, this season. People living along the river can no longer make use of the water for their stock, and are oblidged to melt snow.

The ice for the Highlanding creamery is now taken out of the Clearwater river, and is hauled a distance of about eight miles or more.

TO BUILD EXCHANGE

Clearwater Telephone Co., To Erect Quarters For Central.

At the meeting of the board of directors of the Clearwater Telephone company held at the city hall here Saturday afternoon it was decided to accept the proposition of the free lot and to erect a building as permanent quarters for the telephone exchange. The building will be located just east of J. O. Carlson's feed store and will be 14 feet wide by 20 feet long, one story.

Work of erecting the building will be commenced immediately. In order to get the quickest results the building will be erected on another lot so that it may be completed by the time the basement is finished in the spring. It will then be moved unto the foundation.

As the present quarters will have to be vacated in the spring and no suitable quarters were available it was deemed expedient at this time to erect a building exclusively for that purpose, which will give the central nice roomy quarters and should meet all the requirements for years to come.

TAMARAC POLES FOR SALE.

A couple of carloads of fence posts for sale. Inquire of E. L. Wichterman.

Horace Demarius, our popular tonsorial artist has been busy lately trying to conceive of some arrangement whereby he can induce the magnificient barber pole that some times graces the front of his barber shop, to stay in one place. It is getting to grate on his nerves, he says, when on leaving the shop at night he is positive the pole is still standing in front of his place of business, only to find that by morning it has been transferred to some distant part of town. He is at the loss to account for the mysterious power that is responsible for these nightly "jamborries" on the part of his barber pole and offers a shave for the solution to the problem. It is admitted by everyone, of course, that the unusal tactics of the pole is more or less a nuisence and mostly everyone have at one time or other been annoyed by the presence of the pole either on their premises, or in the streets or on the sidewalks.

Horace states that to own a pole of this kind is more of a nuisence than than it is worth, and late the other evening toted the bloomin' pole to the out-skirts of town where with all due respects (for it must be admitted that it deserves some credit even tho it gives its owner a lot of trouble) buried it in a snowdrift. But like the cat with nine lives the pole could not be dispensed with so easily, and the other morning he was horrified to discover it standing upside down again in front of the shop. This capped the climax. It is evident from this that the pole is brim full of the old Nick. At least this is the impression taken by its owner, which is justificial. Being unable to stand the strain any longer he went over to Red Lake Falls Sunday to seek consulation among his "friends", and during his absence there has been no new developments shown on the part of the pole, and if nothing is done to twart it some benefit may yet be gotten from it even tho it stands right side up.

FLAX GROWING IS PROFITABLE

WESTERN CANADA FARMERS BECOMING RICH IN ITS PRODUCTION.

So much has been written regarding the great amount of money made out of growing wheat in the prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, Western Canada, that many other products of the farms are overlooked. These provinces will always grow large areas of wheat—both spring and winter—and the yields will continue to be large, and the general average greater than in any other portion of the continent. Twenty, thirty, forty, and as high as fifty bushels per acre of wheat to the acre—yields unusual in other parts of the wheat growing portions of the continent—have attracted world-wide attention, but what of oats, which yield forty, fifty and as high as one hundred and ten bushels per acre and carry off the world's prize, which, by the way, was also done by wheat raised in Saskatchewan during last November at the New York Land Show. And then, there is the barley, with its big yields, and its excellent samples. Another money-maker, and a big one is flax. The growing of flax is extensively carried on in Western Canada. The writer has before him a circular issued by a prominent farmer at Saskatoon. The circular deals with the treatment of seed flax, the seeding and harvesting, and attributes yields of less than 20 bushels per acre, to later seeding, imperfect and illy-prepared seed. He sowed twenty-five pounds of seed per acre and had a yield of twenty-nine bushels per acre. This will probably dispose of at $2.50 per acre. Speaking of proper preparation of seed and cultivation of soil and opportune sowing, in the circular spoken of there is cited the case of a Mr. White, living fourteen miles south of Rosetown, "who had fifteen acres of summer fallow a year ago last summer, upon which he produced thirty-three bushels to the acre, when many in the district harvested for want of crop. Now, there can be no proper reason advanced why such a crop should not have been produced on all the lands of the same quality in the adjacent district, provided they had been worked and cared for in the same manner. This year (1911) the same man had one hundred acres of summer fallow, had something over 3,800 bushels of wheat. He also had 1,800 bushels of oats and 300 bushels of flax."

There are the cattle, the horses, the roots and the vegetable products of Western Canada farms, all of which individually and collectively deserve special mention, and they are treated of in the literature sent out on application by the Government agents.

"Man," didactically began Professor Twiggs, during a recent session of the Soc Et Tu Um club, "is a creature of habit."

"Eh-yah!" grunted Old Codger. "'Tennyrate, my nephew, Canute J. Babson, seems to be. He has been run over by the same automobile twice. But then Canute always comes home down the same lane about the same hour in the evening, after he has partaken of about the same amount of hard cider."—Puck.

MY LADY OF THE NORTH

The Love Story of A Gray Jacket

by RANDALL PARRISH

Author of "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING"

ILLUSTRATIONS BY ARTHUR T. WILLIAMSON

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sergt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. They get within the lines of the enemy and in the darkness Wayne is taken for a Federal officer and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge mastiff attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of horsemen approach. They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, but who proves to be Maj. Brennan, a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy and he is brought before Sheridan, who threatens him with death unless he reveals the secret message. Wayne believes Edith Brennan to be the wife of Maj. Brennan. He is rescued by Jed Bungay, who starts to reach Gen. Lee, while Wayne in disguise penetrates to the ballroom, beneath which he had been imprisoned. He is introduced to a Miss Minor and barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan recognizing Wayne, says she will save him. Securing a pass through the lines, they are confronted by Brennan, who is knocked senseless. Then, bidding Edith adieu, Wayne makes a dash for liberty. He encounters Bungay; they reach the Lee camp and are sent with reinforcements to join Early. In the battle of Shenandoah the regiment is overwhelmed, and Wayne, while in the hospital, is visited by Edith Brennan. Wayne and Bungay are sent on a scouting detail, and arriving at the Minor place, Wayne meets Miss Minor and Mrs. Bungay, and later Edith appears. Wayne's detachment is besieged by guerrillas. Brennan and his men arrive and aid in repelling the invaders until a rescuing party of bluecoats reach the scene. Brennan challenges Wayne to a duel; the latter fires in the air, and is himself wounded.

CHAPTER XXXV.—Continued.

"Damn it, Moorehouse," he roared, fairly beside himself, "the charge was too heavy; it overshot."

"Are you much hurt?" panted Caton.

"Merely pricked the skin."

Then Brennan's angry voice rang out once more.

"I demand another shot," he insisted loudly. "I demand it, I tell you, Moorehouse. This settles nothing, and I will not be balked just because you don't know enough to load a gun."

Caton wheeled upon him, his blue eyes blazing dangerously.

"You demand a second shot?" he cried indignantly. "Are you not aware, sir, that Captain Wayne fired in the air? It would be murder."

"Fired in the air!" he laughed, as if it was a most excellent joke. "Of course he did, but it was because my ball disconcerted his aim. I fired a second the first, but his derringer was covering me."

Caton strode toward him, his face white with passion.

"Let him have it his way," I called after him, for now my own blood was up. "I shall not be guilty of such neglect again."

He did not heed me, perhaps he did not hear.

"Major Brennan," he said, facing him, his voice trembling with feeling, "I tell you Captain Wayne purposely shot in the air. He informed me before coming upon the field that he should do so. I positively refuse to permit him to face your fire again."

Brennan's face blazed; chagrin, anger, disappointment fairly infuriated him, and he seemed to lose all self-control. "This is some cowardly trick!" he roared, glaring about him as if seeking some one upon whom he could vent his wrath. "Damn it, I believe my pistol was fixed to overshoot in order to save that fellow. I never missed such a shot before."

Moorehouse broke in upon his raving, so astounded at these intemperate words as to stutter in his speech.

"Do-do you d-dare to in-sinuate, Major Brennan," he began, "that I have—" he paused, his mouth wide open, staring toward the shed. Involuntarily we glanced in that direction also, wondering what he saw. There, in the open doorway, as in a frame, dressed almost entirely in white, her graceful figure and fair young face clearly defined against the dark background, stood Edith Brennan.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The Last Good-by.

She exhibited no outward sign of agitation as she left her position and slowly advanced toward us. Daintily lifting her skirts to keep them from contact with the weeds under foot, her head poised proudly, her eyes a bit disdainful of it all, she paused before Caton.

"Lieutenant," she questioned in a clear tone which seemed to command an answer, "I have always found you an impartial friend. Will you kindly inform me as to the true meaning of all this?"

He hesitated, hardly knowing what to reply, but her imperious eyes were upon him—they insisted, and he stammered lamely:

"Two of the gentlemen, madam, were about to settle a slight disagreement by means of the code."

"Were about?" she echoed, scornful of all deceit. "Surely I heard shots as I came through the orchard?"

"One fire has been exchanged," he reluctantly admitted.

"And Captain Wayne has been wounded?"

I was not aware until that moment that she had even so much as noticed my presence.

"Very slightly, madam."

"His opponent escaped uninjured?"

Caton bowed, glanced uneasily toward me, and then blurted forth impulsively: "Captain Wayne fired in the air, madam."

"A most delightful situation, surely," she said clearly and sarcastically. "One would almost suppose we had wholly reverted to barbarism, and that our boasted civilization was but mockery. Think of it," and the proud disdain in her face held us silent, "not six hours ago that house yonder was the scene of a desperate battle. With in its blood-stained rooms men fought and died, cheering in their agony like heroes of romance. I saw there two men battling shoulder to shoulder against a host of infuriated ruffians, seeking to protect helpless women. They wore different uniforms, they followed different flags, by the fortune of war they were enemies, yet they could fight and die in defense of the weak. I thanked God upon my knees that I had been privileged to know such men and could call them friends. No nobler, truer, manlier deed at arms was ever done! Yet, mark you, no sooner is that duty over—scarcely are their dead comrades buried—when they forget every natural instinct of of gratitude, of true manliness, and spring at each other's throat like two maddened beasts. I care not what the case may be—the act is shameful, and an insult to every woman of this household. Even as I came upon the field voices were clamoring for another shot, in spite of the fact that one man stood already wounded. War may be excusable, but this is not war. Gentlemen, you have fired your last shot on this field, unless you choose to make me your target."

She stood there as a queen might, and commanded an obedience no man among us durst refuse. Brennan's flushed face paled, and his lips trembled as he sought to make excuse.

"Edith," he protested, "you do not know, you do not understand. There are wrongs which can be righted in no other way."

"I do not care to know," she answered coldly, "nor do I ever expect to learn that murder can right a wrong."

"Murder! You use strong terms. The code has been recognized for centuries as the last resort of gentlemen."

"The code! Has it, indeed? What gentlemen? Those of the south exclusively of late. That might possibly pardon your opponent, but not you, for you know very well that in the north no man of any standing would ever venture to resort to it. Moreover, even the code presupposes that men shall stand equal at its bar—I am informed that Captain Wayne fired in the air."

He hesitated, feeling doubtless the uselessness of further protest, yet she permitted him small opportunity for consideration. "Major," she said quietly but firmly, "I should be pleased to have you escort me to the house."

These words, gently as they were spoken, still constituted a command. Her eyes were upon his face, and I doubt not he read within them that he would forfeit all her respect if he failed to obey. Yet he yielded with exceeding poor grace.

"As it seems impossible to continue," he admitted bitterly, "I suppose I may as well go." He turned and fronted me, his eyes glowing. "But understand, sir, this is merely a cessation, not an ending."

I bowed gravely, not daring to trust my voice in speech, lest I should yield to the temptation of my own temper.

"Captain Wayne," she said, glancing back across his broad blue shoulder, and I thought there was a new quality in her voice, the sting had some way gone out of it, "I shall esteem it a kindness if you will call upon me before you depart."

"With pleasure," I hastened to reply, my surprise at the request almost robbing me of speech, "but I shall be compelled to leave at once, as my troop is already under orders."

"I shall detain you for only a moment, but after what you have passed through on our behalf I am unwilling you should depart without realizing our gratitude. You will find me in the library. Come, Frank, I am ready now."

We remained motionless, watching them until they disappeared around the corner of the shed. Brennan walked with stern face, his step heavy, she with averted eyes, a slight smile of triumph curling her lip. Then Moorehouse stooped and picked up the derringer the Major had thrown away.

"By thunder, but she's right!" he exclaimed emphatically. "I tell you that's a mighty fine woman. Blame me, if she didn't face us like a queen."

No one answered, and without exchanging another word we walked together to the house. There I found the remnant of my troop standing beside their horses, chaffing with a dozen idle Yankee cavalrymen who were lounging on the wide steps.

The time had come when I must say a final farewell and depart. Not the slightest excuse remained for further delay. I dreaded the ordeal, but no escape was possible, and I entered the house for what I well knew was to be the last time. My mind was gravely troubled; I knew not what to expect, how far I might venture to hope. Why had she desired to see me again? Surely the public reason she offered could not be the real one. Had she only been free, a maid whose hand remained her own to surrender as she pleased, I should never have hesitated, never have doubted her purpose; but now that could not be.

As I knocked almost timidly at the closed library door a gentle voice said, "Come," and I entered, my heart throbbing like a frightened girl's. She stood waiting me nearly in the center of that spacious apartment, dressed in the same light raiment she had worn without, and her greeting was calm and friendly, yet tinged by a proud dignity I cannot describe. I believed for an instant that we were alone, and my blood raced through my veins in sudden expectancy; then my eyes fell upon Mrs. Minor comfortably seated in an armchair before the fire and I realized that she was present to restrain me from forgetfulness. But in very truth my lady hardly needed such protection—her speech, her manner, her proud constraint told me at once most plainly that no existing tie between us had caused our meeting.

"Captain Wayne," she said softly, her high color alone giving evidence of any memory of the past, "I scarcely thought that we should meet again, yet was not willing to part with you under any misunderstanding. I have learned from Lieutenant Caton the full particulars of your action in connection with Major Brennan. I wish you to realize that I appreciate your efforts to escape a hostile meeting and esteem you most highly for your forbearance on the field. It was indeed a noble proof of true courage. May I ask why did you fire in the air?"

Had she not held me so away from her by her manner I should have then and there told her all the truth. As it was I durst not.

"I felt convinced that if my bullet reached Major Brennan it would injure you. I preferred not to do that."

"I believed it was for my sake you made the sacrifice." She paused; then asked in yet lower tones: "Was my name mentioned during your contention—I mean publicly?"

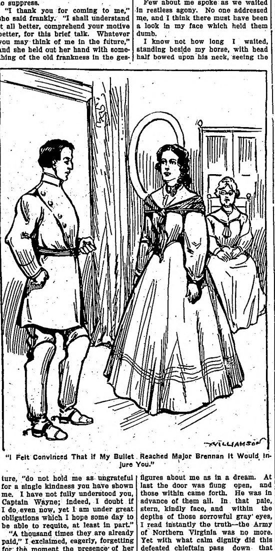
"It was not; Caton alone is aware I refrained because of the reason I have already given you."

"Your wound is not serious?"

"Too insignificant to be worthy of mention."

She was silent, her eyes upon the carpet, her bosom rising and falling with the emotion she sought in vain to suppress.

"I thank you for coming to me," she said frankly. "I shall understand it all better, comprehend your motive better, for this brief talk. Whatever you may think of me in the future," and she held out her hand with something of the old frankness in the gesture, "do not hold me as ungrateful for a single kindness you have shown me. I have not fully understood you, Captain Wayne; indeed, I doubt if I do even now, yet I am under great obligations which I hope some day to be able to requite, at least in part."



"I Felt Convinced That If My Bullet Reached Major Brennan It Would Injure You."

"A thousand times they are already paid," I exclaimed, eagerly, forgetting for the moment the presence of her silent chaperon. "You have given me that which is more than life—"

"Do not, Captain Wayne," she interrupted, her cheeks aflame. "I would rather forget. Please do not; I did not send to you for that, only to tell you I knew and understood. We must part now. Will you say good-bye?"

"If you bid me, yes, I will say good-bye," I answered, my own self-control brought back instantly by her words and manner, "but I retain that which I do not mean to forget—your gracious words of invitation to the North."

She stood with parted lips, as though she struggled to force back that which should not be uttered. Then she whispered swiftly:

"It is not my wish that you should."

Was there ever such another paradox of a woman? I knew not how to read her aright, for I scarce ever found her twice the same. Which represented the truth of her character—her cool dignity, her impetuous pride, or that gentle tenderness which befitted her so well? Which was the armor, which the heart of this fair lady of the North?

As we rode down the path to the eastward, a snowy handkerchief fluttered for an instant at the library window. I raised my hat in silent greeting, and we were gone.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

The Furling of the Flags.

The close of the long and bitter struggle had come; to those who had cast their fortunes with the South it seemed almost as the end of the world. I had thought to write of those last sad days, to picture them in all their contrasting light and shadow, but now I cannot. There are thoughts too deep for human utterance, memories too sacred for the pen. I rejoice that I was a part of it; that to the lowering of the last tattered battle-flag I remained constant to the best traditions of my house. I cannot sit here now, beneath the protecting shadow of a flag for which my son fought and died, and write that I regret the ending, for years of peace have taught us of the South lessons no less valuable than did the war; yet do I rejoice today that, having once donned the gray, I wore it until the last shotted gun voiced its grim message to the North.

It is hardly more than a dream now, sometimes vague and shadowy, again distinct with living figures and historic scenes. I require but to close my eyes to behold once more those slender lines of ragged, weary, hungry men, to whom fighting had become synonymous with life. I pass again through the fiery rain of those last fierce battles, when in desperation we sought to check the unnumbered blue legions that fairly crushed us beneath their weight.

I saw it all; I held a part in it all. Upon that April day which witnessed the turning of the last sad page in this tragedy, I stood without the McLean house, ankle deep in the trampled mud of the yard, surrounded by a group of Federal officers. Within was my commander, the old gray hero of Virginia, together with the great silent soldier of the North.

Few about me spoke as we waited in restless agony. No one addressed me, and I think there must have been a look in my face which held them dumb.

I know not how long I waited, standing beside my horse, with head half bowed upon his neck, seeing the figures about me as in a dream. At last the door was flung open, and those within came forth. He was in advance of them all. In that pale, stern, kindly face, and within the depths of those sorrowful gray eyes, I read instantly the truth—the Army of Northern Virginia was no more. Yet with what calm dignity did this defeated chieftain pass down that blue lane, his head erect, his eyes undimmed—as dauntless in that awful hour of surrender as when he rode before his cheering legions of fighting men. Only as he came to where I stood, and caught the look of suffering upon my face, did he once falter, and then I noted no more than the slight twitching of his lips beneath the short gray beard.

"Captain Wayne," he said, with all his old-time courtesy, "I shall have to trouble you to ride to General Hills' division and request him to cease firing at once."

I turned reluctantly away from him, knowing full well in my heart I was bearing my last order, and rode at a hard trot down the road between long lines of waiting Federal infantry. I scarcely so much as saw them, for my head was bent low over the saddle pommel, and my eyes were blurred with tears.

• • • • • • •

The sun lay hot and golden over the dusty roads and fenceless fields. The air was vocal with blare of trumpets and roll of drums, while everywhere the eye rested upon blue lines and long columns of marching troops. I formed one of a little gray squad moving slowly southward—a mere fragment of the fighting men of the Confederacy, making their way homeward as best they might. As the roads forked I left them, for here our paths diverged, and it chanced I was the only one whose hope lay westward.

Silently, thoughtfully I trudged on for an hour through the thick red dust. My horse, sorely wounded in our last skirmish, limped painfully behind me, his bridle-rein flung carelessly over my arm. Out yonder, where the sun pointed the way with streams of fire, I was to take up life anew. Life! What was there left to me in that word? A deserted, despoiled farm alone awaited my coming; hardly a remembered face, scarcely a future hope. The glitter of a passing troop of cavalry drew my mind for an instant to Edith Brennan, but I crushed the thought. Even were she free, what had I now to place at her proud feet,—I, a penniless, defeated, homeless man? At a cross-roads a Federal picket halted me, and I aroused sufficiently to hand him the paper which entitled me to safe passage through the lines. He handed me back the paper and motioned me to pass on. I had gone a hundred yards or more when I became aware that he was calling after me.

Using Time.

It is always easier to wish that we had more time than to use the time that we have. So, by wasting time in wishing, we still further reduce the precious asset of the actual and only time that is really ours. The person who is not capitalizing all the time he has at the rate of sixty seconds to the minute would not be much better off with forty-eight hours in his day. Those who turn out what is, to the rest of us, a discouragingly large amount of work, have simply learned the art of using all their time—particularly the nooks and corners, the odds and ends, of their time. They utilize a five or ten-minute scrap of time as eagerly as they do a half-day. And so things get done, and their year's output seems stupendous. With the average man, unless he can see several hours clear for a piece of work, he will attempt little out of the ordinary; and that is why he remains an average man.—Sunday School Times.

Wives for Tobacco.

In the early settlement of Virginia, when the adventurers were principally unmarried men, it was deemed necessary to export such women as could be prevailed upon to quit England, as wives for the planters. A letter accompanying one of these matrimonial shipments, dated London, August 12, 1621, says:

"We send you in the ship one widow and eleven maids, as wives for the people of Virginia; there hath been especial care had in the choice of them, for there hath not one of them been received but upon good recommendations. There are nearly fifty more that are ready to come. For the reimbursing of charges, it is ordered that every man that marries them, give one hundred pounds of best leaf tobacco for each of them."—Kirkland, Commercial and Business Anecdotes.

Why He Used the Bad Word

Little Matt Explained That the Two Pigs He Was Driving Got His Goat.

Matt Perkins, engine driver on the New York Central, thought his little farm, out near Peekskill, wouldn't be complete without pigs. So he bought a couple and had them sent out, much to the dismay of Willie, his oldest boy, who tearfully protested that the family would be disgraced if their acquaintances found they kept pigs.

But the father was obdurate, and assigned to Matt, Jr., his six-year-old and youngest hopeful, the task of caring for the pigs. This has proved a hard task, and little Matt has been having his troubles during the hot weather.

One day the pigs, being pigs, roamed far afield. Mattie, rounding them up, drove them past the veranda, where his mother happened to be. Mattie was talking to the pigs in no uncertain terms, and it must be confessed he used a word which he really should not. Where he got it no one knows.

The mother promptly called him to task, and Mattie, having penned in the pigs, returned, hot and red of face, to the veranda.

"Mattie," said his mother, sternly, "I shall have to punish you. I heard you say a naughty word."

"Well, I guess I did," was the lad's penitent rejoinder, "but you see, mamma, them pigs jest got my goat."—New York Herald.

The $13 Fine.

Courtrooms are not free from superstition," a lawyer remarked. "For instance, it seems to be an unwritten law of the bench that nobody shall ever be fined $13. In my seventeen years' experience at the New York bar I have seen offenders fined nearly every other amount from $1 to $1,000, but no judge has ever defied fate by imposing a $13 fine.

"Nothing but respect for superstition prevented him from doing it. It was the logical fine. Several times I have labored in the lost cause of unfortunate clients whose fine from the standpoint of damages inflicted should have been $13, but the judge had not the hardihood to name it; he always undershot or overshot the mark and made $12 or $14."

RHEUMATISM A DISEASE OF THE BLOOD

The Treatment Which Is Most Successful Is Directed Toward Building Up and Purifying the Vital Fluid.

That rheumatism is a disease of the blood is shown by the fact that it is hereditary in certain families, and that there is a marked thinning of the blood immediately following its attack.

In the following brief statement are described symptoms which every patient will recognize and the means by which a cure was effected in this case is described with equal fidelity.

If you are suffering from any form of rheumatism with loss of flesh and strength, and thinning of the blood, the remedy that was so effective here deserves a thorough trial.

"About fifteen years ago," says Mrs. Rhoda Pettit, of Louisville, Neb., "after exposure to dampness and wet and being in a run-down condition from overwork, I began to suffer from inflammatory rheumatism. Both my father and mother were sufferers from the same disease. My right side was afflicted and had I no use of my right limb. The cords of the limb seemed to be drawn up. Often the pains would shift from one part of the body to another and, while they were worse in my right limb, they were very severe through the small of my back. There was a sensation as though I was being cut with a knife. My limbs and feet were swollen so that I could not put on my shoes. I suffered intense agony all of the time and when the attacks were severe I was confined to bed for weeks. My stomach was in bad shape. I was troubled with heartburn and gas. I lost weight and my strength was all gone.

"I took medicine from a doctor and tried several other remedies and liniments but nothing helped me until I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had taken them only a short time before I could feel the new blood and after a fair trial I was able to walk. The pills made me a strong, healthy woman and I am entirely cured of the rheumatism. I know I would not be living today if I had not tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. The genuine are sold only in packages bearing the full trade-mark.

Mean People.

Henry Russell, the head of the Boston opera, was describing his foreign tour in search of talent.

"They were mean people," he said of the singers of a certain city. "I could do no business with them. They thought only of money."

Mr. Russell smiled.

"They were as bad as the man who discovered the Blank theater fire.

"The first intimation the box office had of this fire came, at the end of the third act, from a fat man who bounded down the gallery stairs, stuck his face at the ticket window and shouted breathlessly:

"'Theater's afire! Gimme me money back!'"

Always Leap Year.

"It's leap year every year in Papua," said an enthnologist. "The reason isn't that the women are the bosses there. No, quite the contrary. The reason is that love-making is supposed to be a thing beneath the notice of the Papuan male.

"All women look alike to him. So the matrimonial pourparlors all fall on the female sex.

"If a man accepts a girl's proposal, the fact that he is engaged is chalked on his back. But on the girl's back the engagement is branded with a red-hot iron."

Among the Ancients.

Democritus had just announced the theory that the visible universe is merely the result of the fortuitous concourse of atoms.

"Subject, of course," he said, "to the approval of Mr. Gompers."

For he did not wish to be drawn into a magazine controversy over it.

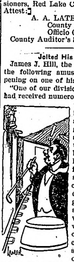
Jolted His Dignity.

James J. Hill, the railroad king, told the following amusing incident happening on one of his roads:

"One of our division superintendents had received numerous complaints that freight trains were in the habit of stopping on a grade crossing in a certain small town, thereby blocking travel for long periods. He issued orders, but still the kicks came in. Finally he decided to investigate personally. A short man in size, very excitable, he went down to the crossing, and, sure enough, there stood, in defiance of his orders, a long freight train anchored squarely across it. A brakeman who didn't know him by sight sat complacently on the top of the car.



"MOVE THAT TRAIN ON!" SPLUTTERED THE "SUPER."

"'Move that train on!' spluttered the little 'super.' 'Get it off the crossing so people can pass. Move on, I say!'

"The brakeman surveyed the tempestuous little man from head to foot. 'You go to blazes, you little shrimp!' he replied. 'You're small enough to crawl under.'"—Cosmopolitan.

Kind Earth.

Earth is here so kind that just tickle her with a hoe and she laughs with a harvest.—Douglas Jerrold.

Misnamed.

An old lady was going over the London zoo, and after some time she went up to a keeper and tapped him on the shoulder with her umbrella.

"Well, mum?" said the keeper.

"I want to ask you," explained the old lady, "which of the animals in the zoo you consider the most remarkable."

The keeper scratched his head for awhile:

"Well, mum," he replied, "arter careful consideration, as you might say, I've come to the conclusion as the biscuit-goes to the laughing hyena!"

"Indeed!" said the old lady in surprise. "And why do you consider the laughing hyena so remarkable?"

"Well, mum," answered the zoological expert, "he only has a sleep once a week, he only has a meal once a month, and he only has a drink once a year. So what he's got to laugh about is a bloomin' mystery to me!"

Scared Him Off.

Ralph R. Bradley, a Chicago lawyer, had a client who had some differences with a farmer down state. Mr. Bradley wrote in the interest of his client on a letterhead showing the address of the lawyer's firm in the Rookery. He received no reply and was obliged eventually to make a trip to close the litigation. Meeting the farmer, he asked him why he had not shown him the courtesy at least to acknowledge the receipt of the letter.

"Well," said the down stater, "I noticed 'The Rookery' on your letterhead, and it bothered me. I am not an educated man, so I had some one look 'rookery' up. He told me it meant a den of thieves, and I concluded not to have anything to do with you."

Literal Interpretation.

A sneak thief had got into the car and made off with a fellow traveler's pocketbook. A greeny, who was evidently on his first trip to the city, had taken the episode in with a certain amount of relish and, despite his supposed greenness, apparently knew more about the identity of the guilty one than any one present when the alarm was raised.

He touched the conductor on the arm and pointed to a man who was hurrying down the block for dear life. "There's the thief," he chuckled dryly.

The conductor turned on him sharply. "You—— fool! If yer saw 'im pickin' th' gent's pocket why didn't yer report 'im 'stead o' lettin' 'im slip off that way?"

"That sign up there scared me," returned the hayseed.

"What sign?"

"Th' one thet sez 'Beware of Pickpockets.'"—Exchange.

Deeds of Aspiration.

What though your lot in life seems poor and small?
What though in great accomplishment
you fall?
Let not the thought of this your soul appall
Nor think your days are spent without avail.

A noble aspiration is a deed
Though unachieved, and he who judges man
Upon his lofty throne will give it heed,
And all will be rewarded as they plan.
—John Kendrick Bangs.

Patience reigned until the query was justly renewed and the railroad man replied:

"Well, sir, I think that train will be near two hours late."

Whereupon the passenger said:

"Say, mister, will you kindly tell me which way that train is going?"—Portland Oregonian.

FOR EVERY FAMILY MEDICINE CHEST

To the head of every family the health of its different members is most important, and the value of an agreeable laxative that is certain in its effect is appreciated. One of the most popular remedies in the family medicine chest is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin that is known to druggists and physicians as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This preparation is mild and gentle in its action on the bowels, yet positive in its effect. A dose of Syrup Pepsin at night means relief next morning, while its tonic properties tone up and strengthen the muscles of stomach, liver and bowels so that these organs are able in a short time to again perform their natural functions without help.

Druggists everywhere sell Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If you have never tried this simple, inexpensive, yet effective remedy, write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and ask for a sample bottle. Dr. Caldwell will be glad to send it without any expense to you whatever.

But Mamma Didn't.

Little Mabel was always tumbling down and getting hurt, but as soon as her mother kissed the bumped forehead Mabel would believe it cured and cease crying. One day she accompanied her mother to the Union depot, and while they were seated in the crowded waiting room an intoxicated man entered the door, tripped over a suitcase, and fell sprawling on the floor. The attention of every one was attracted to the incident, and in the sudden silence following the fall Mabel called out:

"Don't cry, man. Mamma 'll kiss oo, and 'en oo 'll be all right."—Lippincott's Magazine.

No Sale.

"Hill work?" replied the demonstrator, after Stiggins had inspected the new car carefully. "Hill work? Why that's our strong point, Mr. Stiggins. This car can climb a tree."

"Ha! hum!" demurred Stiggins. "Then I guess I'll look elsewhere. I never saw a car yet that climbed trees that was any good afterward."—Harper's Weekly.

For Instance.

"Pa, what does abnormal mean?"

"Something that is out of the ordinary—something that is different from what it might be expected to be —an actress who has never applied for a divorce, for instance."

At the Bank.

"Your husband has stopped payment on your alimony check."

"I know it; he no longer loves me."

Cole's Carbolisalve quickly relieves and cures burning, itching and torturing skin diseases. It instantly stops the pain of burns. Cures without scars. 25c and 50c by druggists. For free sample write to J. W. Cole & Co., Black River Falls, Wis.

Love may not make the world go round, but it seems to make a lot of people giddy.

In Saskatchewan (Western Canada)

800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the thresher's return from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that as well as other districts yielded from 25 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.

LARGE PROFITS are thus derived from the FREE HOMESTEAD LANDS of Western Canada.

This excellent showing causes prices to advance. Land values should double in two years' time. Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts; 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest; wood, water and building material plentiful. 39

PEOPLE SUPREME SAYS ROOSEVELT

EX-PRESIDENT DECLARES HUMAN RIGHTS SHOULD COME BEFORE ALL OTHERS.

MAKES SPEECH AT COLUMBUS

Addresses Members of Ohio Constitutional Convention—Favor Big Business Under Proper Control—Advocates Direct Nominations.

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 21.—That human rights are supreme over all othe rights and that wealth should be the servant, not the master, of the people, was the keynote of an address delivered today by ex-President Roosevelt before the members of the Ohio constitutional convention in session in this city. He declared that unless government was truly representative it was not representative at all. Referring to trusts he said that big business corporations should not be discouraged but that laws should be enacted by the government for their strict supervision.

After acknowledging the honor accorded him in inviting him to address the delegates, Mr. Roosevelt said:

Country Belongs to People.

"I believe in pure democracy. With Lincoln, I hold that 'this country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it.' We progressives believe that the people have the right, the power, and the duty to protect themselves and their own welfare; that human rights are supreme over all other rights; that wealth should be the servant, not the master, of the people. We believe that unless representative government does absolutely represent the people it is not representative government at all. We test the worth of all men and all measures by asking how they contribute to the welfare of the men, women and children of whom this nation is composed. We are engaged in one of the great battles of the age-long contest waged against privilege on behalf of the common welfare. We hold it a prime duty of the people to free our government from the control of money in politics. For this purpose we advocate, not as ends in themselves, but as weapons in the hands of the people, all governmental devices which will make the representatives of the people more easily and certainly responsible to the people's will. . . .

"I am emphatically a believer in constitutionalism, and because of this fact I no less emphatically protest against any theory that would make of the Constitution a means of thwarting instead of securing the absolute right of the people to rule themselves and to provide for their own social and industrial well-being. All constitutions, those of the states no less than that of the nation, are designed, and must be interpreted and administered, so as to fit human rights.

Supreme Power in People.

"I hold it to be the duty of every public servant, and of every man who in public or private life holds a position of leadership in thought or action, to endeavor honestly and fearlessly to guide his fellow-countrymen to right decisions; but I emphatically dissent from the view that it is either wise or necessary to try to devise methods which under the Constitution will automatically prevent the people from deciding for themselves what governmental action they deem just and proper. . . . Constitution-makers should make it clear beyond shadow of doubt that the people in their legislative capacity have the power to enact into law any measure they deem necessary for the betterment of social and industrial conditions.

Mr. Roosevelt declared that in the past too much attention had been paid to the accumulation of prosperity but that the future more attention should be given to its proper distribution.

"The only prosperity worth having," he declared, "is that which affects the mass of the people. I hold it to be our duty to see that the wage-worker, the small producer, the ordinary consumer, shall get their fair share of the benefit of business prosperity. But it either is or ought to be evident to every one that business has to prosper before anybody can get any benefit from it. Therefore I hold that he is the real progressive, that he is the genuine champion of the people, who endeavors to shape the policy alike of the nation and of the several states so as to encourage legitimate and

While the anti-trust law was good as far as it went, Mr. Roosevelt declared that by itself it could accomplish but a trifling part of the government regulation that was necessary. In his opinion the nation and states must co-operate, and he referred to the leading part that Wisconsin, under the direction of Senator LaFollette, had taken. Continuing he said:

"All business into which the element of monopoly in any way or degree enters, and where it proves in practice impossible totally to eliminate this element of monopoly, should be carefully supervised, regulated and controlled by governmental authority; and such control should be exercised by administrative, rather than by judicial, officers. No effort should be made to destroy a big corporation merely because it is big, merely because it has shown itself a peculiarly efficient business instrument. But we should not fear, if necessary, to bring the regulation of big corporations to the point of controlling conditions so that the wage-worker shall have a wage more than sufficient to cover the bare cost of living, and hour of labor not so excessive as to wreck his strength by the strain of unending toil and leave him unfit to do his duty as a good citizen of the community.

Favors Direct Nominations.

Speaking of direct nominations and the initiative and referendum, he said:

"I believe in providing for direct nominations by the people, including therein direct preferential primaries for the election of delegates to the national nominating conventions.

"I believe in the election of United States senators by direct vote. Just as actual experience convinced our people that presidents should be elected (as they now are in practice, although not in theory) by direct vote of the people instead of by direct vote through an untrammeled electoral college, so actual experience has convinced us that senators should be elected by direct vote of the people instead of indirectly through the various legislatures.

"I believe in the initiative and the referendum, which should be used not to destroy representative government, but to correct it whenever it becomes misrepresentative. If in any state the people are themselves satisfied with their present representative system, then it is of course their right to keep that system unchanged; and it is nobody's business but theirs. But in actual practice it has been found in very many states that legislative bodies have not been responsive to the popular will. Therefore I believe that the state should provide for the possibility of direct popular action in order to make good such legislative failure."

Referring to the recall, the speaker said he did not believe that there was any great necessity for it as regards short-term elective officers, but believed it should be generally provided, but with such restrictions as would make it available only when there was a widespread and genuine public feeling among a majority of the voters.

One recall, however, Mr. Roosevelt declared himself heartily in favor of, the recall of decisions on constitutional questions which the people thought were wrong.

People Fit to Rule.

Mr. Roosevelt took issue with many eminent lawyers who do not believe in our American system of government, and in this connection said: "I take absolute issue with all those who hold such a position. I regard it as a complete negation of our whole system of government; and if it became the dominant position in this country, it would mean the absolute upsetting of both the rights and the rule of the people.

"I do not say that the people are infallible. But I do say that our whole history shows that the American people are more often sound in their decisions than is the case with any of the governmental bodies to whom, for their convenience, they have delegated portions of their power. If this is not so, then there is no justification for the existence of our government; and if it is so, then there is no justification for refusing to give the people the real, not merely the nominal, ultimate decision on questions of constitutional law."

In conclusion the speaker said: "Keep clearly in view what are the fundamental ends of government. I hope that not only you and I but all our people may ever remember that while good laws are necessary, while it is necessary to have the right kind of governmental machinery, yet that the all-important matter is to have the right kind of man behind the law. A good Constitution, and good laws under the Constitution, and fearless and upright officials to administer the laws —all these are necessary; but the prime requisite in our national life is, and must always be, the possession by the average citizen of the right kind of character. Our aim must be the moralization of the individual, of the government, of the people as a whole. We desire the moralization, not only of political conditions but of industrial conditions, so that every force in the community, individual and collective, may be directed toward securing for the average man, and average woman, a higher and better and fuller life, in the things of the body no less than those of the mind and the soul."

On Both Sides.

That fine artist, Legros, had always declined to learn English, but he took an inconsistent step, he had himself naturalized. The incident gave occasion to one of his best replies—and, though an austere painter, he was a jovial wit. "Well, Legros, how do you feel?" asked a friend on the morrow of the naturalization. "Why, particularly happy," Legros answered: "Yesterday I had lost the Battle of Waterloo, and today I have won it."—London Chronicle.

Leap year, it has been complained by some one, seems to have been named on the same principle as the "Meeting of the Waters" at Killarney —which is a place where two streams do not meet, but part. A leap year ought to be a year in which we jump over a day—a 364 day year. One explanation is that all the days after February 29 jump forward one day in the week more than usual. The Romans used to call it a "bissextile year," and the French still do so.

LAWYER CURED OF ECZEMA

"While attending school at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1882, I became afflicted with boils, which lasted for about two years, when the affliction assumed the form of an eczema on my face, the lower part of my face being inflamed most of the time. There would be water-blisters rise up and open, and wherever the water would touch it would burn, and cause another one to rise. After the blister would open, the place would scab over, and would burn and itch so as to be almost unbearable at times. In this way the sores would spread from one place to another, back and forth over the whole of my upper lip and chin, and at times the whole lower part of my face would be a solid sore. This condition continued for four or five years, without getting any better, and in fact got worse all the time, so much so that my wife became alarmed lest it prove fatal.

"During all this time of boils and eczema, I doctored with the best physicians of this part of the country, but to no avail. Finally I decided to try Cuticura Remedies, which I did, taking the Cuticura Resolvent, applying the Cuticura Ointment to the sores, and using the Cuticura Soap for washing. In a very short time I began to notice improvement, and continued to use the Cuticura Remedies until I was well again, and have not had a recurrence of the trouble since, which is over twenty years. I have recommended Cuticura Remedies to others ever since, and have great faith in them as remedies for skin diseases." (Signed) A. C. Brandon, Attorney-at-Law, Greenville, O., Jan. 17, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

Subject for the Minister.

According to reports gathered by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, practically 10 per cent. of all deaths in church congregations are caused by tuberculosis. In a study of 312,000 communicants of 725 chuches in which there were 7,000 deaths in 1910, the death rate among these churchmembers was found to be 2.24 for every thousand communicants. This is higher than the rate for the registration area of the United States, which was 1.60 in 1910.

"While these statistics," says the national association, "are not comparable from the point of view of accuracy with those of the bureau of census, sufficient credence may be given to them to indicate that one of the most serious problems the ordinary church has to consider is that of the devastation of its membership by tuberculosis. Every minister in the United States should give this subject some attention during the week preceding or that following April 28, Tuberculosis day."

Newspaper Is the Medium.

"The importance of this whole question of publicity to the consumer is growing on the manufacturer. He sees his competitor or some man in another line turning the trick of publicity and he sit up and thinks. He is gradually realizing that localized, crystalized publicity in the home is what pays best and that he can only get that through the newspaper."—The Daily Club.

Man and His Happiness.

"Man is the creator of his own happiness; it is the aroma of a life lived in harmony with high ideals. For what a man has, he may be dependent on others; what he is, rests with him alone. What he obtains in life is but acquisition; what he attains, is growth. Happiness is the soul's joy in the possession of the intangible."—From Self-Control by William George Jordan.

THE DOCTOR HABIT

And How She Overcame It.

When well selected food has helped the honest physician place his patient in sturdy health and free from the "doctor habit," it is a source of satisfaction to all parties. A Chicago woman says:

"We have not had a doctor in the house during all the 5 years that we have been using Grape-Nuts food. Before we began, however, we had 'the doctor habit,' and scarcely a week went by without a call on our physician.

"When our youngest boy arrived, 5 years ago, I was very much run down and nervous, suffering from indigestion and almost continuous headaches, I was not able to attend to my ordinary domestic duties and was so nervous that I could scarcely control myself. Under advice I took to Grape-Nuts.

"I am now, and have been ever since we began to use Grape-Nuts food, able to do all my own work. The dyspepsia, headaches, nervousness and rheumatism which used to drive me fairly wild, have entirely disappeared.

"My husband finds that in the night work in which he is engaged, Grape-Nuts food supplies him the most wholesome, strengthening and satisfying lunch he ever took with him." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

ROBBED OF $25,000

HEART OF NEW YORK'S FINANCIAL DISTRICT IS SCENE OF DARING HOLDUP.

VICTIMS BADLY BEATEN

Three Highwaymen Leap Into Machine —Secure Loot and Then Make Their Escape in a Waiting Automobile.

New York, N. Y. — Twenty-five thousand dollars in currency was stolen from a taxicab in the heart of the financial district by three highwaymen, who sprang into the vehicle and overpowered W. F. Smith and Frank Wardell, messengers of the East River National bank. Both messengers were badly injured and the robbers escaped with the money, $15,000 in $5 bills and $10,000 in $100 bills. The currency was being transported from the Produce Exchange bank in the lower part of the city.

The taxicab had proceeded up Broadway without mishap when, for some unexplained reason, the chauffeur turned west on Rector street into Church street, skirting the side and rear of Trinity churchyard.

About midway of the old cemetery three men sprang from the curb. One jumped on the chauffeur's seat; the other two got into the vehicle. The man on the seat pressed a revolver in his overcoat pocket against the side of the chauffeur, Gino Martini, and commanded him to drive swiftly on without making an outcry.

Inside the vehicle the two robbers were belaboring the bank messengers over the head. Smith, one of the messengers, is 61 years old, and he was bleeding, and almost unconscious when the taxicab reached Park place, a few blocks north. Wardell was badly beaten about the head, but was not so seriously hurt.

At Park place the highwaymen jumped from the taxicab, bearing a tin box which they had wrested from the messengers, and which contained the currency. In a flash they had sprung into a big black automobile which appeared to be awaiting their coming and were quickly lost in the maze of traffic.

Martini, the taxicab chauffeur, continued to run his machine until he found a policeman. Here he gave the alarm and the two injured messengers were taken to a police station. Smith's condition was so serious that he was removed to a hospital. Wardell's scalp was badly laverated, but because of his youth he stood the fight well.

The taxi was owned and driven by Gino Martini and had been used many times by the officials of the East River bank to transfer cash and securities. Martini told the police that he did not suspect any danger, even when the men leaped into the cab, as he thought they might simply want to ride.

"The man who got by me," he said, "jabbed the gun into my side. 'Keep on a-going,' he hissed at me, 'and if you make a sound or turn, I'll fill you full of lead.' When I felt the gun against my ribs, I gave the car the power. Then I heard the door slam, and I could feel the struggle going on inside the cab, but I did not dare look around.

"We whizzed past two policemen, but I was so scared that I was afraid to make a sound. As I neared Park place the man beside me said: 'Slow down and stop at the corner.' I did as I was told and he jumped off and streaked for the black automobile that was standing there. I felt the door of the taxi open and I saw the other two men jump out and run over to the car, the engine of which had been started. They disappeared before I could tell anybody what had happened."

After questioning Martini at length, the police took him and his taxicab to headquarters. There the fingerprint experts of the department went over the machine in an effort to find fingerprints which might give them a clue.

The reputation and large practice of the physicians in charge are too well known in the Northwest to need any recommendation. Appleton, Wis.—"I take pleasure in writing you an account of my sickness. I told a friend of mine how I felt and she said I had female trouble and advised me to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as she had taken it herself for the same trouble with wonderful results. I had been sickly for two years and overworked myself, and had such bad feelings every month that I could hardly walk for pain. I was very nervous and easily tired out and could not sleep nights. I had dizzy spells, and pimples came on my face. But I have taken your Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has restored my health. I think it is the best medicine in existence."—Miss CECILIA M. BAUER, 1161 Lawrence St., Appleton, Wis.

A SCHOOL TEACHER'S GRATITUDE:

Geneva, Iowa.—"I have been teaching school for some years and I have neglected my health because I was too busy with my work to attend to myself properly. I suffered greatly every month and was on the verge of a nervous breakdown.

"I wrote to you about my condition and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Blood Purifier as you recommended. These remedies have done wonders for me and I can highly and widely recommend them to every suffering woman."—Miss MINNIE SHAVER, R. F. D. No. 1, Geneva, Iowa, c/o Sam Erickson.

A COLORADO GIRL'S CASE:

Montrose, Col.—"I was troubled very much with irregular periods. Sometimes two months would elapse. I suffered severe headache, was weak and nervous, could eat scarcely anything.

"I took both Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and the result was wonderful. I feel like another person.

"I think your remedies are the best on earth and cannot express my thankfulness to you for what they have done to me. I help my neighbors when they are sick, and I shall always recommend your medicines."—Miss ELLA MCCANDLESS, Montrose, Col.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that a medicine that did so much for these girls will benefit any other girl who is suffering with the same troubles?

Does it not seem the only sensible thing to give such a medicine at least a trial? You may be sure that it can do you no harm, and there are lots of proof that it will do you much good.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health. Write to LYDIA E. Paris police give strict attention to the act against throwing waste papers and refuse upon the streets. The Ada Herald of last week makes the prediction that Taft will have the state deligation to the national convention and that Ebehart will be nominated for governor. Now we volunteer a contrary prediction, and that is that no less than Teddy himself will have that state delegation to the national convention and Gorden stands a mighty good chance to be the nominee for Governor unless all signs fail.

We would consider that inquiry at Minneapolis a ridiculous farce, as far as injuring the political chances of Congressman Steenerson in the Ninth is concerned. That adoption of the Tall Norsk into the Chippewa tribe was only a joke, and Mr. Steenerson endeavoring to please the Indians by carring out his part of it. But as for any harm being intended, or any attempt to defraud the Indians out of land, is too foolish a statement to put in print, and if the opposition to Steenerson can not find any other peg to hang their hat on, they had better "go way back and sit down."—The Sunbeam.

Trade at home with the home man, the man that resides at home, lives in your own town, spends all his money at home, and see how much better you and he feels about it. Your money will stay at home then, the one he comes in a few days later and spends your money in your house the same you did in his. Don't let a man trade either with you a hundred years and not buy anything of him. If you don't commence some time to reciprocate he is liable to need something in your line, get mad and walk clear down to New Orleans after it. Reciprocity is a good thing even in a small country hamlet.

Every great crisis in the history of the world has found its man to control and guide it. Call this Providence or accident, the American revolution was no aception to it. Before the first murmurs of discontent were heard in that struggle, the man was being prepared for the crisis on the banks of the Potomac and the Rappahannock, thirty years before Lexington and Bunker Hill, a truthful and manly boy was growning up, ripening into Stalwart young manhood. With only the common school education of that early day, the young man was soon being educated in the broader school of nature and experience, in the great forest, under the open heavens, with his surveyor's chain and his sword, in Indian wars, defending the frontier settlements from savage incursions. That boy was named George Washington whose birthday we all celebrated yesterday.

Roosevelt Leads in Straw Vote.

The Minneapolis Journal has conducted a straw vote on presidental candidates and the results are any thing but encouraging to the Taft supporters. The first publication is of the results of 6,200 votes from representatives of all parties. Roosevelt leading with 2,488 votes, La Follette second with 1,614 and Taft third with 1,331, Cummins received 39 and Hughes 4.

Wilson led the Democratic candidates with 474, Bryan receiving 111, Clark 78, Harmon 30, and Folk 15. Debs received 13 votes.

The Eight district vote is light and not representatives. It gives Roosevelt 60, La Follette 43, and Taft 27. Wilson received 3 and Clark 27 from the Eight district.

Polls of the kind are of doubtful value; but they must be given some consideration when taken in all nine congressional districts and showing such a prepondance of sentiment for one man who has not declared himself a candidate.—Duluth Herald.

We are in reciept of a folder gotten out by Dan Patch Electric Line operating between the Twin Cities and Dubuque. Iowa. This poster is gotten out, however, merely to advertise the success of the road and also with a view of subscribing more stock for the extension of the road to Owatonna-Minn. Aside from the advertising feature it also conveys some interesting facts relative to the success the company has met with during the short time it has been in extistance. For instance, it shows the neat proceeds from their passanger traffic when charging at the rate of 2 cents per mile, when it is asserted by railway companies, this cannot be done at a profit. For fear that the interurrban development might become to popular through the country it has been uphill work for the promoters to secure any financial assistance from the large concerns to promote the venture, but the posters states that "in spite of the determined opposition, in the open and under cover, of certain eastern financial interests, we have succeeded in building and putting into successful operation 40 miles of high class road and have done a large amount of work on south of Northfield. On the merits of success of his enterprise, Mr. M. W. Savage, president of the Dan Patch line makes the prediction "that our great state will have many splendid interrurban systems in the near future, which will greatly increase her attractions for thousand of prospective farmers and business men." "We all want to boost our state," he asserts "and I believe interrurban lines will be a tremenduous factor in her future development."

"Yes; my impudence."

Moisture In Roads.

Stone is perhaps the ideal road material, but it is usually out of the question. Earth roads can be made.

The keynote to success in making them is controlling the moisture. When there is too much of it the earth becomes mud; when too little the result is dust. There is a happy medium between these two extremes, when the soil packs hard. In most soils, excepting clayey ones, it is not difficult to maintain this favorable moisture content. Keep the center of the road higher, so that water cannot remain there. When it does the result is ruts in wet weather, and in dry weather the sides of the road are ground up into dust.

Drainage ditches should be provided along the road. If water stands there it will soak under the roadbed and soften it. Another important factor is to keep a space of fifteen to eighteen feet free from grass and weeds, which, if allowed to grow on the road, take up so much moisture that the soil grinds up into dust.

Good Roads Benefit Schools.

Good roads will make possible the centralization of schools, the employment of more efficient teachers, the use of better apparatus for instruction, and all at less expense than our present system.

Some one has said that the "three links of civilization" are a model farm home and a model country school connected by a stretch of model country road.

DOCTOR LOCATES HERE

Dr. H. H. Hanson, of Sedan, Minn., Desides to Resume Practice Of Medicine Here.

Dr. H. H. Hanson, of Sedan, Pope county, Minn., arrived here this week and has decided to locate here to resume his practice of medicine. Mr. Hanson has opened his office in the Reed building, formerly occupied by Dr. Clark.

Mr. Hanson has successfully practiced his profession for four years at Sedan, and comes well recomended as a physician and surgeon.

Since the departure of Dr. Clark the people of Plummer and vicinity have been handcapped by being without a doctor, and a man of Mr. Hanson's caliber is welcomed by the entire community.

Teaching Agriculture Through Correlation.

Many rural school teachers would like to introduce some Agriculture and Home Economics into their schools, but hesitate to do so because they feel incompetent. Feeling that they know little or nothing about the subject that the school is running very nicely without Agriculture, and that to introduce it would simply add another burden to an already overcrowded curriculim, they hesitate to undertake it. It takes faith to start some agricultural work in the school. The teacher must have confidence in the work and courage to go ahead. Once a teacher has taken a step in the right direction, she will never go back to the old way.

There are several things which the most prepared teacher may do to get started right in agricultural work. The making of illustrated agricultural booklets is one of the best schemes for correlation. Such work teaches the use of correct English, and trains in penmanship. It trains in neatness and organizing ability. It gives a large chance for the development of originality and individuality. It stimulates a great deal of supplementary reading, and teaches the pupil where to go in search of facts for use in the booklet. At the same time, it imparts a great deal of useful information, and brings the school, home and farm closer together. Such language work dignifie farm labor, and interests the pupils in farm life. It is a rational method of correlation Agriculture with the regular school work.

To stimulate this form of work, prizes in the State Industrial Contest are offered for the best booklets on agricultural subjects. Teachers should apply to the Extension Division for Bulletin No. 3, which gives a list of subjects on which prizes will be awarded in 1912.

Senator Gronna of North Dakota has been endeavoring for several years to secure some modifications of the homestead laws, which would remove some of the restrictions now surrounding them, and not impose to rigid conditions on settlers. His plan is embodied in the Jones-Borah bill, which has recently passed the Senate and is now before the House committee on Public lands. Under the terms of the bill three years residence is required to secure patent to the land and six months leave of absence is allowed each year, thereby cutting down the actual period of residence to 18 months.

Senator Gronna declares in support of the measure that Canada's more liberal homestead laws yearly attract thousands of settlers from this side of the line, whereas if our homestead laws were less exating these same settlers would remain in the United States and take up land here. The bill has been referred to a sub-committed of the Public Lands committee of the house, of which Mr. Taylor of Colorado is the chairman. Hearings on the bill will be had, and the Secretary of the Interior, who, it is said, is opposed to the bill, will make a statement.—Eleven Towns.

TO TAKE LONG TRIP

Carl G. Olson, of Kratka, To Visit Old Home In Norway.

Carl G. Olson, of Kratka township, was in town Friday and has decided to dispose of his farm and all his property and will in a short time leave for his old home in Norway where he will remain for some time. Mr. Olson will dispose of his personal property at public auction the 7th of March, and will as soon as the proper arrangements are made leave for the home of his boyhood in Norway where he will pay a visit to his aged mother and other relatives and friends. It is fifteen years since Mr. Olson last saw his mother and his home coming at this time will indeed be a pleasant one. Since his departure from his old home he has visited almost every country on the Globe but his residence in this section has convinced him that this country has very few equals and that after an absence of some time he may possibly return here to make his home.

STUNG, BY A JELLYFISH

Several Locals Handed One From Smooth Magazine Sharper.

A number of the local populace have just discovered lately that they have been victims of a smooth magazine sharper who "worked" this town early in January. The "crook" who ever he is gave his name as Leo Jobe and represented himself as an agent of the Associated Magazine Co., of Denver Colorado, which company it has been found later does not exist at all. No one suspected the crook and as he made some attractive offers in magazines his to-be victims bit profusely. He is tall, slender of stature and is rather of a youthful appearance and is well capable of doing an honest man's work instead of swindling the unsuspecting public.

It is to be hoped that the miscreant is "run-down" before long and placed behind the bars to do the patient Job act to the full extent of the law.

THE CASH ROAD TAX.

May be Assessed by Vote on the Proporition.

The following section of the statute will be read with interest by town officials and others:

Road taxes to be paid in cash,—Section 1241. That all road taxes be required to be paid in cash, in any town whenever a majority of the voters voting by ballot upon the question shall so determine. Such question shall not be voted upon unless a petition signed by at least ten voting taxpayers of the town, praying for the payment in cash of all road taxes is filed with the clerk ten (10) days before such town meeting in which case the clerk shall specify in notice of such meeting that such question will be voted upon. If such question is decided in the affirmative all taxes thereafter assessed for the maintenance and repair of roads and bridges shall be paid in money and distributed as other town taxes. After an annual town meeting has voted the assessment of any road tax the board may further assess the property of the town not to exceed five mills on the dollar, on the last assessed valuation thereof, and if they so assess they shall certify the same to the auditor for extention and collection, and before same is collected they may pledge the credit of the town by issuing town orders, not exceeding tax so assessed, to the expense of road and bridge work.
